Millersburgh union had Lou J. Beauchamp in March for three lectures. Crowds attended every one. A collection of about ninety-three dollars testified, in a small measure, the appreciation of the people to this man whose thrilling words touched all hearts; he did great good, and the Millersburgh union cordially commends him to every union that needs strengthening for the warfare waged for "God and Home and Native Land."

Crab Orchard union is in the good work, going on, and going on. Louisville held her district convention in the latter part of May; it was a good one in every way. Mrs. Sue Davis, the president, read her address, and the reports from the several unions were read, and the work was found to be encouraging. Mrs. Munnell then read a paper on the general outlook of the work. Mrs. Hagerman on unfermented wine, and Mrs. Young, work among children. One of the strongest papers read was by Dr. Sarah Dudley, "A Plea for the Children." This will be published in pamphlet form. Physical culture was discussed by Dr. Helen Cady. Mrs. Susan Warner read a paper on flower mission, Mrs. Hobbs, a paper on narcotics; Mrs. Snodgrass, our helps and needs. Mrs. Young is working finely with her four L. T. L's. Mrs. Davis has one. Seventy-two have signed the pledge in Trinity Sunday-school. The financial report was good. Much work has been done by all the unions.

Lou Beauchamp addressed the W. C. T. U. and a large audience at Walnut Street Church one evening, subject, "The Army of the Overthrown." He urged them to fight the evil with their own weapons: time, patience and plenty of money. Mrs. Ollie Hobbs was elected president, Mrs. Davis declining to serve longer. The unions have all been very active in the various lines and of all the good done "He knows."

Flower Mission Day was observed with more than its usual meaning this year, a memorial of the "Flower Missioner" who is not here, but over in that country, fair and sweet where the sun is always shining, the flowers are always blooming and there is "no more pain," for the former things have passed away. For her "how lovely it must be to be let out after being shut in so long," said one the other day. How sweet the memory of Jennie Casseday whose loving thoughts and plans will still go on carrying "something bright and something sweet" year after year into lives that are otherwise desolate and dark.

Wilmore union is made up of excellent material, twenty-eight active, nine honorary members. Dr. Mary Wood Allen delivered two lectures there this spring in the interest of social purity. Two societies were organized as a result, the White Shield, for young women and girls, the White Cross for young men and boys. The young women have adopted some fine resolutions which were sent for publication. I have only space for one.

"Resolved, We will not encourage drunkenness by associating with young men styled moderate drinkers, but will take a firm stand for God and the right, and resolve that in the future our companions shall be men who are, in every sense of the word, total abstainers."

Good for these "The-lips-that-touch-liquor-shall-never-touch-mine" Kentucky girls!

I will close this letter with Mrs. Lathrap's ringing words in her address, made at Madisonville two years ago: "Gentlemen, we are in to the finish!"

WISCONSIN.

THE YEAR'S RECORD.

The twentieth convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union was held at Eau Claire, May 23 to 26 inclusive. Notwithstanding the Columbian Exposition, inclement weather and the iron rule of housecleaning, the number of delegates fell very little below that of other years, and visitors were numerous. The Presbyterian church, in which the convention was held, has all the modern conveniences that help to make our annual gatherings so pleasant to our workers. The audience room was decorated with banners from local unions and L. T. L's, and folds of red, white and blue caught the eye, causing our hearts to beat with the fervent aspiration that we might be instruments in God's hand, which would strike some telling blows for native land. The pictured face of our beloved National president looked down upon us with calm, loving glance, and a picture of the Temperance Temple occupied an easel to the right of the platform. Fresh flowers were brought in daily, consequently, although the rain fell without, everything was bright within.

The convention was called to order by the state president, Mrs. Vie H. Campbell, of Evansville, and Mrs. Annie J. Bradbury, of Milwaukee, led in the consecration meeting. The address by the president, in the afternoon, was received with a rising vote of thanks. Her remarks were practical, touching upon the various departments and branches of our work. The corresponding secretary, in her report, stated that ten years ago there were twenty-five local unions paying dues into the state treasury. Now there are two hundred and ten, not including twenty unions that have failed to send dues this year, and several recently organized. At that time but one convention was held during the year, and but three women in the state were willing to accept the responsibility of district president. Now every district has a president, also all other officers needed, and during the past year there have been held nine district and twenty-four county conventions, with three schools of methods, and one state and two county conventions of the Loyal Temperance Legion. Ten years ago Wisconsin elected one delegate, besides the delegate at large; this year five districts are each entitled to a delegate with three others elected by the state union, not including the delegate at large. Other contrasts were noted, but space forbids lengthy details.

The treasurer's report showed that $4,533.69 had passed through her hands, and all the details of this accruing process were clearly given. The report of state organizer was unique and interesting. She spoke of her reception at places where duty called, of small towns where great interest was manifested, and of places where interest was small and apathy great, and humorously referred to the good sister, who kept the minutes of the union on scraps of paper, placing them in a pasteboard box for safe keeping, and to others who kept everything in systematic order.

The superintendent of scientific temperance instruction said that the work in the state has greatly increased during the past year. Schools in country districts and villages are giving better instruction in this direction than city schools, owing, it may be, to the fact that in country districts women vote on school matters and thus help the department by voting for school officers who are in sympathy with this line of work.

The superintendent of L. T. L. work had directed her efforts during the year toward increasing the work in the L. T. L's already organized, rather than toward organizing more Legions, although the latter has not been neglected. The department of books and reading, intended to counteract the influence of bad books by creating a love for good ones, is embraced in L. T. L. work, as is also the department of mercy. The L. T. L's are now divided into junior and senior, each with a superintendent.

The superintendent of state and county fairs reported much literature distributed on fair grounds, and read a letter from the secretary of the state agricultural society in which he spoke favorably of W. C. T. U. work at the state fair. The superintendent of White Cross and White Shield work said that teachers are interested and are doing good work in schools, and that pastors have preached on the subject by request of unions. Dr. Shaw's report of legislative work will not be given, as it has already been outlined in THE UNION SIGNAL. She thinks it very difficult to get any reform measures through legislatures composed of men, as most reformatory work is in the hands of women. The L. T. L. superintendent thought it easier to influence legislators while they are yet in short pants, and asked that work be done among Christians, so that church members will use neither liquor nor tobacco, and so will have a better influence over children.

The report of the superintendent of work among lumbermen was very favorable. Mr. R. W. Lee, Salvation Army captain for five years, now acting as our camp missionary, served most faithfully, and was treated with courtesy at every camp visited. Mrs. Upham's report was followed by a few words from him, and we were glad to hear that the saloon men in the outlying towns complain that their business is not as good this spring, owing, they say, to the W. C. T. U. and their missionary. The financial secretary of the W. C. T. U. Home at Eau Claire gave a good report of the work accomplished. More than one hundred girls have found help and comfort there, and ninety per cent are saved to honorable and helpful lives.

The report of state evangelist showed much work done; that of superintendent of parlor meetings of many successful gatherings held throughout the state; of franchise that public sentiment is growing in favor of equal suffrage, while the jail and almshouse report told of work done in the state prison, house of correction, county jails and industrial school. The work of the Sunday-school department has been, largely, in obtaining signers to the triple pledge and in introducing temperance lesson leaflets into Sunday-schools. Other superintendents spoke of their departments; of the great need of securing space in newspapers, as they are the means by which all classes are reached; of the importance and benefit of Sabbath keeping and the earnest work that must yet be done in that direction; of the flowers that had brightened many sick rooms, and of the bouquets, with Scripture card attached, reaching with their silent but potent influence the inmates of jails and prison.

A part of Wednesday afternoon was devoted to the work of the Y Branch. Their secretary spoke in an interesting and practical manner, then introduced Mrs. Carwin, Y secretary of the ninth district, who read a thought-arousing paper on school savings bank; this was followed by a helpful talk on physical culture with illustrations, by Mrs. Alexander, of Superior. Mrs. F. H. Rastall, Chicago, then spoke in the interest of the literature department. The election of officers resulted in the reëlection of the president, Mrs. Vie H. Campbell, Evansville, and a capable corps of officers and superintendents. A memorial service was conducted for those who "passed on" during the year. Mrs. Benjamin, Portland, Michigan, was expected to be with us through the week, but owing to the serious illness of her husband, was obliged to cancel the engagement. A telegram expressing the sympathy of the convention was sent her. Mrs. F. H. Rastall, Chicago, lectured Tuesday evening; subject, "The New Laundry," which was suitable, interesting and new.

Miss Ida Clothier, Colorado, lectured on Y evening; subject, "The Sublimity of Living." As I listened I wished all the young women I knew were there to hear. The collection taken this evening was larger than either of the others, and showed an interest in Y work which was very encouraging. Mrs. Caroline B. Buell, of Chicago, National corresponding secretary of the W. C. T. U., gave a convincing address the last evening, to a crowded house.

A question-box was conducted by the state president and one on parliamentary law by the National corresponding secretary. A letter to the convention from our former beloved state president, Mrs. Amy Kellogg Morse, now of St. Louis, was read. The Bible readings, prayers and hymns were more than ordinarily helpful. The writer was more than ever impressed with the strong foundation, the impregnable fortress, the "present help," the members of the W. C. T. U. have found in the time devoted to Scripture reading, remarks and prayers. The Model Union was interesting as well as instructive. The convention decided to retain the present district boundaries for the coming year. The music was an excellent feature. Lunches were served by the various churches and were enjoyed.

Resolutions were adopted in favor of the English language in all schools; against the action of dealers who offer prizes for collections of cigarette cards and tobacco tags and selling liquored candies and sugared tobacco; against gambling on fair grounds and in fashionable games; against the location of a saloon at our national Soldiers' Home (as is now the case); against Sunday opening of the World's Fair and in favor of woman suffrage, and thanks were given to all who had contributed in any manner to the success of the convention.

MISSOURI MOVEMENTS.

"Then let us hope 'tis not in vain;
Though moistened by our grief the soil,
The harvest brings us joy for pain,
The rest repays the weary toil;
For they shall reap, who sow in tears,
Rich gladness through eternal years."

The South Side Y of St. Louis is one of the beneficial results of Miss Ida Clothier's visit to this city. Organized with sixteen members, it has in two months more than doubled its membership. The plan of sending written invitations, with a leaflet inclosed, to the young ladies in this portion of the city, has been successfully adopted. Leaflet No. 109, "Why Should a Christian Girl Sign the Total Abstinence Pledge?" is the one most used, and no doubt will bring many more workers into the field. Let other Y's in the state do likewise. Nor has this union been idle in other ways; public meetings have been held, and many superintendents are earnestly endeavoring to push the work in their departments.

Y work is progressing admirably under the able leadership of Miss Carrie L. Carter. Jefferson City has a newly organized Y of fifteen members. At Trenton a Y of seven members was organized in May, and has now a membership of over twenty. Warrensburg Y gave a "lavender reception," that was quite a social triumph. Decorations were lilacs. A musical program was rendered, and refreshments served. Six new members were secured. The "wise" of Kirkwood sent four dozen eggs, several scrap books, pictures and toys to the Children's Hospital of St. Louis at Easter. This Y holds a social meeting each month, and has gained many new members at these social gatherings. They have sent in a full World's Petition, and are working in many departments. Kirkwood enjoyed a lecture from one of our National organizers, Mrs. Helen L. Bullock. Through her efforts the Methodist and Baptist ministers became honorary members. The collection taken was over thirty dollars. Hon. George W. Bain also recently lectured in this city in his stirring manner, and much good was done.

Dexter union "holds the fort" with its old-time vigor. They held a very enjoyable social, and were delighted with a characteristic lecture by our own able state president, Mrs. Clara Hoffman. The L. T. L's are doing good work in many places in the state. Mrs. Alice Miller, of Buffalo, has a very successful L. T. L. and treats the children each week to an entertaining blackboard lesson. Verily "a little child shall lead them."

At Wheeling the unions are energetically at work. They have held picnics, temperance mass-meetings and social meetings, four silver medal contests and one gold one have been held. The World's and other petitions have been circulated and money pledged for state and district work. Self-denial week was kept with sacrifices worthy of imitation, some doing without butter, eggs, coffee, meat, etc. Humansville has circulated a petition which was signed by almost all of its citizens asking a man who proposed building a distillery near this place to stay away. An immense mass-meeting was held and the good people came out en masse and showed their colors for sobriety.

Kidder held their county meeting not long since with marked results. Excellent papers pertaining to our work were read and reports showed progress and much work accomplished. A medal contest was held and Mrs. Alice Williams, of Cameron, gave one of her convincing lectures on social purity. Work throughout the state is very encouraging, particularly in the increased interest manifested in the Demorest medal contest work. District and county conventions are being held and many lecturers are being arranged for. Rev. Anna Shaw will be in the state in June, and our own beloved president will be with us during part of the month of May, all of June and a part of July. Mrs. T. J. Ellis, of New Jersey, will come for a month's work to us as soon as dates can be arranged. Captain Van Etten, of South Dakota, has been doing telling work in the northern part of the state.

Miss Carrie L. Carter and Miss Lillian Wood are both in the field lecturing with magnificent results, and Mrs. Sue De Haven is educating the public with her chalk talks, and thus the good work will ever go on and on. Three famous g's are essential to any reform: godliness, grit and greenbacks, and we hope Missouri has her share of each.

INDIANA NOTES.

Indiana has a new anti-liquor league, non-partisan in character and composed, no doubt, of many honest men and women who are sincere in their opposition to the liquor traffic. This league, it is to be hoped, will be an educator, that it may teach its membership the futility of such a movement. Further than this your correspondent inscribes its epitaph: "The King of France with five thousand men marched up the hill and back again."

Indiana W. C. T. U. will hold their next state convention at Vincennes in October. Mrs. Addie N. Fields, state organizer and vice-president, has gone to her new home at Paducah, Kentucky, where her husband has received a call to a pastorate in the Cumberland Presbyterian church of that place. The good wishes of every Indiana white-ribboner follow Mrs. Fields. Our loss will be Kentucky's gain.

Prof. F. T. McWhirter, Indiana's chairman of Prohibition party forces, backed by his executive and central committees, is planning a vigorous educational campaign for the state. Dr. Aaron Worth is to be continually in the field, and an effort is being made to have a grand rally in each county on the fourth of July. Eighteen schools of methods have been planned for the spring and summer campaign of the Indiana W. C. T. U. These will be attended by the president, treasurer, and business manager of The Organizer publishing company and state superintendents, as they live in the vicinity of the schools. The expenses of the schools are to be paid by one dollar contributions from the local unions and collections taken at the public meetings.

All through our state, college prohibition clubs have been organized among the students. North Manchester College, Purdue University, Wabash College, De Pauw University, Indiana State Normal, Union Christian College, State University, Butler University and Earlham College. These clubs hold monthly meetings. The national prohibition party platform will be the subject of discussion. Each club will hold an oratorical contest and send their prize contestants to a state contest to be held at Indianapolis early in June. A students' Prohibition lecture bureau has been organized, and Mr. E. W. Clarke, of Butler University, is its efficient secretary. All hail this reinforcement to the army of the home.

Mrs. Helen Sherfey, the efficient superintendent of work among miners, is looking after the work of her department. She has placed the plans of the National superintendent, Mrs. D. W. English, before the women of our state, all of which are practical. As the mining counties of Indiana comprise comparatively small territory, the work can be concentrated with force. If the presidents of Clay, Vigo, Vermilion, Fountain, Park, Owen, Greene, Ripley, Warrick, Knox, Perry and Vanderburg will give Mrs. Sherfey the required county superintendent, who will secure for her the necessary statistics, and get the work down to the required basis, then Mrs. Sherfey will have her work well in hand. The cause of the Indiana coal miner lies near the heart of the writer, who will note with deep interest every effort in his behalf.

Mrs. Louise M. Thompson, state evangelist, has arranged to give three months to field work. What an uplift of soul would be the result if county unions would arrange for a Bible institute to be held by Mrs. Thompson. Mrs. Trish is doing excellent work as state missionary. A W. C. T. U. mission fund for Indiana should engage our thoughts and efforts.

Miss Lola Moss, of the Center Point Y, who has been a teacher in the Indian school at Sacaton, Arizona, for the last three years, writes of temperance work in that territory. She speaks of the open gambling and drinking of the territorial towns. She speaks of the loyal W. C. T. U. as established in the principal towns, and especially of the flourishing one at Tucson. The United States Indian agent at Sacaton, Mr. Crouse, is a temperance man, and in perfect sympathy with temperance efforts, and with the efforts of the one resident missionary, the Rev. Cook, a Presbyterian minister. Mr. Cook has worked there twenty years, raised his family there, and there has buried his wife. He has ten churches and preaches in the Indian camps. He wields a strong influence because he teaches the Indians in their own language.

The state press superintendent of Indiana feels much encouraged to see in The Organizer that the majority of reports to that paper are signed press superintendent. This is as it should be, only let there be more reports along this line.

"They cannot come back to us but we can go to them," is the thought of comfort when we bid the last earthly farewell to our loved ones as they pass on before. Our promoted friends are as follows: Rhoda Banks, vice-president, Oakland City W. C. T. U.; S. Ella Pierce, daughter of Sarah D. Roberts of the Westfield union; also the kind husband of Naomi Barker of the same union; Martha Eicholtz of the North Manchester union; John Lillibridge, husband of Julia Lillibridge of the Fairmount union.

"At the sounding of the trumpet
When the saints are gathered home,
We will greet each other by the crystal sea,
With the friends and all the loved o[illegible]
There awaiting us to come,
What a gathering of the faithful that will be."

So many questions have come to me with regard to terms upon which students will be admitted to the Hadley Industrial School, and as the questions have come from a number of states in the Union, I shall be glad to give several decisions of the board of trustees upon this point. 1. At present the required age for admission is ten years and over. 2. The length of time a student may remain in the school is six years. 3. The extreme limit to stay in the institution will be to the age of twenty-four years. 4. A testimony regarding life and character of applicants will be required, which must show that the applicant is not incorrigible but possesses good moral character and standing. 5. All students admitted to the school must be recommended by the W. C. T. U. of the community or the one nearest where the applicant resides. 6. The organization, church, or individual sending the student is expected to clothe her. 7. When a student has attained the standard required by the institution in any department a diploma shall be issued to the student by the officers of the institution. The corner-stone laying has been delayed on account of storms. Miss Hadley and Mrs. Candles are in the field soliciting funds for the school. One hundred dollars have been lately given to name a window for Caroline Edgerton's mother, and another $100 to name a window for Dr. Mary F. Thomas. One of the board of trustees will attend the schools of methods and present the plans and necessities of the school.

MASSACHUSETTS.

PURITY WORK AND MANY HAPPENINGS.

When the Massachusetts W. C. T. U. first took in hand the protection of the girls of the Commonwealth, our statute books were disgraced by a law which made the "age of consent" ten years. The first organized campaign succeeded in raising it to thirteen; the second secured the addition of another year, but at the third effort, which occurred at the session of the next legislature, the petitioners were given "leave to withdraw." In each of these petitions, for the three years, the petitioners had asked that the age be made eighteen; the final result secured was that, instead of ten, it became fourteen.

For several years it was thought best to drop the matter, lest, "by our continual coming," we weary the legislators and cause them to treat with indifference what they might, otherwise, be inclined to consider favorably. Last fall, however, it seemed that the time had come to strike another blow for the girls in our homes, that they might be, at least, as well protected as the game in our forests and the fish in our streams. It was felt that we should move with extreme caution in the matter, and a meeting was called at state headquarters for all who were interested in the matter to advise together concerning the best manner of prosecuting the work. Several, not identified with the W. C. T. U., both men and women, responded to the call, prominent among them being Mr. A. H. Overman, of Springfield, who proved himself a true knight in the cause of oppressed womanhood, giving time, money and a most inspiring enthusiasm to the work; Rev. John A. Bevington, of the Andover House, College Settlement; Rev. Jesse H. Jones, of North Abington, several ladies from the College Settlement, of which Miss Cheever is the head, and others too numerous to mention. A committee was appointed at the first meeting, with our state superintendent of purity, Mrs. Frances C. Carrington, as chairman, the members consisting of Messrs. Overman, Jones and Bevington, together with Dr. Julia Morton Plummer and Mrs. Stevenson.

This committee met once a week for four successive weeks, notwithstanding the fact that one member came more than one hundred miles each time. A plan was evolved, whereby each member of the legislature should be personally interviewed with reference to the matter of the new bill, which simply proposed to substitute eighteen for fourteen. Each union was sent a personal letter, asking that the representatives and senators, who were mentioned by name, should be seen as soon as possible; or, if a personal interview could not be compassed, that they should be written to at once. Influential friends all over the state were asked to bring pressure to bear upon their representatives, and very many of them acceded to the request. As a result, the legislature was flooded with letters upon this subject, and personal interviews became the order of the day. The bill was referred to the joint judiciary committee, which consisted entirely of lawyers, most of them very young. At the first hearing, which occurred early in March, the speakers were Mrs. Carrington, Drs. Plummer and Hastings, Rev. Philip Moxom and Rev. Mr. Gibbs, with Mrs. Fessenden to conduct the hearing. The committee seemed at first inclined to consider the subject somewhat lightly, but soon changed its attitude, and several of the members assured Mrs. Fessenden at the close that they would give the matter their most careful thought. At the second hearing, which occurred March 16, the speakers were Mr. Overman, Mr. Jones, Mr. Mellen, of Worcester, and Rev. Mr. Burr. Our hearts were gladdened two weeks later as we read in the morning papers that the bill, although amended by the substitution of sixteen for eighteen, had, nevertheless, as amended, passed in the house without a dissenting vote. It was by the merest accident, as it seemed, that we discovered just before the matter was to be discussed in the senate that it was not our bill at all, but the merest travesty upon it. It had been divided and in the clause where the word sixteen occurred, there was another clause inserted "of previous chaste life and conversation," which destroyed entirely the purpose of the petition and threw the entire burden of proof upon the girl herself; giving currency also to that damnable idea that a girl who has once fallen is, therefore, the legitimate prey to all bad men.

Prompt measures were at once taken to prevent the further passage of the bill. A letter was printed in the leading daily papers, and copies sent to each member of the senate. In this letter the action of the house was denounced, and the senate asked to either amend or vote down the bill. The senate returned it to the house, which, after vigorous discussion passed it as before. At present writing it is still before the senate judiciary committee. The Massachusetts W. C. T. U. has learned many lessons in its former legislative struggles, but perhaps none was ever more painful than this.

Mrs. M. E. Cheney, who has long been known as one of the main-stays of the Massachusetts work, and who has served the Boston union as secretary, in addition to her state duties, since the resignation of Mrs. Rice, has felt forced at last to give up the latter position, much to the regret of her co-laborers. Most appreciative resolutions were presented to the union on the occasion of her decision being made known, and were unanimously passed by a rising vote. Mrs. A. H. Perkins was elected to the vacant position.

Mrs. Fessenden has been having an unusually busy month, if that can be true of a woman whose every month is crowded full. She has attended the conventions of Dakes and Nantucket, Essex, Norfolk, Franklin, Worcester South, Hampden and Hampshire counties; and is still to go to those of Berkshire, Barnstable, Plymouth and Worcester North. In addition she has revivified several weak unions and made many addresses with view to organization. Wilbraham will probably soon be organized, and there are at least a dozen other places which are only waiting for favoring breezes to waft the W. C. T. U. ship into port. Since my last letter there have been organized ten new unions, seven of them being Y's. The Somerset Y has also made an entrance into the seminaries at Ashburnham and Northfield. A Somerset Y column has been started in Our Message which is designed as a means of communication between the various schools where our work is already established. It is expected that, early in the coming autumn, Boston University, Smith College, the New England Conservatory of Music, and the two branches of the Y. W. C. A. will also be visited by the sweet influences of the Somerset Y. Mrs. Gleason is to make a trip into Worcester North county early in June, and it is hoped that at least one new union may be the result.

Massachusetts has stood absolutely immovable during all the commotion with reference to the Temple. It would take a far stronger breeze from the adversary to "give to the winds" our faith in that great enterprise and its inspired promoter. We believe in the Temple. We believe in the business sagacity of our state president, who is one of its trustees, and we believe in Matilda B. Carse.

We intend to stand by that creed, and redouble our zeal and our efforts in behalf of "our House Beautiful!"

The work throughout the state has sustained a great loss in the death of our beloved sister, Mrs. Amelia C. Thorp. She was a devoted white-ribboner, a woman of unusual gifts, and one who used her talents, both of money and of ability, in the cause of God and humanity. It was through her tender thoughtfulness a few years ago that Miss Willard's "Den" was refurnished and beautified; and it was through her wise foresight that the plan for permanent state headquarters in Massachusetts took upon itself the proportion it holds to-day in our thought of the work. She was always foremost in all the aggressive lines of our work when once convinced of their rightness. I am sure it is a picture that will long remain in the minds of our women who were at the last annual convention, and saw the enthusiasm with which Mrs. Thorp pressed her newly accepted views with reference to third party prohibition. That convention and a gift of fifty dollars for our Sabbath services, was the last work she did in the state. She was elected a delegate to Denver and fully expected to go until within a day of starting; then she found herself unable to stand the trip. In January she went to Santa Barbara, whence she wrote delightful letters, in the last one of which she said, "I cannot imagine a more beautiful place to die in." The next news that came to us was of her death.

"Love's light illumines the pathway you trod, Comrade of yesterday, now saint of God."

We shall sorely miss, and yet, "we follow that way." "The best of all is, God is with us;" with us to inspire and cheer; and with the strong assurance that there is ultimate victory for the white-ribbon hosts; that, whether we see the glory of the morning from the heights of the other shore, or whether we are in the thickest of the fray when it dawns, we shall still have a part in hastening the day when the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord. "Even so, Lord Jesus, come quickly."

THE DEATH OF DR. SATTERLEE.

Never has my pen had so heavy a task. The death of Rev. William W. Satterlee, D. D., brings a keen sense of the loss to all good causes, but more especially the temperance work. Nearly twenty-six years ago, as a young man, he came to this state and from that time until the day of his death he was found continually at his post, doing with all his might the work set before him. A man of strong convictions he had the courage of those convictions and never hesitated to denounce most unsparingly any and all evil, yet as was recently remarked, "He could say the plainest and most unwelcome truths with the sweetest spirit," so that while the shafts of truth were sent straight home, no bitterness ever rankled. While he had not had a pastorate for several years, being engaged in educational and temperance work, he had to the last a deep and active interest in the means used for the personal salvation of souls. At camp-meetings and in all revival work he was remarkably efficient. Red Rock campground of this state has lost one on whose efforts many a camp-meeting has depended almost entirely, and they who gather there this year will be like those bereft indeed. For the past six years Dr. Satterlee had occupied the chair of professor of political economy and scientific temperance in Grant University, Tennessee.

But it was as reformer and temperance worker he was best known. Emphatically the leader of the prohibition forces in this state, he was also known nationally, and his name had been more than once mentioned for standard-bearer of the party. At the time of his death he was secretary of the state central committee, a position requiring constant work. The W. C. T. U. had in him a whole-hearted supporter, one of the last places of his appearing being at a social held by the Lucy Hayes union of this city, where he gave a brief address, though even then in poor health. Yet little did they think who listened to him that in less than two weeks he should be laid away to rest. His last illness was short and not generally known, so that the report of his death fell like a blow upon many and the cry of scores of hearts was, "How can we go on?" and it seemed to our mortal vision that it was untimely and a mistake.

The funeral was very largely attended, many floral tributes being sent by sad hearts but loving hands. The pastors of the Methodist churches in the city attended in a body, as did also the members of the state central prohibition committee. Many members of the W. C. T. U. were there and many who, belonging to no special organization and to other denominations, came to pay a last tribute to the memory of the dead. Fitting words were spoken by his brother ministers and co-workers, and the precious dust was carried out to our beautiful Lakewood, to rest beside Lake Calhoun's blue waters until the "resurrection morn." May God, who alone has the power, comfort the heart of Mrs. Satterlee.

HENNEPIN COUNTY CONVENTION.

The eighth annual convention of Hennepin county union was held in the Open Door Congregational church of this city, the Helping Hand union being the entertainer. The county president, Mrs. Frances Neal, was present throughout, and her address was full of thought and of excellent suggestions. The two evenings of the convention were occupied by addresses, that of Tuesday evening being given by Rev. R. R. Atchison, of this city. Mr. Atchison made a suggestion to the convention that a county lecture bureau be organized on the same plan as the National lecture bureau. Thus good speakers could be secured at any time, and with a supply of these, the temperance work could be more systematically and effectively brought before the public than at present. The convention appointed a committee to take steps towards the formation of such a bureau, and we shall watch with interest to see what they do. On Wednesday evening Rev. J. F. Stout, brother-in-law of our round-the-world missionary, Dr. Kate Bushnell, made an able presentation of facts. "Would that every voter in Minnesota had heard it," writes one who did hear it. The county recommended that the ninth district accept the challenge of the third district to a trial for the greatest number of new subscribers (pro rata) to our state paper before state convention, and a committee was appointed to bring the matter up at the district convention. We are all very proud of our White-Ribboner, and by friendly contest are anxious to aid in making it not only self-supporting but a power in the state. Among the resolutions of the convention was one pledging our sympathy and coöperation to Mrs. Carse in the Temple work, and the resolution found practical backing when the convention voted to raise one hundred dollars to place the name of the county union on a tablet. Mrs. Neal earnestly hopes this sum may be all raised by the time of the state convention, nor does it seem improbable.

NOTES.

The central union of this city and the W. C. T. U. of the state mourn the death of Mrs. A. B. Turley. The suffrage work has lost a valiant leader. Together with Mrs. Julia B. Nelson she had worked all winter to secure the passage of the suffrage bill.

The Lucy Hayes union of this city recently celebrated its tenth birthday by a social at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. M. Lawrence. Of course the members were expected to bring birthday gifts, and these were small envelopes containing pennies to the number of the years of the giver's age. Thus the treasury was replenished. A program of entertainment was given, consisting of singing and recitations.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

THE Ashtabula county, Ohio, W. C. T. U. convention met in Andover, May 16 and 17. Mrs. Will J. McConnel was unanimously elected president.

A WORKER who "fell in harness" was Mrs. P. K. Sinton, of Colorado Springs, Col., who died May 28, after only an hour's illness. Loved by all who knew her, she was a practical philanthropist and temperance worker and interested in all reform movements.

SINCE the publication of the nutshell recommending the new process for canning fruit without heat, we have learned that the drugs recommended, while not poisonous, are considered unwholesome by many physicians and we no longer advise white-ribboners to try the process without the recommendation of a reliable druggist.

AT Woodland, Yolo county, Cal., The Home Alliance, a weekly newspaper in the interests of temperance, is published by the county W. C. T. U. It has a farmers' column and will doubtless be productive of much good. This is the only temperance paper published in the United States by a county W. C. T. U. These active workers have bought a lot upon which they are planning to build a temperance temple.

ANOTHER of the faithful workers of Colorado has passed into the beyond—Mrs. T. M. Wallace of Boulder, who died May 16. A leading spirit in the work of that state, she bore the burden upon her heart like Paul, "Woe is me if I preach not temperance and prohibition. The Y. W. C. T. U. of Boulder, of which she was president, will greatly miss her leadership.

"Good thoughts where her footsteps pressed,
Like fairy blossoms grew."

THE state Loyal Temperance Legion of Pennsylvania holds its annual convention in Philipsburg, June 21 and 22. The Wisconsin State Legion rallies its forces at Ashland, July 11 and 12. At both there are large classes to graduate from the L. T. L. course of study. Who can estimate the importance of these additions to our ranks of trained temperance workers? The good friends at Ashland are planning to give the convention an excursion on their beautiful bay, and out to historic Madaline Island, the site of Father Marquette's old church. Both conventions convene in time to appoint special delegates to the Youths' Congress in Chicago.

WORK AMONG FOREIGNERS.

To the State Superintendents:

DEAR SISTERS:—In the long continued sickness and subsequent death of our beloved daughter, my work was necessarily hindered much. I had intended writing each state superintendent a personal letter, as I usually do each year, and sent for my list in February to do so, but I found this impracticable if I gave the care to my dear invalid that I wanted to do. It therefore rests with you, dear sisters, to aid by a little extra effort my deficiencies that the work may not suffer. May I ask you in this hour of sorrow to "bear the burden" with me and help me that our work may grow and advance? Since the beginning of the year in October the following new publications have been made:

"The dangers to the American Sabbath," four pages, German.

"Is it right to use alcohol at the Lord's table?" German. [By Mary Allen West.]

"Unfermented Wine." Swedish, Norwegian and Danish.

A new selection of Archbishop Ireland's "Need of Prohibitory Law." German and English.

New edition of "Price of a Home." German.

"Buy Your Own Cherries." German. Illustrated

Now under way: Selections from Archbishop Ireland's addresses in Spanish.

Please send me a short report by the first of September, for publication in annual minutes. Not more than two pages of commercial note written on one side only. I know this seems a very short space for report of a year's state work, but it is all that can be given us in annual minutes and it is better for you to condense than for me to be obliged to cut it down.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL NOTES.

Mrs. Leeds, of Philadelphia, gave an interesting talk to the nurses and inmates in the hospital, Sunday, June 4.

Mrs. Kline, president of the board of the National Temperance Hospital, and Mrs. Thatcher, represented the hospital at the Congress of Charities, which has been in session this past week.

Will friends sending donations to the hospital please prepay charges? This is asked because sometimes packages come on which the charges amount to more than the value of the contents. Especially is this true with those containing old papers and flowers. The latter are oftentimes wilted when they reach the hospital and must be thrown away. The amount paid for charges could be expended for a plant which would be more lasting and often better for the patient.

Miss Smith gave a series of lectures on physical culture to the nurses at the hospital. These lectures were much enjoyed by the young ladies and the lessons learned will be of profit to them. At the last meeting of the board a vote of thanks was returned to the Y's under whose auspices Miss Smith came to us.

THE WOMAN'S LECTURE BUREAU.

During the World's Fair the Woman's Lecture Bureau has its headquarters in the organization room of the Woman's Building.

We will be pleased to meet patrons, lecturers and visitors, and talk over the work of the coming season.

We trust that great good will result from our summer's work and we wish to urge upon all who sympathize with the work of the Bureau that every effort possible be made to put this department of work on the footing it deserves. This can only be done through the effective coöperation of the local county and state unions.

We have a few dates at our disposal of the popular Swedish lecturer, Miss Cecile Gohl, subject: Home life in Sweden (in costume) and the famous Smith sisters concert sextette. Mrs. Laura Ormiston Chant and Mrs. Fenwick Miller, of England, will fill a few engagements.

The following lecturers are under our management, and we call your attention to the splendid list of workers:

Frances E. Willard, on her return home.

Lady Henry Somerset, while visiting this country.

Rev. Anna H. Shaw.* Pennsylvania and Ohio early fall.

Mary T. Lathrap.* New York after August 8.

YEAR BOOK OF THE YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATIONS OF NORTH AMERICA, 1893. Richard C. Morse, general secretary of the international committee of Young Men's Christian Associations, 40 E. 23d St., New York City.

WOMEN AS PREACHERS AND ELDERS; SHALL THEY EXERCISE THESE FUNCTIONS? Negative, Rev. B. G. Mitchell, Ph. D., affirmative, Hon. H. H. Buquo. Published by the Cumberland Presbyterian Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn.

LOVE THROUGH ALL, "a voice from a sick-room," being a collection of thoughts in verse, with appropriate Scripture texts, arranged for daily use and covering thirty-one days. Being written by one who was herself confined to her room by illness, they cannot fail to express the common needs and feelings of those who are baptized alike by pain.

The Endeavor Herald Pub. Co., 20 Bay St., Toronto.

REPORT OF THE BOSTON NORTH-END MISSION, 201 North Street. In the summary of the work for the year 1892 report is made of sixty homeless children cared for; one hundred and ninety-two women received at the refuge home, each one given a complete outfit of clothing and provided with a place to earn a living; ninety to one hundred needy fed and clothed all the time; eight hundred religious services held; four hundred and fifty-two signers to the temperance pledge, beside the one thousand and one "incidental" deeds of mercy that will never be catalogued save in the heavenly records.

EGYPT IN HISTORY AND PROPHECY, or PHARAOH PROCLAIMING GOD, by Robert Patterson. This is one of forty pamphlets issued by "The Anti-Infidel Library" whose publisher is H. L. Hastings of the Scriptural Tract Repository, 47 Cornhill, Boston, Mass. This good servant of the Lord, seeing how the arch enemy of holiness has laid his hands upon the printing press and is using it as one of his agencies for the down-pulling of God's kingdom on the earth, has set up a business upon all departments of which is inscribed, "Holiness Unto the Lord," and from this center is sending out tons of literature to spread the truth of the Lord.

THE FRUIT OF THE VINE UNFERMENTED OR FERMENTED—WHICH? by John Ellis, M. D. An able discourse on a subject that in spite of the years of argument it has seen is not yet threadbare, since there are still preachers of the gospel who defend the use of that which even when simply tasted at the Lord's table has again and again proved an overcoming temptation to those who were weak. The pamphlet also contains a review of articles written by divines in defense of the use of fermented wine, and a terse discussion on "Fermented Wine, Beer and Alcohol as remedies—are they Useful or Injurious?"

National Temperance Publication House, 58 Reade St., New York City.

AMATEUR PHOTOGRAPHY, a practical guide for the beginner, by W. I. Lincoln Adams, editor of The Photographic Times. A treatise for the amateur by one whose experience of, and immediate contact with the wants of those who are using the camera in and out of doors, especially fit him to prepare a hand-book that will both serve as a guide to the ordinary work, and will introduce the reader to new fields of interest. The table of contents is as follows: 1. Apparatus. 2. In the field. 3. In the dark room. 4. Printing and toning. 5. Portraiture. 6. Instantaneous photography. 7. Flash-light photography. 8. Orthochromatic or color-sensitive photography. 9. Composite photography. 10. The "fathers" of photography. Appendix.

The Baker & Taylor Co., 740 & 742 Broadway, New York City.

The fifth annual report of the WESLEYAN METHODIST WEST LONDON MISSION, with an introduction by Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, who is the superintendent. Associated with him are Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, Rev. T. Morcom Taylor, Rev. A. J. Sherwell, and Rev. W. H. Tindall; under the order of "Sisters of the People," are Mrs. Price Hughes, Sister Superior, Sister Lily and Sister Katharine. This great mission is in a center which Mr. Hughes terms "the microcosm of English society." The mission has many departments and its "machinery" may be likened to that of a great engine, with its parts each perfect in itself and all fitted to work in harmony; the result, power. It has its church, coffee houses, work for police and soldiers, crêche, lodging-house guild, medical department, children's mission, open air work, and many other live branches.

The Sunday Closers Have It.

It has been decreed that six days open Fair is enough to give everyone a chance to see its wonders—That depends—Those who use will be through their work early and can spend half their time there, if they desire. Others who try to save a dime—but lose dollars—in buying inferior, cheap five-cent soaps will not be through their work by Saturday night, and so couldn't visit The Fair Sunday anyway. Use "American Family" and get there—It is Pure—It is Time-Labor-Clothes-saving.

Kirk's American Family Soap

47,000,000 Pounds Sold in 1892.

No soap will cleanse your hands so quickly of grease and grime as KIRK'S DUSKY DIAMOND TAR SOAP.

TRUE TEMPERANCE REFORM

Must be preceded by true medical preparation of the physical system. While the so-called "Gold Cures" have had their day and accomplished, withal, much good, there has been steadily growing an improved, more rational system of

Absolute Cure for the Liquor Habit

This is accomplished by strictly regular physicians who treat each patient individually, with non-poisonous, vegetable, and non-accumulative medicines. The surroundings are the most elevating and refined. The parent institution is the largest and most perfectly equipped of any devoted to this treatment in the world.

An entirely distinct and equally efficacious treatment is applied to the cure of OPIUM, MORPHINE, AND COCAINE HABITS. Over a thousand successful cures! Private treatment; no restraint. Correspondence confidential.

WHAT MEANS THIS STONE?

A most beautiful booklet with cover having these words entwined with delicately tinted apple-blossoms, has just been issued.

The illustrations of the poem written by Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap on the laying of the corner-stone of the Temple were designed in Germany and lend an added beauty to the words, bringing out more vividly the prophetic vision expressed in the lines,

"We give thee to thy mission sweet,
With lavish wealth of love complete;
Nor count the sum.
Who knows but on the altar place
May shine the glory of His face
When Jesus comes!"

Visitors will find it very desirable to take home as a souvenir of the Temple. Mailed to any address, nicely boxed, for 60c.

GROWTH OF THE USE OF THE SOUND DISCS FOR DEAFNESS.

No Question Raised or Doubts Entertained In Medical Circles as to Their Efficiency.

In a number of Medical Journals there have recently appeared several interesting articles, as to the value and practicability of the Sound Discs invented by H. A. Wales who has an office at 605 Ashland Block, Chicago. From data collected from men who may be looked upon each as an expert in the treatment of diseases of ear it is learned that the Sound Discs are applicable only to cases of partial deafness, and do not in any way take the place of an ear trumpet, but that in those cases where the hearing is but partially defective they have been very successfully used. As there can be no harmful effects from their use, they are considered an important addition to the medical profession. Aurists have been the first to feel the beneficial results of this invention, and in view of such facts they consider it a part of wisdom to say nothing to discourage their use, as to do so would ultimately be a great impediment to the progress already made towards the relief of this most obstinate affliction. The public themselves are most profoundly interested in the progress and success that has already followed the use of this simple invention.

HALF RATES TO CLEVELAND VIA B. AND O. R. R.

For the benefit of those desiring to attend the International Conference of Epworth League at Cleveland, O., June 29th to July 2d, the Baltimore and Ohio R. R. will sell tickets at low rate of one fare for the round trip. Tickets will be on sale at B. & O. offices west of Pittsburg and Bellaire, and at ticket offices of principal railroads of the West June 28 and 29, and will be valid for return journey until July 3 inclusive. The round trip rate from Chicago will be $10. Pullman sleeping car accommodations may be reserved and all desired information may be secured upon application to L. S. Allen, Assistant General Passenger Agent, Grand Central Station, Chicago.

GOOD FOR THE WORLD'S FAIR.

An arrangement was perfected to-day by the representatives of the Pennsylvania, Big Four, C. H. & D. and Monon Routes providing for cheap excursions to Chicago and the World's Fair from Cincinnati, Dayton, O., Louisville and other points. These excursions will be run alternately from the territory mentioned every Friday night, and at greatly reduced rates. Round trip rate from Cincinnati, $7.00; from Dayton, $7.00 and from Louisville, $7.00. This arrangement is hailed with delight by the press of Chicago, the World's Fair officials, and will be the means of satisfying the popular demand for such excursions from the thickly populated territory mentioned.

Chicago, June 8, 1893.

A WORD TO MOTHERS.

KINDERGARTEN at the CAMP.

TEMPERANCE HEADQUARTERS AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

Place the children in the care of trained Kindergarten teachers, and, while the parents are enjoying the World's Fair, the children will be well cared for physically and mentally. One little fellow, son of L. E. Hoffman, Cleveland, Ohio, said: "I am tired of the World's Fair, but I wish I could stay in the Camp all summer." To be a pupil in a delightful child school will make the Camp very attractive to children—the little fingers and minds busy with their studies, tiny gifts, songs and marches—for wherever there is a Kindergarten there must be music.

A Crêche has been established. In this DAY NURSERY small children and babes will be cared for at the low price of twenty-five cents per day, leaving the parents free to enjoy the World's Fair, knowing their children are being attended by experienced and faithful nurses. These nurses will also have the physical care of the Kindergarten children. To secure the Kindergarten advantages and assist to make this department self-sustaining, we desire advance notice of your views regarding it. Secure special circular by sending postal to Miss A. P. Stockdale, Supt. of Woman's Dept., World's Fair Temperance Encampment Ass'n, 57th St. and Indiana Ave., Chicago, Ill. (At the Camp.)

After testing the merits of the World's Fair Temperance Encampment for more than two weeks, I cheerfully commend it to all who desire to visit the World's Fair. The opportunity for leaving small children in good keeping is to be specially recommended, while the opportunity of entirely avoiding the rush of travel on the trains is of great importance.

FROM THE WORLD'S FAIR TO WASHINGTON AND THE EAST.

Do you contemplate going to the World's Fair? Of course you do—every one does. But you will not end your journey with a visit to the Fair. You will want to go back to the old home in New York, Ohio, or Pennsylvania. You will, perhaps, want incidentally, to go to Washington, call on the President to inquire after the "plum" crop, in fact, make a swing around the whole circle, take in Cincinnati, Pittsburg, Wheeling, Washington, Baltimore, and New York. That would make a splendid trip if taken over the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. Over no other railroad route in all the east, can there be found more delightful and varied scenery than over the famous B. & O. It is the only direct route from Chicago to Washington. Leaving Chicago on the finest and fastest trains in the world, vestibuled from end to end, lighted by the famous Pintsch gas, protected by Pullman's anti-telescoping device, and a perfect block system, you are rapidly whirled over a splendid road-bed and down through the grand old states of Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania and Virginia, away up among the mountain fastnesses of the Alleghanies; past hundreds of historic battlefields and places of note. You cannot conceive of a grander trip on all the American continent. If you contemplate visiting the old home in the East, you should not fail to travel by way of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. For information as to rates, time of trains, sleeping car accommodations, etc., apply to L. S. Allen, Asst. Gen. Passenger Agent, "Rookery," Chicago, Ill.

CALIFORNIA.

The fame of the climate of California draws to that charming state new friends every year, particularly from sections where long, severe winters, followed by trying spring seasons, work such disastrous results among the weak and debilitated.

The great improvements in passenger train service, higher degrees of comfort in the cars, and shorter time required on the trip, combined with the cheapness of the excursion tickets now being sold to California and back by the Santa Fé Route make the journey agreeable and, one can almost say, economical. The many delightful resorts now established in California afford every comfort and luxury desired by the fastidious, and present unique attractions.

The Hotel del Coronado at San Diego the Raymond at Pasadena, the Redondo at Redondo Beach and the hotels at Santa Barbara, Monterey, Riverside, Los Angeles and many other points, have grown as famous as any on the Atlantic Coast—and a fact that should not be forgotten is that they are resorts all the year around, although the greatest number of people from the East are in California between the months of November and May.

Write to John J. Byrne, Asst. Passenger Traffic Manager, 723 Monadnock Block, Chicago, Ill., if you are interested in California, and he will send you some reading matter.

Signal Notes.

BLACK BEAUTY has been translated into Hindustani.

A PRISON chaplain says very tersely, "Crime is simply condensed alcohol."

THE tobacco vice is almost entirely absent among the Brahmo Somaj of India.

REV. THOMAS EVANS has begun a temperance work among the Tea-garden coolies in India.

ALMOST as much was spent for ostrich plumes in the United States last year as for foreign missions.

THE Catholics are to have a summer school at Plattsburg, N. Y., after the plan of the Chautauqua assembly.

THERE are four thousand clergymen out of employment in the church of England, according to Canon Farrar.

THE recent legislature of Ohio has passed a bill making hazing a misdemeanor punishable by quite a large fine as well as by imprisonment.

"HALF an hour in the presence of God sitting silent and receptive is often more fruitful for the promotion of public justice than a whole day of ceaseless activity."

THE Catholic Total Abstinence Archdiocesan Union of Philadelphia lately requested the publishers of Catholic papers to refuse liquor advertisements in their columns.

BOMBAY, India, has the unique honor of having the first Indian lady lawyer in the person of Miss Cornelia Sorabjee, who has taken her law course in London and Oxford.

THE London Female Preventive and Reformatory Institution has done a grand work in rescuing women and girls, taking them from the streets, parks, prisons, etc. In the Preventive Homes the girls are trained for domestic service.

IN Washington, D. C., a company of gentlemen counted the young men in the ten largest prayer-meetings. They found one hundred and sixty-eight. They then went to the ten largest saloons and found three hundred and sixty-five young men. They then went to ten theatres and counted eight hundred and fifteen.

THE eight cases of the American Bible Society's exhibit at the World's Fair contain, among other interesting things, a copy of the original King James edition of 1611, also a fac simile of the first chapter of the first Bible ever printed, the famous Mazarin of 1450. The good Book will be seen in nearly three hundred dialects.

THE Kyrle Society had its origin in London in 1877, and has among its active members prominent philanthropists, among them Miss Octavia Hill. The object is to decorate and beautify homes of the poor working people, to organize musical societies and to secure open air spaces in and around the cities. Great enthusiasm is manifested in the work.

THAT the liquor dealers recognize the truth "in union is strength" can be learned from the following extract, taken from a letter which was recently sent to every distiller and wholesale dealer in the country. . . . "We can successfully defend our rights only by concentration and community of interest. A united phalanx carries an influence and weight that scattered forces can never hope to attain."

SOME idea of the extent and petty distinctions of caste in India can be obtained from a few figures like the following from the last census: Over one thousand three hundred divisions of caste are named, while over seven thousand are not specified; five hundred and twenty-one kinds of Brahmins. A single division of the merchant class has four hundred and eleven subdivisions, while the outcast numbers hundreds of classes.

A PLACARD has been ordered by the Belgium government to be hung in every school-room. It reads as follows: "Of one hundred and twenty-five thousand deaths, as many as twenty-five thousand, or one-fifth, are the result of alcoholism. In a period, during which the population has increased by fourteen per cent, the consumption of alcohol has been augmented by thirty-seven per cent, cases of madness by forty-five per cent, crimes by seventy-four per cent, suicides by eighty per cent, and vagrants and beggars by one hundred and fifty-six per cent.

is essential to purity of foods. It is wisdom and economy to select those that are pure. The Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk is prepared with the greatest care, and infants are assured the best. Grocers and Druggists.

Desiring to give the admirers of Ivory Soap an opportunity to contribute to its literature, the manufacturers offered prizes for the best twelve verses suitable for use as advertisements. 27,388 contributions were received. To the following was awarded the NINTH PRIZE.

With sunburnt face and sturdy arm,
Along the field the mower moves.
The dry sweet grass falls thick and fast,
Each stroke strong robust vigor proves.
With steady beams the noonday sun
Pours down; the mower seeks the shade,
Sits down to rest, and wipes his brow,
And turns his sickle's dulling blade.
And then to cleanse his dusty face,
To soothe his sunburnt hands, he brings
The bucket from the deep cool well,
Whose water comes from mountain springs.
And as the wheel turns round and round
And slowly winds the chain and rope,
He blesses water, blesses home,
And blesses good, clean Ivory Soap.

A WORD TO THE WISE.
CERTAIN ADVERTISEMENTS FROM TRADE RIVALS,
who fear the phenomenal success of
Van Houten's Cocoa
in America, contain innuendoes against it, and appeal to the authority of
Dr. SYDNEY RINGER, Professor of Medicine at University College, London. Author of the Standard "Handbook of Therapeutics."
This eminent physician ACTUALLY writes as follows:—
"From the careful analyses of Professor ATTFIELD and others, I am satisfied that Messrs. VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA is in no way injurious to health, and that it is decidedly more nutritious than other Cocoas.—It is certainly "Pure" and highly digestible.
The quotations in certain advertisements from my book on Therapeutics are quite misleading and cannot possibly apply to VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA."
The false reflection on VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA is thus effectually repelled and the very authority cited to injure it, has thereby been prompted to give it a very handsome testimonial.

The scarcity of available money has caused a depression of trade in the Eastern and Middle states, while reports from the West are good.

The Columbian Liberty Bell, composed entirely of metal of historic and special interest donated by thousands of persons, was cast at Troy, N. Y., June 22.

A serious riot with Moslems occurred at Rangoon, Burma, June 25, the British magistrate having forbidden the sacrifice of a cow near the Hindu temple.

A disaster occurred on the Manhattan railroad last week by which many visitors to the race tracks at Sheepshead bay were killed and about one hundred seriously injured.

After ten months' imprisonment and a trial lasting many weeks, Miss Lizzie Borden, of Fall River, Mass., accused of the murder of her parents, was honorably acquitted.

Mr. Gladstone has announced changes in the financial clauses of the home rule bill, giving certain arrangement of taxes which would be revised and altered at the close of six years.

Over four hundred officers and seamen sank beneath the Mediterranean waves last Friday afternoon, in the greatest marine disaster of this decade, the scuttling and almost immediate sinking of the English flagship Victoria, Commander Tryon, from an accidental collision with the Camperdown, another vessel of the same fleet.

WHEN the course of responsive reading was planned at the beginning of the year, it was intended that the reading for July, on "W. C. T. U. Exhibit at the World's Fair," should serve as a guide-book to that portion of the Exposition of most interest to "our folks." But the inevitable delay in getting exhibits in place made it impossible to obtain satisfactory material for the reading by the first of June, and hence a delay in its issue is unavoidable. We feel sure its readers would prefer to wait a little for the sake of completeness, and we expect to have it in their hands by the first week in July, at the latest.

MR. E. TENNYSON SMITH, of New Zealand, an eloquent temperance worker, known in his country as "The Second Gough," is not able to visit the United States this summer, as he expected, but hopes to meet his engagements here later on. We extend a cordial welcome to our brother.

MISS ACKERMANN'S permanent address while in America is care THE UNION SIGNAL, The Temple, Chicago. She is just leaving the Pacific coast and will pass through Chicago soon on her way to Rest Island. Ye editors are anticipating a rich treat from the visit of this world's missionary traveler.

HUNDREDS of guests in the Woman's Dormitory are extending thanks to Mrs. Carse and her coadjutors for furnishing at such a low price a comfortable place of entertainment during the World's Fair. While there are seven hundred women already in the building, we understand there is "room for more."

AMONG the many announcements for religious gatherings during the summer season is that of the Young Women's Christian Association Summer Bible and Training School, to meet at Lake Geneva, Wis., July 5–18. A rich program is prepared, including Bible Study, conferences on college, city, state and missionary work, athletics, voice culture and platform addresses for the evening services.

IT would materially assist the editors if suggestions were sent THE UNION SIGNAL for the Annual Fair Number, to be issued this year August 10. Let fifty to a hundred words be sent from those who have made a practical test of the best methods of inoculating the people on Fair grounds with temperance principles. These autumn rural gatherings should be made a great school of methods for the workers, a means of grace to the masses, and an opportunity to the unions for increase in members and exchequer. Let the suggestions be pointed and in our hands by July 25.

THE supreme lodge of Ancient Order of United Workmen which held an important session in Toronto, Ontario, last week, decided, by a vote of three hundred and seventy-two to seventy-two, to expel all members engaged in the retail liquor business after August 1. We delight in this, but cannot quite see the consistency in the act of the same body which voted in the wholesale liquor dealers. Do not these "United Workmen" know that the wholesale liquor dealers own and control nine-tenths of the saloons of this country and that the so-called "retail dealer" is only a paid agent of the brewer, distiller and wholesale dealer?

THE "progress" of Lady Henry Somerset from the headquarters of the B. W. T. A., at Memorial Hall, Farringdon street, London, June 10, in her carriage banked with flowers, to the platform in Hyde Park—the scene of the great celebration of the Direct Veto Bill,—which she reached five hours later, was one long ovation throughout, and the cheers of the people were so hearty that many times she rose and bowed on either side to the great throng of those who felt that the sacred cause of Home Protection had broken down the barriers once separating those of her rank from the "rank and file" of such a throng as that. Many who witnessed the procession, declare that this flower-decked carriage was the central point from first to last; wherever it appeared the crowd circled around it with unfailing enthusiasm. The tribute was the expression of universal good-will toward the British Women's Temperance Association, which Lady Henry has piloted through perils, without and within, until its present status is confessedly more encouraging than at any earlier period in its history.

IT is becoming more and more apparent that the question of Sunday opening of the World's Fair is settling itself, by the prevalence of covered and closed exhibits and the consequent small attendance. The much cared for "working classes" are keen to realize, even if they desire to attend Sunday, that an advantage is being taken of them by charging full entrance fee for less than half a show. The five Sundays that the gates have been opened have been comparative failures as to attendance. Instead of returning the largest gate registers of the week, as predicted, they have returned the smallest, in one instance scarcely meeting the running expenses for the day. We would recommend the Chicago Record to all our readers desiring an honest presentation of this question. It publishes no Sunday edition, and every Monday morning gives an accurate statement of the number and names of closed exhibits on the previous day. In its issue of June 26 it states that only one building, that of the Fine Arts, was entirely open to sight-seers, and that one thousand and fifty exhibits in the various buildings were completely covered or closed. Such an object-lesson cannot be ignored.

BAY VIEW, MICH., continues a favorite rallying point for the white-ribbon army, and is national in all its characteristics. There we have the finest summer headquarters in this country, and every year many of our conspicuous members, far and near, go to Bay View. Mrs. Caroline B. Buell, National corresponding secretary, personally conducts the School of Methods and is to give a series of lectures. It is just a little early to announce the list of speakers, but a strong one is certain. Mrs. Josephine R. Nichols, president of the Indiana union, will give the anniversary address, and plans to stay several days. Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, president of the Michigan union, Mrs. Lillian Hollister of Detroit and Mrs. Faxon of West Bay City and others will be present to participate; also Miss Pugh, the National treasurer. The dates are July 19-30 Our members who would like to know more about Bay View and its widely known assembly and Summer University, should send to Mr. J. M. Hall, Bay View, Mich., for the June University Review. It gives all the programs, courses, expenses, etc.; is beautifully illustrated and will interest you. Those contemplating a visit to the World's Fair will find it pleasant to extend their trip to Bay View by lake steamers or quick trains.

VISITORS to the Kansas state building at the World's Fair see a picture there that surprises if not startles them. It is entitled "American Woman and Her Political Peers." Representing American womanhood, from the center of a group of five, looks the serene, strong, spiritual face of Frances E. Willard. Her "peers"—those whom the wisdom of men has banished from the privilege of the ballot-box—are: a savage Indian bedecked with the trophies of the chase; a lunatic with the glare of madness in his eyes and his garments torn by his own violence; a hard-featured man, on whose face is written rebellion against all law, clad in the striped garb of a convict; and to complete the circle, the last pictured countenance is that of an idiot, one of God's creatures who, by the extinguishment of the divine light of intellect, has become a sad caricature of Him in whose image man was made. The theme of the picture is one of the most potent of the day; its presentation could not be more realistic. One shudders to see the leader of the white-ribbon hosts in such a classification, but since for truth's sake she does not refuse to be so placed, it cannot be denied that the picture will drive home to many minds the force of a fact otherwise unheeded or repelled. The proprietor of this unique painting as well as the photographs of the same, is Mrs. Henrietta Briggs-Wall, of Hutchinson, Kan., and the artist and photographer are from the me place, the latter being a woman

THAT LIBERTY BELL.

BY C. B. BROWN.

It is said that the Liberty Bell is cracked and cannot be rung; the last is a mistake—it is ringing yet.—FOURTH OF JULY ADDRESS BY REV. H. M. GLIDDON.

I hear it, I hear it, that Liberty Bell,
It comes on my ear like the resonant swell
Of the anthem of ocean, and bears the refrain
Of the freedom the nations are striving to gain.

I hear it, I hear it, that Liberty Bell,
O'er hills and o'er valleys its melodies swell;
It jubilant rings at righteousness won,
But sadly it moans when evil is done.

It rang out its joy at our own nation's birth,
It welcomes the wealth of the crowns of the earth;
But its tones are all muffled in sorrow and shame,
At the brand that it sees in alcohol's name,
With the nation as partner, our sons to destroy,
It sees all the income that leads as decoy.

Hear the joy in its tones at the beauty revealed
If the Fair on our Sunday its glory concealed;
Its melody chimes at the riches displayed,
But mourns at the trust of the nation betrayed!

Ring on, then, ring on, O Liberty Bell,
The ages are waiting thy story to tell
Along with the story of manger and plain,
Each waiting the other to join the refrain;
Then ring out the joy of the glory to be,
When broken each fetter, each captive set free.

BARBARA'S FOURTH.

BY MRS. O. W. SCOTT.

The celebration was to be in Packer's Center that year and the outlying villages—Packerville, East Packerville and Sandown, with the farming community all around, were expected to show their patriotism by gathering there.

Great yellow posters had been sent out on all the roads, and where no bill-boards were to be found they were pasted on roadside barns and rocks. At the head of the program was an eagle, "real enough to scare chickens," as Joe Ellis said. Joe had begged a poster of the boy, and brought it home when he came to dinner one day, the latter part of June.

"I can read that without my specs," said Farmer Ellis. "It takes the Center folks to spread printer's ink."

"Oh, won't it be splendid! I hope I can go!" exclaimed Joe's sister, Barbara, thrusting her sunny head over his shoulder.

"You'll go fast enough," replied Joe. "Fred Billings has just been getting him a gray suit. It's just a match for your new blue dress."

"Joe, don't be so foolish! Barby can go to a celebration without Fred, I should hope. We can all go in the two-seated carriage, and take dinner at your Uncle John's." Mrs. Ellis had an almost fierce determination to shield her young daughter from the approach of possible suitors.

"Barby's only eighteen, and I want her to have more schoolin' and maybe be a teacher. If she don't go about and see something while she's young she never will," she said to her husband when they were alone.

"No, I s'pose she never will. Women isn't apt to be great travelers after they get married," he had replied, musingly, as though the subject had never occurred to him before.

Mrs. Ellis sighed. She saw that he did not grasp the situation, and that what was done to rescue Barbara from the monotonous life she herself had lived, must be through her own efforts.

Meanwhile Barbara had no idea of going to the celebration in the two-seated carriage, and dining at Uncle John's. Nor did she care to go with Fred Billings. As she sat at the open window sewing on her new blue dress, other fancies filled her mind. A mass of bushes just outside was full of roses. She hoped some of them would delay their blossoming until the Fourth—the delicate pink would be so lovely with her dress. She hoped the day would be pleasant, and she hoped—Ah! there wasn't lace enough after all!

"Mother, I shall have to go to the village for more lace. I lack about five inches. Too bad, isn't it?"

Mrs. Ellis slowly rose from her rocking-chair, as a tired woman does, and came to look at the pretty waist with its lace bretelles.

"Yes, you'll need an eighth of a yard at least. That will do if he gives good measure. That new clerk don't scrimp as Worthington does."

And then Mrs. Ellis counted out a little change, the last of her precious "egg money," and gave it to Barbara. A few minutes later the young girl was speeding toward the village, a half mile distant.

Fred Billings was "cocking the hay," in a field near the road as she passed his father's farm, and waved his straw hat to her. The fragrance of red clover filled the air; and bees and butterflies darted hither and thither, dipping into the piled up blossoms for their fill of sweetness. It was a pretty scene, and sometimes Barbara would have paused for a moment for a drink from the cold spring under the maples, and a chat beside the fence, but now she kept the farther side of the road.

Pierce, the "new clerk," was behind the counter, swinga palm-leaf fan to and fro when she finally reached the store. He sprang forward to wait upon her, and before the bit of lace was fairly measured off he had invited Barbara to accompany him to the celebration. And she —flattered and embarrassed by the attention of the polite stranger—had agreed to do so if her parents were willing. This was the hope Barbara had held in her mind.

On the way home her well-trained conscience said: "But, Barbara, do you want to go with a stranger—one you have known so short a time?" And the "other voice" replied: "But he comes to church and sings in the choir. He is so very nice looking too! I'm sure he's all right."

There was a little contest with her father and mother, and another with Fred, in both of which she won the day; and then she had nothing to do but prepare for the glorious Fourth. This was duly ushered in with the banging of a rusty old cannon—a relic of "war times"—the ringing of church bells, and a crowd of small boys with Independence Day voices and "piles of fire-crackers."

It was an old custom in Packerville for the young people to go on excursions and to merry-makings in company. Mr. Pierce had objected to this, but Barbara, with a desire "to see and be seen," persisted with a little pout that they must "start with the rest."

So it came to pass that among the carriages drawn up before the post-office was one of unusual elegance, in which sat Barbara and her escort. She knew very well that everything — even herself, in the pretty blue dress with pink roses at the belt—was in perfect keeping. Mr. Pierce was inclined to be critical. "These fellows don't know how to show their patriotism," said he. "They seem to think that 'father's old horse' decked out with a few green leaves is all sufficient." His own hired horse wore tiny flags upon its head stall, while the whip bore streamers of red, white and blue.

Fred Billings and his sister drove up at that moment, and as Barbara saw the steady, white horse with nodding plumes of maple leaves, she laughed outright. Mr. Pierce leaned forward with a careless nod. "Who leads this caravan anyway?" he inquired.

"After our company gets together, we just start, that's all," said Fred, coldly.

"Well, I don't calculate to take anybody's dust, so here goes!" and with a touch of the whip his horse sprang to the front and then away on the road toward Packer's Centre.

The genuine country dweller no sooner sees a stranger "putting on airs" than he withdraws within himself. Fred, not being particularly happy, said, with considerable emphasis, "Let him lead if he wants to; he'll probably leave the road behind him," and the little company agreed, then and there, to have nothing more to do with the recreant clerk. It was hard to shut out Barbara—one of themselves—but there was a mingling of jealousy and resentment just then, which made it seem but simple justice.

As for Barbara herself, she was not conscious of her banishment. She would soon discover Lydia Billings in the crowd—Lydia was a tall, erect figure, not to be mistaken—and then all would be well. But the procession, with its fire companies, its various societies, its "state ladies" and brass bands had passed, and the oration was over before she caught a glimpse of a home face. Then she saw Lydia, but Lydia seemed not to notice the waving handkerchief which signaled her from the church steps. A young fellow, with cigar held aside, came forward just then, with a "Hullo, Teddy Pierce! how are you?" and the next moment a girl in pink was introduced to Barbara, and the two young men were exchanging greetings. The Sandown male quartette was singing patriotic songs, and Barbara and the girl in pink listened and joined in the applause, but their escorts were not there to call for "more."

Barbara did not like the girl whose acquaintance was so suddenly thrust upon her, and a sense of weariness began to mingle with that of enjoyment. "So much cigar smoke makes me sick," she said at length, resting her head against the granite doorway.

"O I don't mind it. If you lived in the city you'd soon get used to it; I don't mind smoking cigarettes myself, once in awhile," remarked the girl in pink with a careless laugh.

Poor little Barbara! she shrank farther into the friendly shelter of the church door, wondering if this was a specimen of the company to be found in the enchanted circle to which she imagined her escort belonged.

The public exercises were now, over and the "noted men" left their temporary pavilion. The violinist put his violin in its green bag, and the pianist drew on her gloves. The crowd drifted away from that section, and the red balloon man, the peanut man and the man with toy whips followed, revealing once more the green grass, so carefully kept by the Packer's Center people. It was now bestrewn with paper bags, peanut shells and banana skins well trodden in. It was really pitiful, but on the Fourth of July patriotic Americans soar far above the personal rights of property owners! The ragged edges of the crowd began to show themselves, and several half intoxicated men drifted past to Barbara's unspeakable terror. The girl in pink only laughed and made jeering remarks to the men themselves.

But even an hour of misery comes to an end, and when the church spire threw its long shadow across the little park, showing that the afternoon was almost gone, the two missing young men returned.

Barbara, unmindful of her companion's volley of words, exclaimed: "Please, please Mr. Pierce, won't you take me home?"

In her innocence she could not understand the change in her polite and affiable escort, which very soon manifested itself. It was not until they had left the scene of the celebration behind them that she caught the odor of his beer laden breath. Poor Barbara! She sat in mute terror as he held the reins aloft crying, "Hi! hi!" while the horse fairly flew over the ground.

"Do, do be careful! I'm afraid to ride so fast!" plead Barbara. "And we are almost to the railroad. Won't you listen for the train?"

But he only laughed at her fears—he who, on the way over, had sprung to the horse's head when a freight train passed!

The passenger train was coming and Barbara heard its warning whistle as they neared "the cut." Just as they reached it the engine dashed through, the horse reared, swerved, overturned the carriage, and, clearing himself from the wreck ran wildly toward home.

It was the young people from Packerville, slowly driving homeward who finally checked the runaway. Two of the young men immediately turned back, while with anxious hearts the others waited, unwilling to awaken fear by conveying their own suspicions to the home friends.

The stars had come out when they bore Barbara back to the old farmhouse. Her pretty blue dress was torn and stained, the roses were faded and crushed, and for a time it seemed that the fair young life would never return. Very gradually it was won back, and very painfully the days and weeks of that summer wore away. Her friends say, "Barby will never be what she was before the Fourth."

As for him whose sin led to the terrible calamity, he was only stunned by his fall. Public sentiment, however, was speedily educated up to the point of demanding his removal from town, but whether reform followed is a matter of doubt.

But one thing is sure. When the anniversary of our nation's birth dawns again, other young men will "celebrate" by imbibing the poison whose sale is protected by the flag we love. Other young girls will be imperiled. Other parents will have their hearts wrung with anguish. And we can only echo Mrs. Ellis' moan: "Why should my Barby suffer so for other people's wrongs?"

THE FOURTH OF JULY.

What Does it Mean?

BY H. A. DELANO.

Let us rejoice. It is a privilege and a duty. The transcendent day is at hand—the glorious data, the anniversary of man's noblest triumph in civilization, the Fourth of July! 444 multiplied by 4 gives 1776. Who knows but this, too, is a sacred number and one to be so recorded in the new Bible which is always being made? We may not celebrate in the old way, but the people will celebrate, and there will be noise enough. Explosives, fire-works, dynamite and cracker, clang of bell and roar of gun, picnic and excursion, will help the expression of our Laus Deo.

Marvelous Fourth, this of all the fourths, for the ends of the earth are come upon us, and Parthians, Cythians, Medes, Cretes, Elamites, dwellers from Mesopotamia and strangers of Rome, Jews, proselytes, and all the tribes of earth will be here to see how we keep the feast. If they say, "What mean ye by these things?" what shall be the answer?

For long months now we have been celebrating, justly too, the discoverer. But a novice might think that Columbus o'ershadowed all. That Monmouth, Trenton, Lexington and Bunker Hill, are the merest incidents in our history. One listens almost in vain for other names, dates, or incidents than those associated with the finding of new land.

The "new world"—our world, soil of the pilgrim's fame, this great nation which we call our own, country of home, fireside, loyal hearts and brave, free church, free press, free school, great cities, great inventions, colossal enterprises and gigantic states—this, Columbus did not discover.

This has been made. It is the result of endeavors eclipsing all the past, defying all challenge, and towering above the very mountain heights of all precious achievement. It is coined sweat, tears which have crystallized to jewels, and blood that has enriched and glorified institutions and laws of which pagan courts and ecclesiastic never dreamed.

If the world glorifies the Spartan of old—defying the oppressive dictations of haughty tyrants, the Montenegrin, beating from his mountain home the savage Turk; the plebeian Roman dethroning and conquering cruel tribunes and emperors, vigorous Saxon, rearing himself, after French and Danish invasion, in larger and nobler freedom, then, let us glorify the saviours, the patriots, the toilers,

"Who took the gift of rugged rock,
Of wastes and forests wild,
Who toiled and battled fierce and long,
Till all was fit e'en for a child."

The Fourth of July! What shall it mean? Certainly enough to include Columbus and all his posterity in the circle of undying gratitude. But, it must mean more than death-heads, relics, fables, saints and forms, long ago useless. What does it mean? It means so much that was long ago a dream. It means all the past. "High hopes, which burned like stars sublime, upon the sky of freedom," the brave, new thought of patriots, the deeds of heroes, the thought of sages, poets and statesmen, all this. It means all the old wars and later. It means all the great battle-fields, civic or military. It means all the moral Waterloos, Sedans, Strausburgs, and "on to Richmonds" of history.

It means the hot debates, the protests of the beleaguered minorities, the famous revolutions, the relentless sieges, the millions of revenue, the impoverished homes, the tears of hearts broken, and souls desolate—all this "My country, 'tis of thee!" The song is the rich fountain into which all the streams of sacrifice have poured through the ages. It pours its melody of joy to-day above the wreck of a thousand generations. It means everything. Why not?

The sage of sages—the world's prophet and heaven's clear Word has said, "Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." Can a godless or atheistic people then, be free? Can they measure the altitude of that word? Nay, not until mind is free as well as body. Not until soul is emancipated as well as feet and hands. Not until reason is upon the throne as well as the jeweled flesh and blood.

The question of freedom goes deeper than the liberty, separation or rights of a state. It involves the rights, the liberty and the obligation, too, of the individual; the "many in one," must mean that, the one—every one, shall help make the many good and virtuous and pure and just. That is not a free state where, amid God's bounties, a child is hungry, a wife starves, a father toils half or wholly unpaid, or, human devils foster a system of licensed debauchery and crime. It is not a free country where tyranny rules the money market and poverty has no way of betterment. Not free where the most virtuous, the most safe, and the noblest half of citizens is denied the right of suffrage.

Nor is that free, where lust and mammon can bribe legislatures to damn men, and churches to keep quiet about it; where politicians will reek in nastiness in order to gain the revenue of city and state; where woman is prostituted to man's baseness but scorned from the ranks of her seducers. During thirty years of the rule of "happy, Christian England in India, over ninety thousand child widows were doomed and damned to slavery, starvation and death; yet England pressed her Bible to her heart, and said: 'By this sign we conquer.'"

No, as the years go by, life means more, manhood and womanhood more, society more, the kingdom of God more, and freedom to-day, that great cosmopolitan, democratic, unselfish word, means more. Can I tell its meaning? Only in part; so long as I am bound by prejudice, hampered by superstition, blinded by avarice or narrowed by human creed I cannot. Science, philosophy, history and its awful lessons must teach it me. It can only translate itself in time.

The patriot must be patient but severe. He must keep his heritage. He may respect the universal invitation to others, to come and enjoy his rights, but must throttle and choke to death the forces that dare, in coming, to trample upon the same. He must be true to the genius of his country. Tolerant but firm, and never mistake the bellowing of anarchy for the cry of freemen.

One great principle of righteousness accepted and incorporated in the national life is only the prelude to something higher. Not to go higher is to lose all the past. Progress or decline is the everlasting law of Almighty God.

Let us keep the feast. Keep it, as Americans should. Let us stand for the heritage of the past, and move George Washington into the light which now beams so brilliantly upon Columbus. The land which the latter discovered is sure to somebody, but the principles, the laws and lessons of a Washington are sure to nobody unless we fight for every inch of ground.

God forgive us the namby-pamby sentiment which lets go the nation's enthusiasm over the delegate from some effete government abroad and forgets to feed the nation's patriotism with the richest blood of loyal hearts. Let us remember the men of the powdered wig, of solemn thought and purpose pure, while in their name and for posterity's sake we keep the old-fashioned Fourth.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF WOMAN THROUGH THE W. C. T. U.

BY CLARA C. HOFFMAN.

[Read at the World's W. C. T. U. Congress.]

The development of the individual is and of necessity must be along the lines that may be denominated financial, physical, intellectual and spiritual; and this development will be in the order named. If there be exceptions to this order they are rare. It is doubtful if there are any.

The reason is easy to find. The poor soul who never gets beyond the rocky, ragged edge of poverty, who has but scant supply for the present hour's need, has neither time nor inclination to secure the culture necessary to take advantage of circumstances and improve conditions that must underlie the beginnings of all development whether physical, intellectual or spiritual.

There must first be a sure basis of financial competency. It may be meager, simple, homely, but it must be assured. The foundation of support thus laid, the individual, unless reckless and thoughtless (traits little known in the W. C. T. U.) will naturally begin to improve environments—food, clothing, home or room comforts. These in turn will build up the inner and outer man (or woman) and conduce most materially to physical and intellectual development. Pinching want and shivering hunger never helped to unfold either physical or mental power.

Note the children born of destitute toilers in mine or factory; or in the foul, dark tenement where ready-made clothing, at starvation prices, supplies the mammoth city firm, the children sharing toil and destitution from birth. Parents and children are little more than languidly animated human machines. Financial and physical conditions essential to intellectual development are wanting. Supply these and mind is aroused, quickened, developed. Spiritual development may not come with the betterment of the physical and mental, but it will not come before. Thus we see the order given is logical.

When the National W. C. T. U. was organized and annual dues established, the sum of fifty cents per member was considered ample on which to build the superstructure of a great society undertaking to reform the world. Twenty-five cents for the local treasury, and twenty-five cents to divide with munificent hand between county, district, state and National unions. So long had mothers, wives and daughters bounded their financial operations by twenty-five cents, generously advanced by fathers and husbands with firm but kindly injunction "to be economical," that double the sum of twenty-five cents seemed large indeed.

But women did not work long circulating petitions and remonstrances, advertising meetings, with or without speakers, gathering children for instruction in Loyal Temperance Legions, furnishing badges, mottoes, flags and banners, drilling lads and lassies for medal contests, interviewing Sunday-school superintendents, school boards and legislative cranks before they discovered that twenty-five cents per member would not serve to keep them in postage and stationery.

Then tribute was laid on every atom of ingenuity possessed by white-ribboners to raise money, and money was raised, aggregating thousands and thousands of dollars. The financial and commercial ability of women, individually, and in unions generally was rapidly and immensely developed. Just in proportion as unions learned how to make money, and made it, have they become strong and influential in communities, because they had the means to meet the demands of the work, because they were financially independent. The careful observer will not fail to note that woman's development keeps exact pace with her financial independence.

Logically in order and inevitably in sequence has come physical development to white-ribboners. They have studied the laws of life and health and heredity, as individuals and in societies, as no other guild on earth has ever done, and no other guild has sent out such numbers of workers, who year in and year out have given continuous service. If any one reckons that the work of organizing, lecturing, teaching, presiding, encouraging, inspiring, writing books and articles for papers, preparing leaflets, helps, instructions, answering bushels of letters and spending half the time in travel; if any one reckons these things can be done without immense physical resource and vitality, then he reckons from his ignorance—not his knowledge.

Glance over a National W. C. T. U. convention and hundreds of women will be seen, a majority of whom have passed their fourth decade—very many the fifth and sixth decades, and some the seventh, yet will it be seen an assembly mentally active, alert, intent; physically hale, hearty and handsome. Of course, they are good looking! downright good looking!

Nineteen years ago the Woman's Christian Temperance Union was established. It had not one page of literature, not one leaflet, tract, pamphlet or book; now it has millions of pages thrown out yearly from its own great publishing house, scattered like leaves for the healing of the nations, and all produced by the W. C. T. U. Each department (and there are over forty) has its own appropriate literature suited to that line of work. Great ability and variety of talent appear in this literature. Contrast it with the literature of any other temperance society, missionary association, reform organization or the Y. M. C. A. It is conceded that its literature is able and scientific as it is unique and interesting. The "do-everything" policy has called out every creature's best, and marvelously developed the women of the white-ribbon army.

Contrast this policy as related to woman and her development, with the policy of the church up to the last quarter of a century—even with that most wise, most humane and most Christian organization ever known in the church, the Woman's Board of Home and Foreign Missions. Multitudes of women in the church have not yet advanced to activity beyond the sewing circle, the June strawberry festival, and the December oyster supper to help out the current expenses.

The many departments of the W. C. T. U., the ceaseless energy, activity and education attendant on this department work, have developed tremendous intellectual vigor in its ranks. There are writers, artists, lecturers, editors, teachers, journalists, singers, poets, parliamentarians, politicians, and specialists. Without arrogance and without egotism, the W. C. T. U. may claim a creditable development of intellect.

Lastly, what of the spiritual? It might be set forth and with truth, that no other guild ever produced so many evangelists and Bible readers; certainly no other ever had so many earnest, systematic, intelligent Bible students.

But the power to acquire and successfully to impart the language of saints may not, indeed, does not indicate spirituality. But the power to rise above every circumstance of race, color, birth, education and environment; to acknowledge in the poor, the outcast, the ignorant, and the debased, the brotherhood of man, the sisterhood of woman in Christ; to recognize, in spite of smirch and blot, and stain, the image of Him whom we reverence and adore, this denotes spiritual life and growth. This kind of spiritual development magnifies spiritual things, but does not minify material things, because the spirit of man is unlike the machinery of the watch which may work equally well in case of gold or of meaner metal. No man ever kept his soul white, chaste and devout within a body polluted and befouled by sin and excess.

Proof of the spiritual development of the W. C. T. U. is found in the value it sets on human life, its clear, sharp recognition of the angel entombed beneath the rock of habit, heredity and environment, and its patient, determined blow upon blow on that adamantine wall to set the angel free. Every meeting held, every address given, every page written, every appeal made is for this purpose, this purpose alone. This is part and parcel of the spirit that came to seek and save that which was lost. This is true spiritual power and development. The broader the agencies employed, the wider will be the influence felt, and the higher the development attained.

Without dispute the W. C. T. U. has beyond any one agency known among the sons and daughters of men, developed woman, financially, physically, intellectually and spiritually.

COLUMBIAN CRUMBS.

BY B. V. CUSHMAN, M. D.

The Social Purity Congress aroused intensest interest, and was characterized by broad interchange of thought among students of sociology; Aaron Powell was president. The people we read about were upon the platform—Mr. and Mrs. Josiah Leeds, Jonathan Plummer, beautiful Hannah Plummer, whose face indicates a life set to the anthem, "Peace be upon thy walls," Mrs. E. B. Grannis, Mrs. Lydia A. Prescott and many others.

Archbishop Ireland made the opening address. Impurity being the most widespread and damning of evils, he declared the prime need of the hour to be, "armed, soldierly virtue." He advocated better wages for girls as a safeguard against temptation, and in an eloquent climax urged women to rise up in behalf of the unprotected of their sex. We all and always love Bishop Ireland. He is catholic indeed, in the wideness of his sympathies and affiliation with every movement and person aiming to exalt humanity. But I do not like to have any man preach to me about my duty to my own sex. When one is found able and willing to deal with the question of social purity, I think he should use his entire force in admonishing men. Why do women need protection in civilized communities? Who attacks them? In this crusade against prostitution the male prostitute is the strategic point. He is the buyer. He creates the demand and regulates the market. Condemnation should not, however, in justice, be put too heavily upon him. He is the product of present and preceding civilizations made up of the joint influence of men and women.

The man who lives chastely proves himself of better fibre than any woman ever had a chance to prove herself made of, for he does so in spite of the fact that he rests under a common suspicion, to which very little blame or shame attaches. Confidence on the one hand and condemnation on the other, does much to brace the young woman and aid her in maintaining the equipoise of chastity. This brace her brother lacks—and misses. How often do good women say, "You needn't expect men to be straight, for they are not," yet they beam the light of their friendship upon as wide a circle of men as they can attract. It is time for the chivalry of woman to rise and give her brother the moral support of confidence—or censure if it is merited. What must it be to know that people take it for granted that one is guilty, secretly, of base indulgences? How long would womanhood resist the subtle, undermining influence of general suspicion? My beloved readers, forget every other word I have ever written in order to remember this: Expect men to be good! I doubt if any one effort for social purity would yield so much.

The hope of all this agitation is that it may result in knowledge gained by reverent and unprejudiced study of the constitution and instincts of healthy men and women. Then will come a public sentiment that shall recognize and respect the innate modesty of the boy as of the girl—they are alike delicate—cherishing and guarding his monogamic instincts. Then men will learn that sexual self-control is the mark of the highest degree of vigor and virility. Let the truth be widely known and accepted and there will be no more room for the brothel than for the maiden towers of the Orient. Building public sentiment is tedious work but it finally forms the one impregnable bulwark.

B. O. Flower contributed an interesting paper treating of

SOME CAUSES OF PRESENT DAY IMMORALITY.

This eminent writer is "profoundly convinced that the supreme menace of nineteenth century civilization lies in the word impurity." The problem of developing and maintaining the sturdy morality that alone triumphs over sensualism is of inestimable moment, "for on it hangs the fate of home, nation and civilization." Three chief sources of impurity he characterizes as

I. Hereditary and pre-natal influences, and unfortunate early environment.

II. Implied inferiority of women.

III. Artificiality of life and departure from the noble simplicity of nature.

The subject of proper generation must be faced frankly and bravely—its object to exalt humanity by quickening the divine in man. It "is a subject for education rather than legislation. Probably not ten persons in a hundred who have a chance to steal are restrained by thought of law. They have been educated to think that stealing is wrong. That is enough."

In his opinion it is "idle to dream of a race higher in development than the present, until woman is accorded perfect justice."

Of all things tending to artificiality of life "intoxicants and opium occupy the most conspicuous place, and most strongly operate to enthrone the animal passions and stupefy the moral sensibilities."

In closing Mr. Flower recommends a three-fold crusade: For a childhood, the fruit of intelligence and love; for "the right of woman in the marriage relation to be as independent as out of it, for the right of franchise, and that noble justice resting on the golden rule; for a less sensuous and extravagant life," with a determined warfare on all things which artificially stimulate passion and lower the moral ideal, "chief among which are intoxicants and opium." "Progress along these lines means development of the highest and purest in manhood, the enthronement of that which alone holds the essence of perpetuity, and which is the true soul of civilization."

Mrs. Josiah Leeds,—of whom a painter sitting by me whispered as she left the platform: "I would like her face for a model of St. Cecilia,"—urged all her hearers to be home missionaries by trying to influence the boy nearest, and cited several cases where in traveling, or upon the streets she had persuaded boys to give up unclean books and papers.

Mrs. Charles Henrotin, who by her amiability and practicability is endearing herself to a rapidly widening circle of friends, waived her address of welcome and occupied the time with some points she had gained when connected with the Woman's Protective Agency in this city. When they began to visit the courts where women were being tried, they did so under fire of bitter censure, but they persevered in the interests of justice, after seeing the wrongs crying for redress. They found that whatever the charge against the woman, when the time for trial came, the first act of the prosecution was to attack her chastity. That broken down, she was supposed to be guilty of any or everything else. Under their influence this was changed, and it is now possible for a woman to be tried for the charge upon which she is arrested, but Mrs. Henrotin thinks justice will not be assured until two judges, a man and a woman, sit upon the bench.

HILLSBORO CRUSADE SKETCHES.

VIII.

BY ELIZA J. THOMPSON.

After the all-day services of the band in front of the Palace drug store on that memorable Saturday, the hospitable and refreshing luncheon at the home of our friends, Hon. and Mrs. John A. Smith, the eloquent address of Rev. A. C. Hurst in the evening at Music Hall, and a restful Sunday and spiritual upbuilding, the Monday morning meeting, January 26, opened with new interest, and messages of fresh victories were received from many points.

Reports also came of the cruel and unmanly treatment the New Vienna women were receiving at the hands of Van Pelt, the notorious saloonist. Words of earnest sympathy were sent them from our association, and our hearts were full of gratitude that we were spared such indignities, and yet, the stubborn resistance of some with whom we had been pleading so prayerfully, was, we thought, harder to bear than a shower of sour beer, and threats of violence! But God, who alone can "temper the winds to the shorn lamb," knew that the fathers, husbands, brothers of Hillsboro could not have ruled their spirits as did the quiet representatives of William Penn at New Vienna, leaving the combat with "God and the women."

Calls from the towns and hamlets of our own and adjoining counties came almost daily for help in their work and willing hearts were always ready to respond. Indeed the enthusiasm was so high that our liverymen caught the infection, many times furnishing carriages, horses and drivers for these rural missionary excursions.

About this time, January 28, news came of Springfield, Ohio, falling into line. Mother Stewart, that grand, earnest woman, whom the "boys in blue," with their tears of gratitude, had christened "mother," for many years had toiled for "God and humanity" in the temperance field gaining cases under the Adair law and pleading for poor, oppressed women and children, who, because of the curse in the cup, were cold and starving; she now laid hold of the "spiritual lever," presented in the new method, although it was not thought a work adapted to cities. But of her success and her many fields of labor, on this and on the other side of the sea, let her own book, "Memories of the Crusade," tell more at length than a local sketch permits.

The early prayer-meeting on the morning of the 26th was led by Rev. S. D. Clayton; many interesting incidents of the work in Wilmington and other places were related by him, who was always an inspiration to our association. There being no other business of importance after the devotional hour, the ladies in private session determined to spend the day in visitations upon the few remaining places that were selling liquors without restraint.

While the band was engaged in the usual services in front of the unrelenting druggist's, a man from the country, a farmer, strolled along the street, and when the voice of song arrested his attention, he stopped, and leaned against the wall of a building adjoining, the one before which the ladies were grouped; when the song so familiar to his ears (for he had heard it in his boyhood home) died away and the women kneeled he removed his hat, folded his arms and reverently listened. When they arose from prayer and again commenced a low, sweet hymn he rushed across the street, and meeting an old friend, grasped his hand, saying: "I have taken my last drink! I never felt before what a wrong the cursed habit was to poor women."

That friend, a most reliable Christian gentleman, told me the incident several years since, and added; "That man had been a tippler from his youth, and for years past rarely came to town and left sober,—but since that day he has been a total abstainer;" he is now over eighty, a kind, good man; his wife and family are happy, and he never fails to bless the "Praying Band." Thus, while this "Whirlwind of the Lord"—was "to the Jews a stumbling block and to the Greeks foolishness," it was to many "the power of God and the wisdom of God."

Many such incidents could be related, to offset the ridicule heaped upon the self-sacrificing women of those trying days; but God will "avenge his own elect, who cry unto him day and night, though He bear long" with their oppressors!

On Saturday morning, Jan. 31, after the usual devotional services in the Presbyterian church, the members of the association having been notified not to have singing and prayer at the door, or on the steps and pavement in front of Mr. Dunn's drug store, there was some discussion as to the best course of action. It was finally decided that the ladies should go out as usual visiting other places first. A committee of three was then appointed to request permission from the mayor to have a tent erected in the street in front of Mr. Dunn's store, outside the curbing. This committee was Mesdames Col. Trimble, John A. Smith, Wm. Scott. A committee of gentlemen was then appointed to erect the said tent. The committee was Messrs. Jacob Sayler, F. Shepherd, J. S. Black, Allen Cooper, Pangburn, Roe, Duffey.

Permission having been obtained, the committee proceeded to erect the tabernacle—and later in the day, the band having completed other work, took possession and remained during the afternoon, for devotional services. Mrs. D. K. Fenner, our secretary (and she was a dignified Episcopalian) records in her minutes: "Few that were present will ever forget that scene, or, the feelings of holy courage and faith that animated each heart." The adjourned meeting of the association was held in the M. E. Church on that Saturday evening, Rev. T. S. Cowden presiding. Many letters were read, of the growing interest of this rapidly spreading work, also incidents of thrilling interest reported. On motion a committee was appointed which should draft a plan whereby temperance organizations should be established throughout the county of Highland.

Mr. Dunn now determined to call the law to his aid, securing the services of the lawyer who had antagonized the Washington Courthouse ladies in the "Charlie Beck" case. Judge Safford, whose term on the bench had nearly expired, and whose sympathies were far from being with the temperance women (or men), was appealed to by Wm. H. H. Dunn and his lawyer for a temporary injunction; it was granted and the notice served upon the chairman of the tabernacle committee, Mr. Jacob Sayler. In the dead hour of the night the structure was taken down by our law-abiding brethren of the committee and when Sunday dawned not a trace of the tent remained.

But what did the God of Jacob say to the women who were trusting in Him? Even as He had through the Spirit's guidance shown in the 146th Psalm to them in the beginning of their mission, so now, words of reassurance came to the heart through the first chapter of Nahum, beginning with the seventh verse: "The Lord is good, a stronghold in the day of trouble, and He knoweth them that trust in Him. But with an over-running flood He will make an utter end of the place thereof, and darkness shall pursue His enemies." The entire chapter was applied with great comfort and strong faith, even to the last verse: "Keep thy solemn feasts, perform thy vows."

On the Monday morning following, February 2, by previous appointment, the association met in the Presbyterian church for devotional services. A mass-meeting for the following Saturday was determined upon, invitations to be sent to our friends throughout the county, and a special one, with our heartfelt congratulations, to the faithful sisters of New Vienna, and Rev. D. Hill of the Friends' church, was invited to speak at the hall in the afternoon, with a request that he should bring Van Pelt with him, if it was really true (as we had heard) that he had not only given up the "evil of his doings," but had taken upon himself allegiance to the cause of temperance and humanity. But so grievous had been his persecutions of the temperance women that as with the disciples of old, Saul "was feared," until he proved that "the scales had fallen from his eyes."

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Women as Politicians.

WOMEN'S LIBERAL FEDERATION.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Nowhere on the face of the earth have women organized with so much strength, skill and devotion to forward beneficent political movements as in the mother country. Seventy-five thousand of them are banded in the Woman's Liberal Federation for the purpose of advancing the interest of that great party which has for many years been "casting up the highway" of emancipation by which England shall pass over into the promised land of liberty, equality, fraternity. Mrs. Gladstone has been from the first president of this organization, and as an educator for women it has no rival in the island; for successes and failures, too, are teaching the women that only when great causes are incarnated in politics and parties, do they command the public mind and crystallize into those better laws that bring a section of the "organized millennium" equally to each and all.

No one (save duly elected delegates from the local societies and accredited representatives of the press) is allowed to be present at the annual meetings of the Woman's Liberal Federation, the last one occurring May 30 to June 1, 1893. Fortunately for me I was chosen a delegate by the women of Newport, Wales, and though under orders not to speak, I could hardly do less than move the resolution, entrusted to me by them, condemning the placing of any further restrictions on the work of women until the opinion of the women themselves has been ascertained in each case. Physically it was an ordeal to be present as a spectator in meetings of such momentous interest, but it was the chance of a lifetime. I had prepared for it by several weeks of quiet living in the country, and hope soon to recuperate from the fatigue, while the memory will remain with me an unfailing fount of inspiration.

The council had over 600 delegates and met in a handsome town hall, of which London has many, according to the subdivisions of the great metropolis. There were no mottoes, flags or banners; there was no singing or prayer; the meeting was modeled strictly on the pattern furnished by men. To some of us, who believe in the great educational power of what may be called the æsthetic side of a movement, it would seem to be an improvement if there were more in the outward form that appealed to the imagination, and engraved upon the heart great battle cries condensing argument and conviction in the form of an epigram. The rallying songs of a moral campaign are also an important part of its splendid propaganda; as an American woman I am glad that the recognition of the Divine Power as the only true source of wisdom and love is universal in our political conventions. I have observed that this recognition is omitted here by temperance people in all their gatherings, so far as I know, except in those that we should call "mass-meetings." Of course the British Women's Temperance Association is an exception to this rule. The omission, which can but be regretted, arises, not from lack of devotional feeling on the part of our temperance comrades here, but probably from the fact that there is a State Church with printed prayers, and to these the Nonconformists, who make up the body of temperance workers, naturally object, while the people of the State Church object as strongly to the Nonconformist methods of devotion. Hence a truce is tacitly declared by the omission altogether of devotional exercises. This loss of spiritual unity and power is, to my thinking, a strong argument against the existence of a State church.

Another peculiarity of English conventions (they never use that word here) is the cut and dried order of business, which is called an Agenda. Each resolution, motion and amendment is printed in full, with the name of the person who advocates it and the local society that he represents. As a result of this arrangement there is very little occasion for the intricacies of parliamentary usage, and there is practically no participation from the floor of the House. The women who, under this rule, spoke at the "Woman's Liberal" (as it is called for short) were survivals of the fittest, or rather survivals of the best; they spoke from the platform, and having known for days or weeks that they were to do so, brought excellent preparation, and in almost no case was any manuscript to be seen. They were, as a rule, well heard, and what they said was full of practical good sense, often brightened by humor. There were the usual complaints in the rear of the hall that "nobody could hear a word; nobody could hear what was going on; speak louder; there is too much whispering on the platform, as well as on the floor." In the midst of these mildly murmured criticisms the new president, Lady Aberdeen, smiled graciously, and evidently held the confidence and good will of the assembly. She used no gavel, but rang a little bell from time to time to bring the delegates to order; they were, however, remarkably decorous, and all the arrangements combined to make them so, the popular character of the meeting being its least emphatic feature. While there are advantages in the strong hand of officialism and the sway of committeeism (both so dominant in all public affairs on this side of the water) I question if the greater spontaneity of individual initiative, which is the ruling factor in our American conventions, is not an advantage of still greater value in that development of character and intellectual acumen on which, in the last analysis, the success of associated effort must depend.

Last year the inevitable split (so called) occurred in the "Woman's Liberal." As a matter of course, opponents delight in the word "split," but truth would substitute for it the expression "chipping off, according to the laws of cleavage." This unfortunate phenomenon has characterized most movements of men and women. Where any party or philanthropic organizations or denominational groups exist there is always a recalcitrant minority, which goes out and forms a small group, always on a declared basis of principle, but almost always on a real basis of policy, and often on one that involves personalities. The "Woman's Liberal" is no exception to this rule when it decides to enumerate among its objects the political enfranchisement of women, and to urge this reform upon that dominant party whose name it bears and in whose interest it works. There were some who doubted and who went by themselves, appointed officers, and are somewhere about, doing what they can to minimize the influence of the great association they have left.

This year the crucial test of the debate was whether advanced ground should be taken, making his declared advocacy of woman's ballot a test question to each Parliamentary candidate, at least this is the way in which the position was stated to the meeting.

Lady Carlisle spoke for about an hour in a most vigorous and statesmanlike manner, declaring that no such test should be made this year, but that every effort should be put forth to induce the Liberal party to place woman's suffrage on its list of objects; if this is done it will have the same effect, practically, as requiring the test from candidates. Those who opposed this view stated that they did not wish a test to be made, but that each and all should be free to act as circumstances in their respective localities might render advisable, and they preferred that the executive committee should be left without instructions on this point. This was voted down, and as the matter now stands the executive committee is not to make a test, but the local societies can do so if they think best.

Without a dissenting vote the ballot for women was indorsed as one of the objects of the "Woman's Liberal," to be included in its constitution. This decision created more enthusiasm than any other subject that came before the council. Home Rule was adopted as a matter of course without dissent; the same is true of the Liquor Traffic Local Control Bill, the Sunday closing of public houses, closing during polling hours for all elections, parliamentary or local, and the council "earnestly desired that a law should be passed giving all the adult inhabitants of each locality the complete control of the liquor traffic." This resolution was moved by Lady Henry Somerset in a brief but effective speech, and seconded by Mrs. Hugh Price Hughes. The Welsh Local Veto Bill was also unanimously indorsed. It was decided by unanimous vote that married women should stand on the same ground as spinsters and widows in the suffrage bill, and that while English women have already a municipal vote (i. e. rate payers who are spinsters or widows), they ought, without distinction of class, to have, not only the municipal, but the parliamentary franchise, on precisely the same basis as men.

The bill to establish parish councils whereby local legislation shall be taken from the hands of squires and parsons and given to the people, was warmly indorsed, and it was declared that this bill should make it perfectly clear that women are equally eligible with men to elect and be elected, not only in parish councils, but in district and county councils. This resolution was championed by Mrs. Bamford Slack, a real Portia of a woman whose husband is a leading London solicitor.

Nothing better could happen to the women of the United States than to have the opportunity of illustrating their intelligence and devotion to public affairs on a small scale, in the same manner that the women of England are now likely to have, in connection with the adoption of the parish government bill. This was presented in Parliament a few weeks ago by the Rt. Hon. H. H. Fowler, president of the local government board. Mr. Fowler is an earnest friend of woman's suffrage; he believes that by means of his bill men and women can be taught how to work together in the home affairs of the parish and in the village corporation, thus removing those two smallest circles of power outside the home from the hands of priests and squires (who now constitute the "privileged class" throughout the rural districts). This bill restores the power of local legislation to the rightful hands, namely, those who have to pay the taxes. In a country where church and state are so closely identified such a bill would have a different wording but need not have a different principle from the one that I yet hope to see adopted in my own country. In England the civil parish is the unit of area; in order to exist at all it must consist of three hundred persons; if it has not that number several adjacent parishes must unite. The Liberal women desire to have it explicitly stated in the bill, that married or single women, who have the same property qualification as men shall be as eligible as they are, to elect or to be elected to any position involved in this "home government." Said Mrs. Slack in her clear-cut tones: "The seventy-five thousand serious-minded women of the Liberal Federation must combine to secure the adoption of this bill. Nothing is so certain as the uncertainty of law; this bill must be threshed out thoroughly in our local leagues." The resolution was indorsed without dissent; indeed, every legal disability of women seemed to be passed upon and declared against with practical unanimity. Eight resolutions, each of them covering some important phase of the Liberal movement as it relates to women, were adopted with enthusiasm.

Miss Florence Balgarnie made a strong speech in favor of the equalization of wages between men and women. She said in a West-end tailoring establishment for precisely the same work, making waistcoats, women are paid four shillings and six pence, and the men six shillings and three pence. Men tried to get the women to strike, but the poor creatures said: "We would rather remain as we are than lose our places altogether; if we strike our employer will take on men instead, as he has often threatened to do, so that he may be able to say that all his waistcoats are 'man-made.'" For there is a large class of persons who although the work is not better done, prefer it because they think that it is likely to be better if done by men—so strong is the "set of the brain" in a prejudice thousands of years old—a prejudice that nothing will eliminate, except the slow working of the laws of heredity and environment. Miss Balgarnie said: "It is hard to form Women's Trades unions, working-women's brains are so slightly nourished, and their hands so weak we cannot stir them to enthusiasm. Working-women do not trust well-to-do middle class women, and it is perhaps not surprising that this is so, because women above all other beings have the vice of a passion for cheapness. This is their misfortune rather than their fault; having had so little money to use, they are bound to buy in the cheapest market, and they gratify their stinginess by

A PROBLEM IN "PROPORTION."

BY H. A. FOWLER.

As the hours spent in the churches stand to those of liquor dives;
As a part of day to seven spent in wrecking human lives;
As the number of the sermons stands to that of glasses filled;
As the number saved by churches to the millions drink has killed;
As the few that are true workers are to those who sit supine;
Make no effort in resistance to the work of beer and wine;
As such zeal (?) in Christian effort is to that in liquor's case;
So stands liquor's work to churches and their chances in the race.

JOHN TAYLOR'S FOURTH.

BY EVA JONES.

"I think he'd keep all right, ma'am, but for just that one thing. He's honestly trying to, and is proud of his success most of the time, I'm sure. I don't know how ever he stands it with the saloons so plenty and tempting. It's four years, now, of our good times, and every year getting better and better. But I've got so I just tremble before cold weather is fairly over, fearing how he will get along on the Fourth of July. Oh, Mrs. Rogers, I don't know what else that day is good for, but I am sure it is good for the men who sell rum. I wish the Fourth of July had never been celebrated, I do."

"Why, Mrs. Taylor! Our nation's birthday!"

"I can't help it. It comes nearer being a nation's ruin, as they have it now. John's father was a soldier, and he likes to take the children and go with the crowd, with their flags and drums, to listen to the grand speeches. But it is the one fatal day of the year for him; he is always swept off his feet, though he never means to be, you know. And then the trouble goes on for weeks, and it is sometimes nearly through August before he is the same man he was before. I tell you, Mrs. Rogers, if your white ribbon could only reach and tie up the curse of the Fourth of July, I'd put it on, too, and wear it forever."

Now it happened that Mrs. Rogers was a patriot-souled woman, and that, perhaps, is one reason why she also happened to be president of Pickens county Woman's Christian Temperance Union, with fifteen bright unions under her guidance. As she busied herself in the swift setting of the supper table that May evening her husband heard her saying to herself, half aloud: "And Native Land! And Native Land! I believe we can; we surely ought."

"What's up now with our native land? 'Can' and 'ought' what, my dear?" asked Mr. Rogers.

"Well, Phil, it's the Fourth of July. I've just waked up to the fact that at present it is not much of an honor to God or Home or Native Land. It needs some white-ribbon principles mixed in with it."

"No doubt of it, wife. But how came you to be inspired in regard to it so early in the season?"

"True enough," sighed Mr. Rogers, after hearing Mrs. Taylor's story. "I've often wished Taylor and some other good fellows could sleep over the Fourth."

"But it ought to be a grand day, making us all better citizens and stronger patriots. We ought to make it such a day that the weakest man should then feel safest under the protection of his country's strong arm."

"Sure. But how will you do it, my dear? I am certain you have a plan."

"If you will eat some supper, we will go and call on Mr. Paxton—he is a prominent Good Templar, you know, and talk over my scheme with him."

The discussion that followed that evening at Mr. Paxton's ended in a circular letter and appeal, written by Mrs. Rogers to the unions, and another written by Mr. Paxton to the Good Templar lodges in the county, calling upon them to coöperate within given areas for temperance celebrations. Letters, directions and suggestions followed the first circular. "The Fourth of July for God and Home and Native Land," was the rallying cry, and was posted in every public place as freely as a show-bill. Each lodge and union elected one of its keenest members as a representative on a general committee for preparations, and through sub-committees planned for the arrangement of all details. A perfect feast of patriotism and flow of good comradeship was provided for. Each union and lodge used all possible local influences to "boom" the "new-fangled" celebration and every household seemed to be preparing banners and mottoes, large and gay as circus posters. Fine band music, temperance orators of both sexes, a temperance glee club, games and sports, and a basket picnic made a most alluring program.

On the great day plenty of refreshments were on sale by a committee appointed to that work, "and you can get everything that is good and none of the cursed drink around that generally spoils the memory of the day," as one hearty young fellow remarked. The profits from the refreshment sales covered nearly all expenses for speakers and arrangements. Three-fourths of the rallies in the county were an entire success.

"Wasn't it grand, Phil," said Mrs. Rogers, when tired and happy they talked it over on the evening of the Fourth. "And after we have systematized and carried on this department of temperance work a few years, we won't have to 'run off to the woods with it,' as I heard a man say to-day,—though I don't know that we shouldn't love the woods best. But the towns will be anxious for the benefit and honor of such gatherings. No town need apply that would want anything less than a noble thing for a noble purpose. The low-motived, mercenary things that most of the celebrations for years have been, disgust me more than ever by comparison."

"And wasn't it uplifting," said Mr. Rogers, "to see John Taylor and all his family drinking in the enjoyment of the day without a fear of 'the consequences'? I could not help noticing his wife's thankful, happy look as they packed in the babies to go home. That alone has paid me for all the work I invested."

"The wonder is we never thought it out before," said his wife.

VEGETARIANISM.

The Final Solution of the Drink Question.

BY MAY YATES.

[Read at World's Vegetarian Congress.]

Inebriety, the curse of modern civilization, is no longer always considered a vice, but is generally recognized by most eminent medical men to be the result of diseased conditions which must be remedied if we wish to redeem the world from this great evil. Too long have temperance reformers contented themselves with cutting down the hydra-headed results of inebriety, instead of removing the roots which produce it. In spite, therefore, of the arduous efforts of the last fifty years, alcoholism still flourishes in our midst, and the immense stream of drunkenness, which has been well compared to Niagara, bears down every year over a hundred thousand drunkards to their awful doom. Is it not, therefore, advisable to seriously consider if some effectual steps cannot be taken to prevent that craving for alcoholic and other stimulants which is the cause of so much misery?

A radical remedy is required, and we maintain that in vegetarianism alone will be found the final solution of this terrible evil.

Dr. Norman Kerr truly observes:

"Alike in the interests of the inebriates and of science, the truth must be respected and the facts acknowledged. Whatever the immorality, the vice or the sin of drunkenness, in a very large number of instances the drunkard is more to be pitied than blamed as the subject of a disease, it, or a diathesis predisposing to it, having been by heredity, or by some other physical cause stamped on his very being. . . . Repeated relapses, and absolute failures in the apparently converted, have shaken my confidence in the efficacy of moral means only."

How shall we prevent this diseased condition which may be lurking unsuspected in the best and purest, and be quickly developed with the smallest temptation? Vegetarianism (as its root vegetus — vital, wholesome, vigorous, indicates) proclaims that a pure, healthy and vigorous humanity can only be ensured by obedience to all the laws of life, and that the laws of diet are fundamental ones, the keeping of which makes all other laws easier to understand and to obey.

Meat is not the natural food of man who belongs to a frugivorous race. The formation of his teeth, his alimentary canal and all his natural instincts are opposed to the use of flesh, which he can only eat when disguised by cooking. This unnatural diet of flesh is also a strong excitant which predisposes the system to the use of other stimulants.

In addition to mistakes in the choice of foods civilized nations have fallen into grave errors in their preparation. The white bread which is consumed instead of the entire wheaten bread is deprived of the phosphates which are so essential, not only for the formation of bones and teeth, but for the nourishment of the brain, nerves and higher centers which resist and control lower cravings. In addition to this fruit is considered a luxury instead of an essential part of diet, and the water in which vegetables are boiled is rejected and the aliment is thus deprived of vegetable acids.

Most people know that it is essential that food should contain flesh-forming and heat-producing materials, but they do not realize that life cannot be sustained unless it also contain the above mentioned phosphates, whilst a diminished supply will produce that craving, sinking feeling which impels many an overworked man or woman to take stimulants or else produces that nervous, irritable neuralgic or dyspeptic condition which makes many lives a wearisome burden, instead of the joyful existence which is the right of all who obey the laws of God.

It is quite inaccurate to teach, as so many temperance advocates do, that beer and wine are so much dirty water with no nourishment.

The following short table compiled from Professor Church's book on food shows the amount of phosphates and vegetable acids contained in various fruits, grains and wines:

	Vegetable acids. grains.	Mineral salts. grains
One pound apples	70	28
One pound gooseberries	105	35
One pound lemons	350	98
One pound oranges	75	105
One pint Claret	49	18
One pint London Stout	22	22
One pint Port	35	20
One pint Pale Ale	21	10
One pound Wheat-meal		119
One pound Wheat-flour		49
One pound Bran		422

It will thus be seen that a pint of Stout contains as much phosphates as half a pound of white bread. Grains, pulses, fruits and nuts contain, however, the essential phosphated and vegetable acids, in a natural, pure state, unaccompanied by the injurious alcohol which is an organic by-product, which is in no way necessary for life and acts as a brain poison. A pure, non-stimulating diet of grains, pulses, fruits and nuts contains every element necessary for the complete nourishment of the body, while their innate vitality increases the energy and resisting power of the organism.

Dr. Jackson has truly observed: "Under a great variety of circumstances exhibited in our common life men feel a strong desire for stimulants. That desire grows out of the starved condition of the nerves in their bodies. If you give to this debilitated, disordered, diseased, exhausted living body, by way of aliment, the means of repairing its starved nerve tissues, the desire for stimulants is lost. Under the recuperative effect of nutrients the longing for stimulants disappears. . . . It is morally and physically impossible for any man to remain a drunkard who can be induced to forego the use of tobacco, tea, coffee, spicy condiments, common salt, flesh, meats and medicinal drugs. If his diet consists of grains, fruits and vegetables, simply cooked, and he keeps his skin clean, he cannot, for any length of time, retain an appetite for strong drinks. The desire dies out of him, and in its stead comes up a disgust."

This is no new, untried theory. It has been proved over and over again that a properly selected vegetarian diet removes all desire for alcoholic drinks, and that its use, combined with obedience to all the other laws of life, will produce a vigorous humanity, from which the present diseased craving for alcoholic stimulants and narcotics will disappear.

By adopting this diet personal health and happiness will increase, and at the same time a radical cure for alcoholism, that fearful curse of modern days, will be promoted. Its ravages are too well known to need description. The cries of starving children and the sobs of abandoned mothers are always reminding us of its terrible influence.

THE Trinity may be illustrated by a flower. Look at it. First of all it is an emblem of life, and as such of universal life. In this it is illustrative of God, the Father the Creator of all things. But the flower has outward form; so God took on our form to show us what His heart was like, for we cannot worship force or life in the abstract. Then the flower has its perfume, wholly invisible, that is to me analogous to the Holy Spirit; and here in the flower is the Trinity in perfect unity. What difficulty does one need to make about it? Look at a cornfield; it is an illustration of plenary inspiration. It is life; it is inspiration, plenary, because full, and verbal, also, for the waving of its beautiful billows speaks forth God. People trouble themselves, and become inveigled in words rather than in things. Men talk of the Mahatmas, the great spirits, and yet they are not willing to receive Christ, the greatest spirit that has ever visited the earth. God said: "Humanity is my son; Christ is my architypal son; I will send Him to educate them up to the concept of what a son should be."—Notes of a conversation with Canon Wilberforce.

LOYAL LEGION HYMN.

BY ABBY C. LABAREE.

We are the Loyal Legion!
An army strong and true.
Training to work for God and man—
Temperate through and through.

The dear Lord is our Captain;
Just like Him we would be,
In heart and life and service,
In spotless purity.

We are the Loyal Legion!
More faithful every day
We'll follow our great Captain,
His every wish obey.

Growing to men and women
With purpose all can see,
Ready to work for temperance
With dauntless loyalty.

A DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE.

"HOORAY for the Fourth! Only two weeks off!"

Robert Sutton rushed into the house after school, slamming the door after him. His mother had winced a little at the sudden noise, but met her boy with the pleasant smile he loved to see.

"What are you planning to do on the glorious Fourth, Rob?" she asked, as he looked up into her face.

"Oh! Dick Reed and I are goin' to get up at three o'clock, and set off two bunches of crackers an' half a dozen cannon crackers, and then fire his new brass cannon, and—"

"There's one thing I haven't heard yet," observed Mrs. Sutton, her arm still round the boy.

"What's that, mother? Pin-wheels? Just wait till night!"

"No; I wasn't thinking of pin-wheels, nor Roman candles," she said, laughing outright this time. "I was a little surprised that you didn't plan something that should really keep in mind the anniversary. You know what the day is for?"

"Of course, ma'am. The Declaration of Independence!"

Rob straightened up a little as he said it.

"Well, if I were you, I'd have one this year."

"A 'Declaration of Independence'? How, mother? There's nobody ruling over us, now. I just wish there was a war—wouldn't I fight 'em!"

"Why didn't you shut the gate behind you, yesterday, Rob, when you went to meet Dick? You know how the cattle got in and trampled on the garden."

Rob hung his head at the recollection.

"I couldn't stop, ma'am. I had to be on hand with the fellows."

"'Couldn't stop—had to be?' I thought 'nobody ruled over us,' nowadays!"

"Well—I mean—"

"Don't think I'm scolding, Robbie. We finished all the sober talk about the gate yesterday. But, you see, you were really a servant to your desire to play. When you put off going on my errand till too late this morning it was laziness that commanded you to stand still, and you obeyed. If I were a boy, I'd declare independence on the Fourth of July, once for all—independence of all unjust and bad masters, like the ones I spoke of."

"That's splendid!" cried Rob, catching the idea at once.

"I'll get Dick and some of the other fellows to join. Would you write it out, mother? 'When in the course of human events it becomes necessary for one boy to run errands'—that's the way it could begin."

"Hardly necessary to write it, I think," answered Mrs. Sutton, with her gentle smile. "There is just One to whom you may repeat all your promises and declarations, and who will help you till you have 'perfect liberty.' Now run off to your dinner, and we'll see how your resolutions prosper."

Dick Reed was enthusiastic over the new way of observing the Fourth. "That is," said he, "if you don't leave out crackers."

"I don't see," remarked Rob, gravely, after a moment's reflection, "that crackers have anything to do with it, nor pin-wheels. I'm not quite sure about serpents, because they scare girls, an' it's no fun lettin' 'em off unless there's somebody round to screech when they begin to fizz."

Serpents were accordingly ruled out, "like tea, in the old times," put in Ronald Jackson, a third patriot.

The night before the Fourth was hot and sultry. As soon as the sun set, horns began to toot in the town of Birchville, where Rob lived, and guns to pop. Invalids turned wearily in their beds, and wished the great day were ending instead of beginning. Men with gray in beard and hair remembered their own boyish days, and longed to go out and toot with the youngsters. Rob retired early, having left a piece of string hanging out of his window, with the end a few feet from the ground. The other end was attached firmly to his thumb, and Dick was bound by solemn agreement to "yank" the aforesaid string at exactly 2:55 a. m.

"I'll pull," said Dick earnestly, "till you wake up, or come out o' that window!"

Rob found no difficulty in waking at the summons. It was half an hour sooner than the appointed time, to be sure, but Dick never wavered for a trifle like that. With pockets stuffed full of delicious smelling red crackers and slow-match, the two boys crept off to a vacant field near by. There they found half a dozen others similarly armed, and grouped about a good-sized brass cannon.

"Wait till just three!" commanded Rob who was the leader. "Lucky we thought of this place to fire. One of the selectmen called on my father only last night, and said we mustn't make a disturbance in the other end of the town before six o'clock."

The boys fidgeted, lighted their slow-match, and swung it about in fiery circles.

At a quarter before three, Ronald Jackson fired a cracker right in their midst, by accident.

"Well, we might's well begin now," said Rob, rather relieved at the excuse. "Horns all ready? Bunch of crackers? Cannon loaded—grass in the muzzle to make her speak? Now, when I say three."

"One"—

Before he got any farther a slight little figure flitted into the circle.

"Oh, boys, please don't fire off anything loud. My mother's sick, and father's—he's—"

"Drunk!" finished one of the boys, roughly. "I saw him drinking last night. Let's go ahead. What odds will it make? They'll all be firing soon."

"Please"—began the girl.

"Oh, go ahead, Dick. Touch off your cannon. The slow-match's all burnin' up. I say, let's fire, don't you, fellows?"

There was a murmur of assent, and one or two called out, "Fire away!"

"Please!"

"You shut up an' go home, Doll Harkins. We can't have all our fun spoiled by—"

"Can't! Who says we can't?"

It was Rob's voice, clear and strong, in the dim twilight. He had been silent until now, fighting his battle.

"Who says we can't?" he repeated. "I, for one, can do what I please. I do want to have a good time, and a regular old slam. But I want still more to do the right thing. I can't answer for any of you fellows, but the want to-have-a-good-time sha'n't rule over me, I can tell you. I go in for independence."

Rob paused for breath after his speech. The boys were puzzled. This was a new view of the matter.

"Hooray for the declaration!" shouted Dick, half under his breath. "Put my name down under yours!"

Well, you can easily see that the tide was turned. Boys have good hearts, and the whole crowd stuffed crackers into pockets once more, to go to far-off fields, and wait till a later hour.

Dollie dried her tears, and went back to her mother, who was sleeping restfully in the little hovel near by. In the course of the day Mr. Sutton called there, and left brightness and hope, for the girl's father was not a bad man, and was full of remorse when he came to himself.

As for Rob and the rest, they made noise enough during the daylight hours to last for a twelve-month—at least, so thought the neighbors.

"I told Him about it, last evening," Rob whispered to his mother, when she sat down by his bed that night, and kissed her boy's forehead. "I didn't know how soon I'd have to 'declare,' but I guess He helped me, don't you, mother?"—The Congregationalist.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—A very interesting event will occur on the Fourth of July. Some of you may have had a part in it and all will want to know about it. It is no less than the ringing for the first time of the new Columbian Liberty Bell, which was cast at Troy, N. Y., last week. This remarkable bell is composed of coin and pieces of metal connected with the battles for the liberty of our country, sent by thousands of persons. In the cities of Washington, D. C., and Newark, N. J., alone, fifteen thousand children have sent a penny each to the fund.

The bell weighs fourteen thousand pounds or ten times the weight of the old Liberty Bell, and on it is inscribed: "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another." "Proclaim liberty throughout all the land, unto all the inhabitants thereof," and "Glory to God in the highest, peace on earth, good will to men." At every sunrise and sunset the bell will be rung; again on the different hours on the days which mark some great event in the liberty of the world and at the anniversaries of the birth or death of noted men and women who lived or died for their country.

How we all wish that the first ringing of this bell were to celebrate the freedom of our land from the dreadful power of drink! Wouldn't we like to help ring it! What a good long pull we'd give and what a rejoicing there would be.

A little longer of ringing of the truth by our words and acts in the ears of those who do not realize the dangers of the great rum power and our wish may be granted! No greater honor, surely, can be ours than to rank among those who have freed our country from its worst enemy—alcohol. Yours for true liberty,

Aunt Jane

Yesterday, June 9th, was flower-mission day. It was also the day for our L. T. L. to meet. We met in the school room after school. Mamma, who is superintendent, had asked all who could to bring flowers, so we had two baskets full, and sent them to one of our members, a little girl who is very sick. MARION IRWIN.

No, the Chief Justice decided that the great Fair should be open. But many exhibits are closed and nearly all the state buildings. The number of people there on Sunday is small compared to week days. And if nobody would go the Fair would have to be closed, wouldn't it?

Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord; and the people whom he has chosen for his own inheritance.—Psalm 33:12.

AMERICA'S RED-LETTER DAY.

The historic "Fourth" comes this year with more than ordinary significance to every thoughtful American citizen. But for the events of 1775–1783 the greatest event of the nineteenth century (greatest because most beneficial and far-reaching in its effects) would have been impossible. It is not the discovery of America alone that the Columbian Exposition commemorates; it is the growth of a wonderful nation. Four hundred years of colonial life could never have culminated in the exhibition which is now challenging the admiration of the world within and around the gates of the "White City." This prodigious enterprise is the climax of one hundred and seventeen years of independent national life. For, while the Fair is truly an international exhibit, it is, as all nations agree, distinctively American in plan and purpose. And it is this fact which constitutes its chief charm in the eyes of the rest of the world.

Our Revolutionary patriots did not dream of the far-reaching influences of their heroic struggle; they did not realize, as in the light of later events their descendants do, that they fought not only for the cause of America but for the cause of humanity. And, looking backward and forward, the mother-country recognizes in the result of the War of Independence the accomplishment of divine purpose. The strained relations inevitably existing for a time between conqueror and conquered have long since passed away, and to-day Great Britain witnesses with increasing friendliness and good will the growing power and prosperity of her precocious daughter.

The daughter who, having arrived at years of maturity, and chaffing under parental authority, decides to start out upon an independent career and set up an establishment of her own, is, by her very independence and individuality, in a position to add materially to the power and influence of the mother. And because Columbia persisted in setting up housekeeping for herself and thus becoming a ruling factor in the economy of nations, an active instead of a passive force in civilization, she stands to-day the most powerful ally of England in maintaining and materializing the principles of liberty and peace which both nations accept as their standard. And what more natural than that mother and daughter should join hands in furthering the best interests of the entire human family? What more natural than that these two mighty English-speaking nations should form a still closer alliance for the preservation of peace and harmony among all nations of the earth? What wonderful possibilities for humanity lie in such a federation!

Independence Day stands preëminent among our national holidays, not only because of the importance of the event it celebrates, but because of its intensely national character. Every American, north, south, east and west, may participate in its patriotic demonstrations with equal fervor and enthusiasm, and this nation does well to emphasize its significance with all the symbols of patriotism and with spectacular and oratorical display. The pomp and pageantry of a Fourth of July celebration appeal forcibly to the patriotic emotions of every American citizen, and fire the youthful mind especially with a spirit of pride in and loyalty to our country.

The key-note of Independence Day is Liberty. The love of liberty has been, and always will be, a mighty factor in the evolution of individuals and of nations. "Give me liberty or give me death." These are not words of mere oratorical display, but language dictated by the divine Moulder of human destinies Himself.

But let not the American patriot to-day, on the eve of the twentieth century, forget that "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty"; that there are battles to be fought which require none the less courage because they are bloodless. This nation will ever hold in grateful remembrance those who led it victoriously through the revolutionary period and the troublous times which followed; but while paying heartfelt tribute to these heroes, America demands of her sons to-day devotion of a different kind. It is time we got rid of the notion that the sword is the symbol of patriotism. Columbia calls upon her sons and daughters to prove their devotion, not by dying for her but by living for her, and he in whose breast the patriotic fire burns fiercest may find in responding to her call greater opportunity for the display of heroism than ever was afforded by Lexington or Bunker Hill.

THE VOICE OF THE POLITICIAN VS. THE VOICE OF THE PEOPLE.

In a letter to the New York Herald, quoted by the Inter Ocean of June 12, Murat Halstead gives his views regarding the political situation. He declares that the "highest principles and the best interests of the people at large" demand the restoration of Republican administration, and, in his opinion, this can only be accomplished by the "simplification of issues," by which he means the dropping of all "fads" and "dead weights" (such as prohibition and negro suffrage) and a strict attention to "business questions." In other words, he advocates a vigorous do-nothing policy.

The views of politician and people upon these points, as upon many others, are somewhat conflicting. That there exists a difference of opinion between Mr. Halstead and "the people at large" concerning republican supremacy, the last election clearly demonstrates. It is very evident that the people do not regard the Republican party to-day as the exponent of the highest principles, nor its return to power as necessary to secure their best interests.

Mr. Halstead voices the sentiment of dethroned politicians and office-holders; he does not voice the sentiment of the American people at large. The deliberate verdict of the latter as given in the November election was a scathing rebuke to the men and methods of the Republican party.

In urging the "simplicity of issues" the venerable editor and politician does well to point to the policy of this country's greatest president and patriot. Abraham Lincoln, he says, was wise and successful because his "highest duty was the safety of the Union, which, with or without slavery, must be preserved." If this truly patriotic sentiment was to-day the animating principle of the "grand old party," the historian would not now be preparing to write its obituary. Had it, in all these thirty years, continued to follow its great leader's "simplicity of purpose," Mr. Halstead would have been spared the painful necessity of explaining "why the Democrats won."

As long as the Republican party had before it a vital issue, as long as it was confronted by a great emergency, as long as it remained true to its sacred trust, true to the laws of its own being, just so long did it carry all before it and win for itself imperishable laurels.

When the thrice welcome command, "Let us have peace," echoed through the length and breadth of the land, and a war-weary nation sheathed its sword and began to adjust itself to post-bellum conditions, there arose among the victors ignoble strife. Political honors were eagerly sought and, contended for. This spirit of rivalry, like a cancerous sore, gnawed at the vitals of the body politic, and, growing with its growth, became a disintegrating force, killing the Republican party by inches. When personal aggrandizement became the dominant desire of its leaders, the days of Abraham Lincoln's party were numbered. Had subsequent leaders followed in the footsteps of the wise and successful Lincoln, the Republican party might have continued to march on to victory as the party of progress and reform.

Mr. Halstead affirms that the greatest difficulty Lincoln had to contend with was the "impetuosity of the radicals." We maintain that if it had not been for the radicals the public sentiment necessary to a successful preservation of Union and Liberty as one and inseparable, would have moved but sluggishly, instead of sweeping like a torrent through the Northern and Western states as it did. And if it were not for the radicals to-day this nation would settle down to the do-nothing policy and stagnate instead of moving on in the vanguard of the procession as it does.

"To have made the war an abolition war in the first months of warfare," continues Mr. Halstead, "would have been to divide the north and imperil the cause of Union and Liberty." So it seems Mr. Lincoln kept the abolition "fad" in the background, and made the struggle in the beginning upon the more abstract basis of "states rights." Reasoning from analogy, the Republican party to-day should drop the prohibition, and negro suffrage "fads," and work in singleness of purpose—for what? The safety and perpetuity of the union? The furtherance of the moral or material interests of the people? No; but for the safety and perpetuity of the party; for the furtherance of the interests of its politicians and those fortunate enough to secure a share of the spoils. Herein lies the difference between the policy of Lincoln and the policy of party leaders to-day; herein lies the secret—a very open one—of the decline and fall of the once "grand old party." However necessary a free ballot or the prohibition of the liquor traffic might be to the national honor and safety, Republicans must not meddle with these questions because it will divide the party. Better imperil the cause of Liberty and Union than imperil the party to which Mr. Halstead belongs!

Ohio's method of dealing with the liquor problem is extolled as being "everything that reasonable people can demand or thoughtful citizens desire." Its state constitution forbids a license system, so "the evolution of the situation was the straight, single, simple tax on saloons," with home rule in towns and townships. Just how this "excellent and sensible" plan takes the saloon out of politics, as the Herald's correspondent asserts, we fail to understand, in face of the fact that next to New York and Minnesota, Ohio gave more votes to the Prohibition presidential candidate than any other state in the union. No one would rejoice more than the Prohibitionists to see the saloon taken out of politics. But the liquor men put it there, and as long as the traffic exists the liquor question will continue to vex and hamper the politician, all the efforts of Mr. Halstead and his coadjutors notwithstanding.

The Republicans are handicapped chiefly, we are told, by the license system and the fifteenth amendment, and to redeem themselves must abolish both. Now it is generally admitted that the direct agent in the recent defeat of the Republicans was the People's party, and the Populist platform points out, to those who are willing to see, some of the handicaps which the old party has been gathering to itself. Oppressive railroad legislation, the tyranny of trusts, monopolies and organized capital—these are some of the dead weights which should be "lopped off." These are the barnacles which impede the progress of the Republican ship, and from which the Populist leaders offer a way of escape. The accumulated dead issues which have fastened themselves upon the Republican party are enough to sink any vessel, even the grand old ship of state which weathered the political storm of 1860 and 1865.

Too many private cars went to Minneapolis; too many railroad interests and "bloated monopolies" were represented in that convention to inspire confidence in the hearts of the people. The heavy hand of soulless corporation is taking too active a part in legislative affairs to suit the thoughtful American citizen, and the coincidence between flourishing combinations and "panicky times" is striking him forcibly. The abnormal condition of the money market (one effect among many of the self-seeking spirit in politics) is arousing men, as perhaps nothing else would in these days of the supremacy of the all-mighty dollar, to the gravity of the situation.

The work of the Republican party is done. Its record is a glorious one, but at best, like all organizations, it was but the outward form of an idea. And forms must, in the nature of things, change. Parties come and go, but the soul which animates them goes on forever. The spirit which gave life to the Republican party is immortal. It is still abroad in our land, seeking expression in a new organism, ready to be reincarnated in a party of "high principles." "The vague, unresting, incoherent impulse of socialism in the air," which Mr. Halstead deprecates, is but a symptom of approaching new birth.

What the name of the new party will be, which shall embody the principles essential to the safety and preservation of the Union, it is unnecessary to prognosticate, but as far as Prohibitionists are concerned, we venture to say that they would be more than willing to unite with Mr. Halstead and other loyal American citizens, irrespective of party name, in forming one grand national party, whose hightest duty shall be the preservation of the nation; a party with one persistent, simple purpose, viz.: a government of American people, by American people, and for American people, with all that the word "people" implies. We Prohibitionists would feel quite safe in trusting our particular "fad" to the hands of such a party.

The true manhood of this nation, north and south, is ready to resent to the death any policy which endangers the national liberty and unity, secured and preserved at such terrible cost. But because the foe is an insidious one; because it is professedly loyal to American institutions and holds aloft the national flag, the people are not fully aroused to their country's peril.

The liquor traffic is but one form in which the danger manifests itself. An un-American foe menaces our national life on every side. Its hand is upon the ballot box; its profane touch upon the Christian Sabbath; it would pollute even our public school system; it would, in a word, denationalize us.

Republicans, Democrats, Populists, Prohibitionists—all have this common foe to fight. Let us concentrate our forces upon its overthrow. The question for Republicans to consider, as Abraham Lincoln would say, if he were alive to-day, is not how can they return to power, but how best serve their country in the present crisis. The voice of the politician is heard inquiring, how can we "redeem ourselves" and obtain possession of the reins of government? The voice of the true statesman inquires, with every patriotic American citizen, how can we redeem the nation, and uphold American institutions?

THE FAIR TO BE OPENED SUNDAY.

The history of the effort to open the World's Fair on Sunday has been given in these columns up to the last few weeks. The last points briefly are these: The United States District Court decided that the Fair must be closed, the case was appealed and Justice Fuller granted a supersedeas allowing the Fair to be open until the Court of Appeals should give its decision. That court has now spoken and the Fair is to be open on Sunday. There is some talk of the Wanamaker case being pushed by which Wanamaker as a stockholder brings suit to prevent the opening but there is small probability that anything will be accomplished by this means. That the Fair will be open Sunday, there seems no reason now to doubt. The only thing that remains now for Christian people is to decide what their own duty is under the circumstances.

As we have already stated, we believe this action on the part of the Directors is a violation of the law of God, a defiance of the expressed wish of the people and an actual, if not legal, breach of contract. We believe also, as surely as we believe that this universe is under the reign of law, that the perpetrators of this action will suffer the penalties of broken law. Nor do we think that these penalties will be confined to the next world or to that class of punishments which the worshipers of Mammon are inclined to regard with contemptuous indifference. Christian people are learning wisdom from their enemies and are fast finding out how to use their weapons. Judging from the tone of religious assemblies, papers and officials, the World's Fair Directors are likely to be punished in the most effective way—by the loss of patronage.

When the gates were first opened, several religious assemblies, as the Boston Methodist preachers' meeting, the Boston Congregational preachers' meeting and the Chicago Baptists, called upon their people to refuse to patronize the Fair so long as Sunday opening continued. Many others uttered strenuous protests which would have doubtless assumed sterner tone had the opening not been known to be still undecided. Whatever might be the duty or the action of Christians acting individually, there can be no doubt that multitudes of Christians will absent themselves from the Fair if there is concerted action in the case.

In the first place, people who feel that the staying away of an individual here and there, even though the number was large enough to materially affect the returns, yet would be inconspicuous and consequently entirely wanting in moral effect, would see at once in a united movement an opportunity to make their principles felt; and more than this, it would be a call to declare one's allegiance which very many could not, with a clear conscience, disregard, a distinct summons for all who are on the Lord's side to "come out from among them." To such a summons hundreds of thousands of people will respond, and we predict that the World's Fair will lose more financially than it will gain by Sunday opening.

We are pained to learn, in a letter just received from Anna Gordon, that Miss Willard has been ill in bed for a week, suffering from a feverish attack, which in her depleted condition caused her friends the greatest anxiety. Miss Gordon writes: "Feeling a little stronger, since, in obedience to the doctor's orders she had given up public work, Miss Willard persuaded herself to believe that she could occasionally attend a meeting of unusual interest as an on-looker. This she did once or twice, responding with only a word to an introduction or in acknowledgment of a basket of flowers; but the columns of The Union Signal will bear testimony to the fact that she was also a 'chiel amang them takin' notes,' and those notes were afterward elaborately dictated to a stenographer for the benefit of the white-ribbon constituency, Miss Willard so fully believing that 'the best that any mortal hath is that which every mortal shares.' Early in June came the wonderful meeting of the Women's Liberal Federation, followed by the anniversary of the British section of the World's W. C. T. U. Miss Willard's friends did all in their power to dissuade her from leaving the seclusion of Lady Henry Somerset's lovely cottage in Reigate for a week in London, but a great convention of women proved too powerful a temptation for her to resist, and each session found Miss Willard in her place listening with eager interest to the proceedings, and at last even making a brief speech herself in support of an important resolution.

"On returning to Reigate," Miss Gordon says, "the reaction came swiftly. While in great weariness and wholly unable to do so, she dictated the vivid account of the meeting, already published, and now, although ten days have passed, she has not been able to sit up for an hour. The best medical aid was immediately called, and with skillful nursing and unremitting care, Miss Willard seems to have escaped a long and serious illness, which was at first threatened. While we sympathize most deeply with our beloved leader, whose life long exemption from pain and weakness makes her present illness all the harder to bear, we shall be glad for the lesson she has learned, that public meetings cannot be indulged in for the present, even in moderation, not even for the sake of lending an ear rather than a voice, but must be altogether prohibited. Most bitterly did Miss Willard lament her overwork, when, on June 10th, she could not witness the magnificent pageant of the Hyde Park demonstration in support of the Direct Veto Bill, an account of which Lady Henry Somerset sends you by this mail."

Miss Willard's busy brain has so long been set for the betterment of humanity, and her heart has for so many happy years borne the W. C. T. U. as its most coveted burden that we cannot wonder she finds it hard to obey the loving command, "Sit still, my daughter!" This she must do, however, for the next few months, and our white-ribboners everywhere owe her dear friends an everlasting debt of gratitude for their tender ministrations to our President during this enforced rest.

The statue in front of the Ohio state building represents the state as a woman standing upon a pedestal, while just below her stand the figures of a number of her noted men. At the base is the inscription, "These are my jewels." The design is very pretty, yet we could not but wonder as we looked upon it why some of Ohio's daughters were not represented among her "jewels." It may be admitted, of course, that none of them have become distinguished as statesmen because they have been given no opportunity to show their powers along that line, but surely Ohio has daughters who have won honor in various lines of public life. But even were there none, we are constantly told by certain classes of people that it is the woman of the home who finds her sphere solely within its sacred precincts, the ideal wife and mother, who is admired, reverenced and loved by all true men. There can be no doubt that Ohio has many such women. Why are they not given a place among her "jewels"? It is this constant forgetfulness of woman except when the subject is forced upon their attention, the failure to give her the place of honor they, upon occasion, so vociferously declare to be hers, that makes us distrustful of some of the protestations of reverence and honor so common with those who are afraid to trust women with their rights.

During the last epidemic of cholera in New Orleans, the Sons of Temperance appointed a committee to gather statistics bearing upon the relation of intemperance to cholera. Their report showed that the death rate in the city was fifteen to every one thousand inhabitants, that the death rate among the order of the Sons of Temperance was two and one-half to every thousand. These statistics though old, are profitable.

"The jumping off place" of almost every speaker is, "in the matter," when she does not know how else to end her sentence. "We must do our best in the matter; we must be wise in the matter." It would be a good thing for raciness and originality of speech if the phrase "in the matter" could be drowned in the depths of the sea; there is not another so threadbare except those relating to health, the weather and the servant problem.

"If we work upon marble, it will perish; if we work upon brass, time will efface it; if we rear temples, they will crumble into dust; but if we work upon immortal minds, if we imbue them with principles, with the just fear of God and love of our fellow-men, we engrave on those tablets something which will brighten to all eternity."

The word "lady" indicates a deeply-rooted, untaught self-respect and an inborn self-restraint, the pith of true nobleness in character. It seems something usually shown by such traits as dignity, repose, ease, courtesy, affability, grace, tact and delicacy of thought, whether in presence, manner, carriage, dress, touch, look, speech, tone of voice, enunciation or accent. United with these are implied the indefinable impress of an unobtrusive personality importing a unique mind, a frank, generous, sensitive, sympathizing, amiable disposition; a noble unselfishness, a well-disciplined temper and a tender regard for the peculiar, natural or fictitious individualities of other people.

Many of the finest women writers are pleading for corn or some kind of grain as our National floral emblem, and particularly as the representation of woman's progress. Says Mary Newbury Adams: "The emblematic plant for the Woman's Building should be grain, not the flower of a weed by the roadside. Women first planted grains and began agriculture, after they had compared good with evil and aspired for progress. Let woman in art be represented with truth to the facts of her life in the history of civilization. A brilliant, gaudy golden-rod, with coarse leaves, no use in industry, without odor or useful seed, with no permanent value, does not represent woman in civilization, but corn does. It is of great importance what our symbols are, for art is the permanent revelation of our knowledge in form." On Duty thinks this is very sensible.

Concerning the quotation in "Glimpses of Fifty Years," The Lord gave the word, the women that published the tidings are a great host, it is interesting to find the radical translation given by Dr. Adam Clarke in his comment on Psalms 68:51. "Of the female preachers there was a great host." "Such," he says, "is the literal translation of this passage; the reader may make of it what he pleases."

Ceus is in the original conception the God of the firmanent or open air, and Minerva, the goddess of mind or thought. As the Greek, when he sacrificed, raised his eyes to heaven, so the Roman raised his head; for the prayer of the Greek was vision, but with the Roman it was reflection.

Among the multitudinous efforts being put forth to ameliorate human conditions, none that I have lately seen has in it more "promise and potency" than the act of Parliament passed in the Province of Ontario, Canada, of which the city of Toronto is the center, providing that a curfew bell is to be rung in every city and town at nine o'clock at night, and that all persons under seventeen years of age found after that hour in the streets without the permission of their parents and guardians are to be punished by fine and imprisonment. Children of tender years so found are to be placed in some public institution and kept there till the government sees fit to release them. The garden gate is the dead line of boyhood in these days of legalized temptation. It is, as a rule, enough to know about the wholesomeness of a boy's habits that he spends his evenings "in the bosom of the family circle." For the good of the nation it was a thousand pities that he was ever permitted to spend them anywhere else. I shall watch this Canadian experiment with intense interest. I see no reason why it should not succeed; and if it does it is sure to be put into practice generally.

THE BEAUTY OF REAL FRIENDSHIP.

BY HESTER M. POOLE.

"What do you prize most highly of all your earthly blessings?" was asked of a woman who had had large experience.

"I prize most the friendship of a genuine person," was the reply.

"What! do you think friendship to be more precious than love?"

"As the greater includes the less, so is friendship inclusive of love. The latter may be narrow, selfish, absorbing and ill-balanced. It may ask or it may give too much. But a large, sweet, opulent friendship, that is something grand and satisfying. No, I can live without what the world calls love, but I cannot live without friendship. It is the best part of love, the dispassionate, the judicial part. Give me the true, tried friendship of a thoroughly noble person, and I am content. With two such friends I have ample comfort. With three I revel in riches, and every added one gives delightful luxury."

In this presentation of the subject there is food for thought. Undoubtedly between the married, those having royal natures ripen into the sincerest friendship. "As heart answereth to face in water, so the heart of man to woman." Each seeks the other's good, the other's happiness. This presupposes similarity of tastes, equality of development and community of aspiration. When this is found there is perfect marriage, as well as perfect friendship.

But we are speaking of that wider, larger life of the soul which finds expression above the attraction of the sexes. In all family relationships it should exist. Yet how often do we see mothers, daughters and sisters finding confidential friendships outside the pale of the household.

Wherever temperament and taste are wide apart as the poles, there is no help for it. As water seeks its own level, so does each seek her own. In friendship there is nothing mathematical or conventional. There is a fine, tender sympathy which frequently draws two together nearer than ties of blood. Where the attraction is mutual and permanent it is sacred and should be so regarded by the relatives of each. The soul can, with safety, be neither repressed nor driven. She knows her own and should be loyal to her perception.

Yet should the mother, the sister and the daughter, yes and the father, the brother and the son, be unwearied in effort to cement friendship between all members of the household. An open, hearty, and sympathetic interest expressed in the feelings, wishes and pursuits of each by each, mutual confidence and regard would keep the fireside sweet, warm and sunny. What a pity it is not more often realized?

In regard to domestic affections, with his accustomed crispness, Oliver Wendell Holmes declares that, "Beauty is a great thing, but beauty of garment, house and furniture are tawdry ornaments compared with domestic love. All the elegance in the world will not make a home; and I would give more for a spoonful of real heart-love than for whole shiploads of furniture and all the gorgeousness all the upholsterers in the world can gather." As usual our genial humorist touches the real facts of the subject. Friendship is entirely apart from environment. Relationship founded upon superficial things is unworthy the name.

But there must be a basis of friendship or there can be no superstructure. The richer, deeper, holier the interior life, the greater capacity is there for intelligent and permanent affection. The feelings of a butterfly cannot be deeper than the shallow convolutions of her brain. Truthfulness, unselfishness, consecration to noble ends, the possession of a profound spiritual life, these constitute the basis for friendships which, we believe, may outlast this life to blossom in immortal beauty.

It follows that one's views of friendship is always an evidence of her status and development. The woman who rails at the friendships of women with each other and sneers at the possibility of friendship between man and woman, has no depth of character. She has taken for truth the old, outgrown myth that "women naturally hate one another" and that "woman is capable of loving a man but is incapable of remaining a friend to him." Such sentiments as these belong only to an artificial society or to one low in the scale civilization. Indeed, the primitive savage holds to a nobler code. Once a friend, he is a friend through life. It remains for the depraved and selfish to judge others by one's self, and proclaim that self to be incapable of genuine attachment.

Read to me a stranger's views concerning friendship and tell me the kind of persons whom she selects as friends, and I will describe to you her character. Is she secretive, sly, suspicious? Then is her nature unfortunately narrow, cold and infertile. Is she overtrusting, gushing, indiscreet? Then her immaturity and want of the fitness of things is only too evident. If she be large, tender, true, self-forgetting, if her friends are genuine people, not shallow worldlings or those given over to cant and to striving for popularity, then she is a woman worth knowing.

Acquaintances are many, friends few. In the nature of things it must be so. When we have found those between whom and ourselves are mutual sympathy founded on a similarity of tastes and aims, then may we hold them with "hooks of steel." For such, no labor is too great, no demand too onerous. They "multiply our joys and divid our sorrows."

Yet, were we occupied only with our particular friends, this life would be selfish and restricted. We need to know many people, to enter into their lives, to cherish for them that tolerance, consideration and sense of sisterhood which we hope to receive in turn. Otherwise, how ignorant we shall be concerning the heredity, the trials, the temptations as well as the pleasures and the fine, generous, qualities of our brothers and sisters in all sorts and conditions of life? To be ignorant is to be bigoted, and bigotry is a dwarfing of the entire nature.

The keen penetration of Darwin discovered that "permanence in friendship depends upon the grade of development." And he declares that permanence and development accompany each other. But I do not see that he states the fact that two persons may grow apart with passing years. There may be special lines along which they develop, lines that diverge continually, though all truths are at bottom, harmonious. Yet differing environments and aims will help to keep them separate. Then, there are youthful, callow friendships which we outgrow with our immaturity. These are hardly worthy the name.

A genuine woman will be genuine in her friendships. Those who are not surrounded with domestic ties, are, as youth passes, apt to make intimate relationship with another of her own sex. Such friendships are among the most beautiful examples of unselfish devotion the world has yet seen. Every reader can call to mind numbers of such instances. These persons generally are busy, useful women. In several cases one of the pair of friends who make a home together is a practicing physician. In another case one of the parties is an influential minister of the Gospel. Miss Mary A. Booth, author and editor of Harper's Bazar, lived with a widowed friend in such close and constant amity that when she died the bereaved friend shortly followed. In all cases that have come to my notice, and they are many, the relation has been altogether harmonious and helpful. Life has been rounder and richer in consequence of it.

No doubt that marriage ought to give and does give, when rightly contracted, the highest happiness of any earthly tie. It can also give the deepest woe. And, if a woman, having exalted views of marriage, fails to find the one out of all the earth who would fill her ideal, or if, from any other cause she is left alone, there is every reason why she should attach herself to some companion in that true friendship which can establish the basis of a home for both. A real woman must have something to care for, to look after, to commune with, to regard with tenderness. To indulge this feeling judiciously is to gain strength for that wider world in which her work may lie. Here she may have her household pets, her birds and flowers, her pictures and books, her bower of rest when work is done. Here she has some one to look over to at the breakfast table, to whom she can say, "How good God is to bring us together that we may make a home in unison!"

Many pilgrimages have been made to Llangollen, Wales, to the tomb of two women, celebrated for their mutual devotion,—Lady Charlotte Butler and Sarah Ponsonby. It is triangular in shape and beneath its shadows repose the ashes of the "Ladies of Llangollen," together with those of their favorite servant. The latter was the first to pass away, followed by the departure of Lady Eleanor, who "fell asleep" at the age of ninety years. Two years afterwards she was followed by Sarah Ponsonby, the date of whose demise fills the third side of the granite triangle, followed by this inscription:

"She did not long survive her beloved companion, Lady Eleanor Butler with whom she had lived in this valley for more than a half century of uninterrupted friendship. But they shall no more return to their house, neither shall their place know them any more."

What a noteworthy illustration of the beauty of a real friendship!

OREGON'S STATE CONVENTION.

"WHERE ROLLS THE OREGON."

Our eleventh state convention was held at Astoria, on the mouth of the Columbia. Here the Hudson Bay traders built their first fort on Oregon soil, calling it after John Jacob Astor. Here, a little later on, was the first town site, still in the memory of a few grandsires, when this "ever-emerald state" (as the poet of the Sierras calls it) was but the hunting ground of the Indian. To-day, what a change, when the women of two thousand happy homes send their one hundred and four delegates, by steam, on land or water, to confer together how best to keep intact the happiness of these and thousands of other homes from one of the greatest home marauders that Christian lands have to grapple with! The M. E. church of Astoria was tastefully decorated, and the L. T. L. banner of Oregon was an ornament to the rostrum. The first devotional exercises were conducted by the state evangelist, Mrs. A. P. Mead.

Our state president, Mrs. A. R. Riggs, soon took her place as presiding officer, and her many friends are glad to know her as such still. Five press reporters were appointed at the outset, and the accounts published by courtesy of the daily Astoria papers from Mrs. Additon's pen were most copious and the editor's own remarks most flattering. Fifteen counties were represented, and eighty-three unions, giving a total membership of 1,951. There are, of course, a few delinquent in reporting, as usual. The W's show an increase of twenty-two unions; the Y's of fifteen, over the six of last year.

The first evening was full of good things. A grand address of welcome from Mrs. Narcissa White Kinney, with its response by Rose Trumbull, the energetic leader of the Y's; then we were so happy as to catch Miss Jessie Ackermann, but just landed on the Pacific coast from her round-the-world journey. The addresses were all listened to with much interest and the enthusiasm that enthusiasm always inspires.

The next day's steamer brought in some belated delegates, for whom the hospitable homes of Astoria easily found room.

The treasurer's report gave $459.53 disbursed, leaving $132.04 in the treasury. The resignation of our state treasurer, Mrs. Margaret Bilyeu, a well-known and popular figure, at our conventions, in consequence of family sickness, was much lamented, and gratitude expressed to Mrs. Hester Shane, who has latterly been taking her place.

The lecture bureau reported five hundred and seventy-nine lectures delivered, but confessed as to the imperfectness of this report. Mrs. Harford, state organizer, made an earnest appeal that time be spent on Southern Oregon, as did Mrs. Unruh, of the Loyal Temperance Legion work. Miss Maggie Eaton from Eastern Oregon, made the same warm plea for her section of country beyond the mountains.

The reports of superintendents (several of whom were unavoidably absent) occupied much of the time on Thursday. Some interesting and useful facts were brought out. For instance, that by Mr. Rankin, superintendent for theologians, who discussed the much vexed question of wine at the passover, fermented or unfermented. The Jewish Rabbi of Portland, a learned and well-known man, uses the unfermented wine, keeping it in the refrigerator when opened that it may not sour or ferment.

The reports showed that one million, one hundred and forty-nine thousand pages have been distributed; that the county school superintendent for Umatilla county is a woman, the first I believe that has acted as such in the state, although one was before elected, but for various reasons resigned; that one hundred and eight girls have been in the refuge home of Portland, with the most satisfactory and gratifying results, a very small proportion having lapsed to evil ways; that Oregon has forty-seven companies of L. T. L's, an increase of twenty seven during the year. These are in twenty-one divisions, representing counties with a membership of 2,309 little soldiers under Mrs. Unruh's leadership; that the saloon at the state fair barely paid its expenses—an encouragement for the temperance booth, its refreshments for the outer and the inner man. Grants from the state W. C. T. U. treasury were asked to aid Mrs. Shipley in this department.

Mrs. N. W. Kinney pointed out in her legislation report that during the contest in Astoria for an ordinance licensing gambling in Astoria, every church minister sided with the W. C. T. U., and the ordinance was defeated. Thirteen hundred pledge cards were secured in Portland for the Columbian Exposition. The hand of one lady in Portland, Miss S. T. Lyman, fills space in as many newspapers as those filled by the many hands throughout the entire state.

In the afternoon of the third day, a goodly company of L. T. L's marched into the church to the strains of martial music, creating much interest, by themselves, their recitations, and the report received of them. The Astoria L. T. L., has sent money earned by themselves, to the Willard Fountain, at Chicago, and erected a fountain in their own city, and have sent up their autograph cards to the Columbian Exposition. If the children's organizer can succeed in dividing up the surplus of her warm fervor among her many superintendents, the L. T. L. stands a good chance of progress in Oregon. If the paraphernalia of the Legions cost a little money, and half the time of their meetings is spent in some social amusement or interesting occupation, neither will be ill-spent, for "it is better to build playhouses for our children, than jails for them when they are older." The young child lives by his play, the older one by his occupation, both are educated thereby!

Mrs. Hoxter, the superintendent of the correlated department (sad that it should be so), "Homes for homeless children," reported having found and placed nine in such, likewise that the existing societies of like endeavor, coöperate gladly with the W. C. T. U. Oregon is proud to be the second state in the Union taking up this department. Of all the county presidents, Maggie Eaton has been able to do the most work, taking the organizer over the two hundred miles of her territory, and arranging for good meetings in every community, thickly enough settled to warrant it.

From the codicil to our state tobacco law making the minor who uses it punishable as well as the dealer who furnishes it, Mrs. Kern hopes more good results may accrue from the working of her department in the future than in the past.

Our president's address, dealing chiefly with the many branches of our wide-spreading tree, was given in the evening to a large audience.

Miss Rose Trumbull, who is as full of tact as she is of naiveté and ready wit, waived the reading of her report on the same occasion, and introduced an Astoria Y, Miss Hattie Sayers, who discussed the "girl question," as did Miss Minnie Osborne, of Corvallis, that of the "honorary" to the Y's.

When Mrs. Delle H. Cox, our National organizer, was called to the chair, the result of the election replaced Mrs. A. R. Riggs as our leader, Mrs. Susie Foster, corresponding secretary, Mrs. Harford, recording secretary, and Mrs. Shane, treasurer.

On the concluding evening a Demorest medal contest was held, Miss Lottie Levings being the successful aspirant. Lunch was every day provided on a most bounteous scale by the ladies of the different churches, who served it in the Y. M. C. A. rooms. Mrs. Dr. Owens-Adair (whose life history all white-ribboners would be interested in) was mistress of the courtesies, and introduced, successively, the ministers of Astoria, who visited the convention, in her hearty and pleasant way.

The trouble of the "minutes"—always with a debt on their last page—came up with the usual good-natured skirmish. This year it was somewhat differently dealt with, which may serve as an example in other places, where the minutes difficulty is an annual presentation. Emboldened by Miss Willard's remarks in her annual address, that the expense of the National minutes was scarcely a necessity any more, considering the daily publication of THE UNION SIGNAL, the plan of work and resolution committee (which seems to have been a joint body) took the matter in hand. Their plan became law, and we are to have our minutes curtailed as much as possible, leaving only a full directory and such suggestions of the reports, etc., as will be useful for the work of the new year. The full reports, addresses and minutes of the convention to be published in toto in a double issue of our Oregon White Ribbon, thereby lessening the expense greatly.

Besides the usual home-hospitality which our delegates have experienced so many times in so many different places, that they begin to expect it (and which they amply received in Astoria), many tangible expressions and good-will were given to our hundred and four W. C. T. U. women, beside the "welcome home." Mr. H. M. Kinney invited a visit en masse to his salmon cannery, said to be the largest in the world, and presented each visitor with a specimen can with the well-known brand.

The motor line gave a free trip to all to the end of the government jetty, where a splendid view of the mountainous coast-lines "where rolls the Oregon," was displayed. The government steamship authorities, thinking our inland ladies would enjoy a whiff of the ocean wave, invited them for a nominal sum, to go over the long-dreaded Columbian bar in their steamer. To allow time for these pleasant excursions in the glorious Mayday sunshine, the convention commenced its session on the last day at seven o'clock in the morning. Many had to leave by the night steamer to Portland, so they enjoyed a good long day's work, and earned their rest, soothed by the easy movement of the vessel, and the lullaby of the machinery.

I hear that on the Sunday our "White Rose," as the convention dubbed Miss Rose Turnbull, delivered an earnest address on the Y work, insisting in a delicate, womanly way, for the equal standard of purity for men and women.

OUR STATE CONVENTION.

The morning of convention dawned like the traditional May morning, with sunshine and the song of birds filling the air with greetings to the many delegates who had come up to Muskegon for the annual meeting.

The executive committee met at nine o'clock. At half-past ten the convention met in the auditorium of the Central M. E. Church which had been beautifully and tastefully decorated, with flags, W. C. T. U. banners and potted plants. On an easel on the platform stood a fine picture of Frances E. Willard, that seemed like a benediction all through. The convention was smaller than usual, there being two reasons for this—quite at the extreme end of the state and two weeks earlier than common.

The program was unique in arrangement. The presidents of the twelve districts leaving their report of the year's work to be printed in the state minutes, had each seven minutes in which to speak of the outlook in the districts.

The president of the second said: "The need of the hour is a superintendent to lead children's organization, and a silver mine with free coinage."

The president of the ninth in whose district the convention was held, remarked: "Would I could say the morning dawneth, but we answer ready, ready to advance at our Leader's call. The captains all at their post, disciplined, drilled, sifted. We report nine new unions."

The superintendents were in groups, eight of them speaking for their department to the question, "Our Relation to Christian Temperance Work." Nine others spoke to the question, "Our Relations to the State," while ten spoke of their department in "Our Relation to the Work of the Church."

The memorial hour came the first morning and was led by Mrs. Lathrap. Fifty-two members in the twelve districts had "gone from labor to reward." After mentioning reverently and tenderly the names of those whose loss was a national sorrow, Mrs. Lathrap said: "Life is one of God's good gifts, yet we of the W. C. T. U. should not mourn in a hopeless fashion, but with an uplifted vision. I believe as the pathway shortens up we should begin to grow in love with the other world."

The first evening was devoted to welcomes, greetings and responses as follows: In behalf of educational interests, Mr. F. A. Nims; in behalf of churches, Rev. W. A. Hunsberger; in behalf of the W. C. T. U., Mrs. Anna Swan; our responses were voiced in well-chosen words by Mesdames Hollister, Moors and Boise. Cordial greetings came from fraternal delegates representing the I. O. G. T., Woman's Literary Club, Associated Charities, Woman's Relief Corps, Humane Society, Young People's Union, Home and Foreign Missionary Society and the Y. M. C. A.

The president's annual address was a clarion call to activity on all lines—full of thoughts like these: "We must carry the truth to those who will not seek us to hear it. Like the church we must resort to protracted service. We need women with sharp convictions, doing hard work for this reform. We are called out to a sacred cause on old guard with life and honor pledged, and like minute men to be ever ready. In such forces indifference, carelessness or unfaithfulness hurts like treason. I call you to your best, advocating closer organization, more platform agitation over all the state. Our departments are ideally great; we can only make them really effective by putting into their special lines more money and better activity."

Mrs. Benjamin, detained by the illness of her husband, was present only part of the time. Her parliamentary drill was very helpful, and on the motion that our new W. C. T. U. hall at Hackley Park be named Lathrap Hall, it was her thoughtful amendment that gave us the better name Mary T. Lathrap Hall.

After the president's address we took subscriptions for this hall and in a very few moments had over three hundred dollars subscribed, Mr. J. H. Johnston, of Grand Rapids, heading the list with his check for fifty dollars.

The papers were on the following subjects: "How can the local unions be made more effective?" Mrs. Faxon; "How is the department of capital and labor related to the other departments?" Mrs. Emery (not given, she being detained by illness); "Where are we at?" Mrs. Reynolds.

The first paper, by Mrs. Faxon, had these points: First, "tact," which she defined as running others' opinions to our own; second, promptness in all duties; third, have prepared programs, evening entertainments, keep in touch with women's clubs, advertise, but be sure to have something worth while. Her closing peroration was most impressive and suggestive. "Intelligence begets inspiration, inspiration begets enthusiasm, enthusiasm begets zeal, zeal begets consecration, consecration begets contribution."

To Mrs. Reynolds' question, "Where are we at?" the answer, from apparent action, should be, at Non-Partisanville, situated on Policy Creek. As it is house-cleaning time, let us move on, and be at Prohibition City, on the broad, clear river, No Compromise. The air is better there, nearer the 'City of God.'" This was the opening thought.

Reports of the corresponding secretary, who is also editor of the Michigan Union, were encouraging—for work and paper. From the treasurer's report we learned that the fifth and ninth districts pay the largest amount of dues, and the fifth and sixth largest amount to missionary fund.

The Y evening was a success. Mrs. Hollister, state superintendent of Y's presiding, Miss Clara Wheeler gave her kindergarten report, also recited with fine effect "Boy Wanted." Miss Clara Parrish was the speaker of the evening.

The last evening we had Mrs. Hoffman, who is always welcome to Michigan, and this time fully met the expectations of her large audience. The morning papers said she gave a temperance address out of the usual lines of thought. Mrs. Preston, our colored delegate from Detroit, a professional elocutionist, gave by request "Housetop Saints."

There were many little side affairs that were very pleasant. We gave up one afternoon for an excursion to Hackley Park to see the ground given us for a summer home by Mr. Hackley; of this Mrs. La Tour, our press superintendent, writes as follows: "I think our state president planned wisely and well when she secured this beautiful summer home. It will in the future be the oasis of the white-ribbon women of Michigan. The school of methods will be a great educator, and Mary T. Lathrap Hall will rank throughout the state with the Methodist auditorium, the state teachers' association building and other buildings as a credit to our state association. All honor to the promoters of the project."

The Muskegon union of unions, presented us all with hand-painted badges, and served us with meals on arrival of our trains Monday.

The recording secretary gave the president a block of oak to use with the gavel. This had been sent Mrs. Johnson from Connecticut, and was made by Mr. Israel Brown, of New London, from wood of the Governor Winthrop mansion over one hundred years old.

BREVITIES.

The officers were all reëlected.

We are entitled to twenty-one delegates to the National Convention, our delegate-at-large being Mrs. Dr. Henry A. Reynolds.

Mr. Soper, one of the Muskegon lawyers, addressed us with words of cheer as also Mr. Loomis, of Nebraska, who said his inspiration was gained many years ago by the words of Frances E. Willard.

Mrs. Quigley, of New Jersey, was our guest for a day. Mrs. Hoffman and herself by motion were made members of the convention.

Miss Newcomb's report on physical culture was supplemented with a drill that both in Delsarte gymnastics and Indian club swinging merited the eulogy she received from the president.

The resolutions on suffrage and prohibition were especially strong. The two daily papers gave us much kindly space and the reporters were very correct.

The music was very fine, both on piano, violin and in quartette, chorus and solo, with selections from Mendelssohn and Haydn.

The outside meetings held each morning for an hour were called workers' institutes, conducted in the interest of superintendents, county presidents, local officers and the Y's; each appointed a secretary to keep account of their work, and recommendations by them were read in open convention.

There had been changes in two of the districts at this convention, Mrs. A. J. Shepherd, of Commerce, representing the sixth, and Mrs. T. E. W. Adams, of Chesaning, the eighth.

I give you in closing this thought of Mrs. Lathrap's: "If any people stand with God with the ensign on the hill it is you of the W. C. T. U. Sisters, God needs you where you are, I want you to be brave and aggressive. Stay near God, and get the prophetic vision."

OUR NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL.

Not having had any experience with hospitals I had pictured them as tall, bare buildings divided into long rooms with a row of beds on each side in which lay the hopelessly sick. Old things have passed away and all things have become new since I have been a shut-in for several weeks at this lovely spot.

The building is a handsome, four-story brick standing back in a green yard which is well shaded with trees. If you were to walk into this building without a knowledge of what it is, you would think it a well ordered, spacious home in which a large family might take solid comfort. The rooms are handsomely furnished and well-ventilated. The quiet, kind-faced matron, the genial house physician, the sweet-faced girl nurses and last but not least of the household, Annie, the cook, all bend their energies toward making those who tarry there comfortable and happy. There is also a staff of the best physicians connected with the institution. Patients come from distant states to receive treatment here.

The hospital is in a quiet part of the city, 1619 Diversey avenue, three blocks from Lincoln Park. If you have seventy-five or a hundred dollars that you would like to put where it would bring you a comfortable income, you would better furnish a room in the National Temperance Hospital. I hope I may be able to do so soon myself. Generous donations are coming in daily in the way of delicacies for the sick.

I have a proposition to make to the school children. When I was in the schoolroom as a teacher I used to depend on them to help me out in my philanthropic ventures, and they rarely failed me. During the failure of crops in the Dakotas they carried many bundles of clothing to the schoolroom that were forwarded to the far West. I now ask something of the children of the Northwest—those large, mealy potatoes! Oh, yes, I know about them. I dug them from the ground myself when I lived on "my claim." Now don't you think it would be fine to send some of them to the sick people at the hospital? There is not a school in the Northwest but could send one barrel and you would like to do it I know. Just pick out about a half peck, each one of you, of the very nicest after they have matured, and get the biggest boy and your teacher interested and the results will be immense. You'll find that one barrel will not hold them. I shall make a visit to the hospital about the middle of October, for I know that I shall see some.

The children of the fruit growing districts will be glad to send some of those nice winter apples in the same way, since I have reminded them of it. They would have done so before but didn't happen to think of it. I am not commissioned to solicit for our hospital. The task is entirely self-imposed, but I want our boys and girls to have a shares of the returns that always come from helping in a good cause.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

THE Loyal Legion hymn on the children's page this week was written by a mother for her own little boy in the ranks of the L. T. L.

AT a special meeting of the Aiken, S. C., W. C. T. U. recently resolutions were passed in memory and appreciation of the late Sarah A. Gause.

MRS. LEITER, superintendent of the physical culture department, has been asked to prepare a paper on compulsory physical education to be read at the Educational Congress in Chicago the last week in July

THE prohibitionists of Glendora, S. Cal., are to have a grand picnic the Fourth of July. It is to be a big affair as ample preparations are manifest. Major and Mrs. E. T. Scott of New Jersey are the orators of the day.

MRS. GEN. BIDWELL writes THE UNION SIGNAL thus: "Through some mistake the work of Mrs. E. B. Blair, National organizer of Loyal Temperance Legions, has not been reported for California, which justice to Mrs. Blair, as well as personal gratitude for what she has done for Chico and other places in California will not permit me to allow to pass unnoticed. Mrs. Blair came to us early last spring and gave a 'chalk-talk,' resulting in the formation of an L. T. L. of over one hundred members, which intends not only to 'hold the fort,' but to carry on aggressive work. Mrs. Blair has the faculty of enlisting the interest and enthusiasm of her youthful audience to a remarkable degree, as well as of imparting instruction in a manner to fix it upon the memory. She generously gave a morning to the Indians of Rancho Chico which was so appreciated that the following Sunday we found their blackboard covered with almost perfect copies of the chalk-talk sketches, and that they had remembered all of her instruction, being able to repeat even her words. Permit me here to state that THE UNION SIGNAL was in error in accrediting to me the sending to it (a few months since) an extract from a leaflet about these Indians, published in 1891 by the Woman's National Indian Association. The statement was somewhat embarrassing to me under the circumstances. Finally, our prayer is for God's richest blessing upon Mrs. Blair, and that every union engage her services, and that she be less modest, to the end that her light be not concealed 'under a bushel.'

PARLOR MEETINGS.

The great encouragement all along the line, in this department of the work, emphasizes the fact that parlor meetings have come to the front and have come to stay. Your superintendent has given various joggings through these columns to the workers, and communications by letter, leaflets, plans of work and annual reports have been repeatedly sent to state superintendents. A fresh supply has just gone, with the list of questions to be answered for the next annual report. We trust these will receive the earnest attention of state superintendents, and the date fixed upon, October 1, gives ample time for all to collect the data from their state work. Our women are grand in work, but poor in reporting—let each do her best this year. We rejoice in the growth of this potent arm of the service. Every well conducted parlor meeting, means new membership and an added interest in public sentiment, and that, just where it is needed, in refined circles.

To State Superintendents of Parlor Work:

1. How many county and local Superintendents of Parlor Work in your State?
2. How many meetings held?
3. What is the character of these meetings?
4. How many new members gained?
5. How many honorary members?
6. What has been the growth of public sentiment induced by these meeting?
7. What style of meeting has been productive of most good?
8. Are you pushing work in your counties?

Please reply by October 1, adding any other items of interest.

National Supt. Parlor Meetings.

DIRECT LEGISLATION BY THE CITIZENSHIP THROUGH THE INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM, by J. W. Sullivan, issued by the New York True Nationalist Publishing Company, is a concise, clear and valuable exposition of the government of Switzerland, the only true democracy—direct rule of the majority—in the world. Every student of sociological questions and every reformer needs just such a book. For the American thinker there is no work which furnishes, in as compact a form, so much practical suggestion for correction of evils, under our own government which the American people are beginning to believe are not "necessary."

Those who are interested in the controversy touching a national flower, will read with interest a recent publication of Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Company, entitled, COLUMBIA'S EMBLEM: INDIAN CORN. It is a book of about sixty pages, appropriately bound in corn-colored covers, bearing a tasteful design made of corn ears. The book contains Edna Dean Proctor's beautiful poem, entitled, "Columbia's Emblem," also extracts from books published by Houghton, Mifflin & Company; selections from poems by Sidney Lanier and Benjamin F. Taylor, poems and quotations from Edward Everett Hale, Rutherford B. Hayes, Longfellow, Whittier and others. The work is prettily illustrated and complete in every way.

THE RUSSIAN REFUGEE, by Henry R. Wilson is what may be called a sensational novel, but among the better order of books so classed. The plot is intricate and well sustained, and the characters strongly delineated. The system of exile and the unflagging perseverance with which Russian justice pursues its victims are touched upon just enough to make legitimate the introduction of family life in a cave, subterranean passage, secret society rites, and other unusual situations. The author also introduces not inaptly theories of healing through the dominant power of another healthy mind in a healthy body. For a story book, pure and simple, THE RUSSIAN REFUGEE is a very acceptable production.

Charles H. Kerr & Co., Publishers, 175 Monroe Street, Chicago.

OLD KASKASKIA, by Mary Hartwell Catherwood is a story of local incident and interest, the town of Kaskaskia being at the juncture of the Mississippi and Okaw rivers. A flood, caused by the uprising of the "father of waters" lends a weird coloring to the story, as the heroes and heroines, seeking refuge from tottering houses and angry waters, gather under one roof. There, love and hate, old age already touched with dotage and young womanhood laid hold upon in its prime by death, negro slaves, and the aristocracy of an old French family, await together whatever may come, death or deliverance, and there the story reaches its climax, and love and jealousy and death claim their separate victims. The story is rich in description and faithful in its representation of the old French days on American soil.

THE ENDEAVORERS OF MAPLE GROVE, by Hattie Sleeper Gardner, is a vivacious story of the work, growth and influence of a Christian Endeavor Society. Working out from the center of one soul burdened for the salvation of another, it shows how God leads His children on from the faithful performance of the seemingly small duties near at hand to the discharging of greater responsibilities. From step to step these earnest Endeavorers are led on, until from a desire to help and uplift each other, they are convinced of duties in their citizenship and make heroic attacks against the strongholds of those who break the Sabbaths of the Lord and lay pitfalls for the virtue of men and women. Perhaps a quotation right here from the closing pages of the book may contain a suggestion for some societies not "in a story book": "The fight against the saloon had continued so relentlessly the first few years, that the older voters at last awakened to the fact that Prohibition—whether written upon the statute books or not—is efficacious, just in the degree that Christian and moral zeal makes it so. When, therefore, they became convinced that the Endeavor society had positively decided to allow no saloons in their midst, they had somewhat reluctantly given them a law for the suppression of the evil." . . . . "As public sentiment was thus educated, the Sunday theatre, Sunday newspapers, the base ball game . . . . became as eyesores, and were likewise eradicated, until, in just a few short years, the people looked with horror upon all those things which had been so common and could scarcely realize that their own beloved Maple Grove had ever been such a hot-bed of wickedness."

making what they call 'a bargain' and then put a plaster on their consciences by giving donations to 'decayed or incurable women' whom they have helped to make by their ill-treatment. Women will pick a fly out of a cream-jug, they are so tender-hearted, but will hunt the morning paper through to find a 'sacrificial sale,' will put on their best attire to go out and patronize it though it means starvation to women in less fortunate circumstances than their own. I would we had fewer subscription lists and more square dealing. I wish there were more women who would deduct half an hour's time, now spent in studying the styles of spring attire, and devote it to finding out for themselves the condition of the women of whom they buy."

Working women will never get good wages till they combine to get them; men say we have degraded their wages, and so we have, but it is on the principle that "men must work and women must weep," that is, the present idea of woman is that she shall be passive not active; supported, not supporting; while the facts are that oftentimes she is the sole maintainer of her relatives, both male and female. Workingmen seem more ready to help women strike for higher wages and better conditions than women are ready to help themselves. The fact is wage-earning men and women must combine, for their interests are identical. To their everlasting credit be it said, that the labor party in all countries places women and men on the same plane. This is the most cheering feature of the labor question.

Miss Florence Balgarnie's motion was seconded by Miss Gertrude Woodward, one of the delegates who is herself a wage-earner and whose sturdy speech was among the best in that brilliant series, which made this, as everybody said, the finest meeting of women they had ever witnessed. It was stated by one speaker that in 1887 it had been held that a property qualification made a woman, who would otherwise have been "under the coverture," the equal of a femme sole in the eye of the law. If women will study the meaning of these two phrases they will understand the true inwardness of the industrial equality of women. It is the very crux of the woman movement, and we might well abandon all other lines of effort and combine to secure this, were it not that this can never be brought about except through a reform in the laws, and hence the political enfranchisement of women is part and parcel of their industrial enfranchisement. This council abundantly proved that working women as well as working men have made this great discovery.

No subject was treated with so much wit as that living issue, disestablishment and disendowment of the Episcopal church in Wales. Mrs. Wynford Philipps, wife of a member of Parliament from Wales, and herself one of the most eloquent women in England, supported this resolution in one of the best speeches that we heard. Miss Jenkins of Carmarthen spoke to the same purpose, and proved her right to rank as a first-class orator if she will make the public advocacy of great reforms her specialty in life. Miss Jenkins is not only a woman of remarkable talent, but of first-rate education and practical ability. She manages a large farm of her own, and can give points to stock growers and herdsmen. She is the Lady Bountiful of her community, and being young, alert, and earnest, is a woman who will be heard from as the years pass on. Some of the statements in her speech and in that of Miss Isabella Ford, one of England's great labor leaders, are so remarkable that I made notes of them for a future article.

The council took a strong position in favor of arbitration, urging that "the treaty now pending between Great Britain and the United States of America be concluded," and taking the ground that war should cease. The Zulu question was ably handled by Miss Colenso, daughter of the famous bishop and Miss Conybeare, one of the leaders of the "Woman's Liberal." The resolution asked the government to modify the present system and utilize the influence of the Zulu chiefs to establish order and good government in the country.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

While he yet spake there cometh one from the ruler of the synagogue's house, saying to him, Thy daughter is dead, trouble not the Master. But when Jesus heard it he answered him, saying, Fear not; believe only, and she shall be made whole.—Luke 8: 49, 50.

Mrs. M. J. Edmonson, 34 South Wilkinson St., Dayton, O., sends as a gift to the Temple a copy of a picture, handsomely framed, painted by her late husband, who was a noted artist. The picture is intensely realistic. It represents a man sitting in a drunken stupor, with head bent until it almost touches his knees, grasping tightly with one hand a demijohn. From the battered hat to the worn shoes, with the toes obtruding, all tell the wretched story of a wrecked life. Standing beside the unconscious man is his little barefooted son, in rags, bitterly weeping. This pathetic picture speaks with more eloquence of the sorrow and poverty inflicted by intemperance than any words of tongue or pen. All L. T. L. and W. C. T. U. reading rooms would do well to have a copy of this picture on their walls. The price of the chromo, which is a fine copy of the original, is only $2. Its size is 20x24.

The McKeesport, Pa. W. C. T. U. sends a check for $100. The money was raised through the mite-box system and was contributed by twenty-three persons, headed by the president Mrs. McKnight, and the other officers of the union. The Stockton, Cal., W. C. T. U. sends $65.25 on a pledge from a mite-box social. Why will not all unions adopt the mite-box system for one year? They would be sure to secure a hundred dollars in this way—if each union would appoint a bright woman as Temple superintendent to attend to the work. It is a sight which gladdens all W. C. T. U. eyes—the multitude of temperance people from all parts of the country that daily throngs the beautiful corridors of the Temple leading to Willard Hall. If on the marble panel of each state could be seen recorded a complete roster of unions in the state, as those who paid for the erection of the building, what an uplift of the debt it would be and of temperance work—to be gained in no other way. The power of faith in the individual soul wrought out in works makes the kingdom of God come in the human heart and to the world. Will not all live unions undertake this work for the coming year?

There seems still to be such a demand for the little photographic group containing the pictures of Miss Willard, Lady Henry Somerset and the founder of the Temple with their autographs attached—given the past year to all persons who secured $3.65 in their mite-boxes, that we are induced to offer it again this year to all who secure the above amount in a mite-box, whether it be given in the name of an individual or on behalf of a union. If the latter, the secretary must certify to the person having paid the amount. This offer stands good until May, 1894.

Mrs. Mattie L. Spencer, president of the Alabama W. C. T. U., sends a check for $57.65, toward state tablet for Alabama. In speaking of the late attack on the Temple management she says: "I do believe it has shown the loving faith and loyalty of our women as nothing else could." Forty-five dollars have been received through Mrs. Sada Harrington, from the eighth district, Iowa, W. C. T. U., as a last payment on its pledge of $100. The Clearfield union sends $30 and the Corydon union $15, of the above amount. The Brainard, Minn., W. C. T. U. also sends $45, which completes a $100 pledge. The W's and Y's of Normal, Ill., W. C. T. U. are raising $100 for the Temple. They have just sent $26.50 on their pledge. The Nappance, Ind., W. C. T. U. has sent $25 as a first installment on a pledge of $100. The Morrison, Ill., union sends $21, presumably on a $100 pledge.

The dear children are also at work for the Temple. The L. T. L. of Republic, Mich., sends $25 through Mrs. Kate Verran, the superintendent of juvenile work in the twelfth district, Michigan. She writes that the children are trying to raise $100 and that they have worked very hard for what they have forwarded; $10 has been received from the L. T. L., of Idaho Falls, Idaho, first payment on $100. The L. T. L. of West Newton, Mass., sends $3.65; $9.70 has been sent by the L. T. L., of Belleview, Pa.; one-half goes to the Mary Allen West memorial, and the other to the Jennie Casseday tablet. Mrs. I. E. Langston, West Plains, Mo., sends $7.30, the contents of two mite-boxes, filled by two L. T. L. boys. She writes "they are untiring workers in our cause." We are sorry she does not give the names of these two noble young Legioners. If all the L. T. L. boys and girls would raise an equal amount we would have money enough to pay off the entire indebtedness of the Temple. Who will first send to me for a box and try? The L. T. L's must not forget that at the dedication of the Temple, which is now postponed until October, in order to have Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset with us, the three Legions that have contributed the most to the building fund of the Temple, will each be presented with a beautiful silk banner.

A two-cent stamp sent to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the Temple, Chicago, will secure a mite-box. Remember, any one placing in the box $2.50 from May 1, 1893, to May 1, 1894, will receive the lovely Columbian souvenir made of aluminum, with a cut of the Temple on one side and on the reverse the face of Miss Willard and the founder of the Temple, with suitable inscriptions. All money orders should be made out in the name of the treasurer, William D. Preston, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara Johnson, the Temple, Chicago,

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

THE second anniversary meeting of Willard Hall, Mount Vernon, N. Y., was held June 6, and was a red-letter occasion. The Y's decorated the platform beautifully with palms, potted plants and our country's emblem. Mrs. Burt made the address of the evening and a glee club gave charming selections. Several hundred dollars were subscribed toward the payment for the hall and a good time enjoyed, in which the Y's greatly assisted. The union has been in existence many years, the secretary having served fourteen, but is as relentless as ever for the extermination of the liquor traffic.

A HANDSOME banner was presented by the state superintendent of work among colored people at the last Pennsylvania state convention. It was of scarlet silk, hung on a stretcher with gilt spears on each end. In the center was an artistically painted scroll held by a colored man's hand on which was printed "Pennsylvania Colored People"; from underneath the scroll projected roses and trailing flowers. A motto in gilt letters arched the top, "In the name of our God we set up our banners;" below, "For God and Home and Native Land." It was trimmed with gold gimp, fringe, cord and tassels, with the American eagle perched on the top of the banner staff.

THE L. T. L. superintendent of Wyoming, Miss Emma E. Page, reports a recent visit among unions en route to Olympia, Wash. Every Wyoming union visited has an L. T. L., thanks to the efficient work of Mrs. Blair last winter. Some companies have more than fifty pledge members whose enthusiasm and responsive interest are as refreshing as a cooling spring in a thirsty land. In one town where the alkali dust was ankle deep in the streets, a little girl who was asked to repeat the National motto, began with great energy, "Shiver, King Alcohol," but the mirth in the faces about her checked any farther words.

ONONDAGA county, N. Y., W. C. T. U. met in sixteenth annual convention at Summit Station, May 24–25. The beauty of the surroundings made the delegates all the more eager to expunge the "blot upon the picture"—the liquor traffic. Reports showed that earnest efforts have been made in the juvenile, literature and press work, German work, soldiers' and sailors', flower mission, evangelistic and Sabbath observance. Resolutions adopted among others were that a ship's library be furnished by the county union and that a county paper be published. Sixty delegates answered to roll call, and Mrs. Ferguson, of Syracuse, was elected president. Children from the schools entertained the convention with songs and a unique geography address in the afternoon. Mrs. Jump, of Albany, state secretary of the Y's, gave the address of the evening.

Don't Mince Matters, but take all the help you can get. And you can get more of it, with Pearline, than with anything else that's safe to use. Everybody knows about Pearline for washing clothes.

We talk more about that, because of all the wear and tear and labor it saves, by doing away with that ruinous rub, rub, rub. But don't let its help stop there. With anything that will wash at all, Pearline will save you something in the washing. Dishes, paint, woodwork, marble, windows, carpets (without taking up), milk cans, silver, jewelry, etc.—these are only some of the things that are washed best with Pearline.

Beware of imitations. 356 JAMES PYLE, N.Y.

ARE YOU Sterilizing Baby's Milk?

How many mothers there are who would use a Sterilizer if they but understood its utility.

"It is probably not too much to say," writes Walter Mendelson, M. D., of New York, in Babyhood, "that the process known as Sterilizing milk has done more towards lessening infant mortality and illness than any other invention of the past fifty years. By far the best process that has come under my observation, and the one that I recommend above all others is the

WHY WRITE TO THE EDITOR?

And sign yourself "A constant reader" or "An old subscriber," if you want to know when Christopher Columbus discovered America, or the date of the great fire of London, or what is good for whooping cough.

It is true the editor is only too willing to oblige you, but why get your information at second hand? Is it not better to have it in your own head, ready for use at all times, and to realize in its full significance that "knowledge is power?"

All knowledge is useful, but well assorted, well digested knowledge will enable you to fill satisfactorily any position in life to which you may be called.

How is the best way to acquire this knowledge? Not by a stray question, asked at odd times, but by having by you, in convenient form, the best and most carefully arranged compendium of human knowledge extant.

You know with what care the present edition of the Bible was revised. How many learned men consulted for months over each chapter, each paragraph. How every word was weighed with thoughtful care, so as to bring out its best and truest meaning.

In the same way scholarly men, well versed in all branches of knowledge, selected on account of their eminence in the professions which they adorned, labored for years to produce in concentrated form a comprehensive library of all useful facts. The result of their labors was the Revised Encyclopedia Britannica. It is a wonderful work. It contains the history of all things and an explanation of natural phenomena. It is as useful to the carpenter as it is to the poet. It remains for us to place this useful work within reach of the people. For the price of one cigar a day, the poorest workman may make himself master of any art, and have at home a library that will be the pride and delight of his wife and children.

A GREAT OPPORTUNITY.

On receipt of only One Dollar we will forward to you, charges prepaid, the entire set of 20 volumes, the remaining $9.00 to be paid at the rate of 10 cents a day (to be remitted monthly). A beautiful dime savings bank will be sent with the books; in which the dime may be deposited each day. This edition is printed from new, large type on a fine quality of paper, and strongly bound in heavy manilla paper covers, which with proper care will last for years. Bear in mind that the entire 20 volumes are delivered to your address, with all charges paid to any part of the United States.

CUT THIS OUT AND SEND TO THE UNION SIGNAL.

PUBLISHERS UNION SIGNAL:

Please deliver to me the entire set of 20 volumes of Revised Encyclopedia Britannica, as above described, together with your Dime Savings Bank, for which I inclose One Dollar, and further agree to remit 10 cents a day (remitting the same monthly) until the remaining $9.00 is fully paid.

Signal Notes.

A SANSKRIT school for Hindu girls has been opened in Calcutta.

IT is stated that Persia is the only country in the world where the telegraph is practically unknown.

THERE are eighty thousand barmaids employed in England, averaging fourteen hours of work each day.

ONE copy of a newspaper does for a whole village in India, as it is passed from one family to another until it is literally read to pieces.

LAST year, New York city paid four million dollars for schooling, seven million dollars for amusements, and sixty million dollars for drink.

MRS. JELLA NUTTALL, a well-known American archæologist, is especially interested in Mexican antiquities and has discovered the secret of the ancient Mexican calendar.

NEW ORLEANS is one of the latest converts to the practical benefits of the cooking school. Sixty of the leading society women have been studying the art of scientific cooking this past winter.

FOURTEEN Christian Endeavor Societies of New Zealand recently held a convention. That organization has grown by great leaps in Australia, the circulation of their monthly paper increasing almost two hundred copies per month.

JACOB A. RISS, in speaking of the value and necessity of coffee-houses, said recently: "We shall be on something like equal terms with the devil at last, when the beginning has really been made of a respectable competition with the saloon."

LITTLE Denmark has shown wonderful zeal in the cause of International Arbitration, sending in a petition signed by two hundred and thirty-four thousand persons and this out of a population of only two million, two hundred thousand.

THE ruler of Benares in India is conducting a great temperance work among his people. He is an enthusiast in philanthropic work. His temperance addresses to the thousands of pilgrims who flock to the holy city are very remarkable in effect.

A LIQUOR organ not long ago expounded its belief that in fighting prohibition the church was not the principal opponent, as, according to figures, the Prohibition party does not receive at the polls, two per cent of the votes of preachers and church members.

THE Public Ledger of Philadelphia is the best proof that a Sunday edition is not necessary to the financial success of a great paper. It is second to but one in income in this country, and the editor has set a good example by excluding disreputable advertisements.

SIR JOHN LUBBOCK, an authority on insect life fed some ants alcohol saturated food. Like human beings they became "tipsy." When the other ants discovered their condition they picked the creatures up and dropped them into the nearest water. Men might go to the ant and learn wisdom of her in this as well as some other ways.

OUR friend and W. W. C. T. U. member, Mrs. D. M. Drysdale, Liverpool, England, sends a notice of a "home" in which she is deeply interested, which has been established for some years as a resting place for those coming to and going from the states and Canada. This is the Wortley Rest, 69 Duke street, Liverpool, England—it has recently been moved into fresh quarters, a pleasant, cheerful house, in quite a central location, where women and girls may obtain good board and lodging at reasonable terms. Mrs. Drysdale is very anxious that its existence should be widely known, that it may be helpful, where help is so often needed among strangers in a strange land or city, and those who have been privileged to know anything of the workings of the home even in its most limited surroundings, can testify heartily to its quiet, homelike comfort and restfulness, the outcome of long consideration and sanctified common sense. Further details may be obtained on application to the following address, the Wortley Rest, 69 Duke street, Liverpool, England.

FURNISHED HOUSE CAN BE SECURED FOR THIRTY DAYS.

Situated on the Grand Trunk and Illinois Central R. R., being convenient to stop without going into the City, and more accessible to the Fair Grounds than the City itself.

This is a three-story brick building, cool and airy rooms, with first-class table.

Give a few days' notice of your intended visit and we will reserve you a room, meet you at the station and guarantee satisfaction. Parties of four or six can have suite connecting if desired.

CHARLES G. FRENCH, Harvey, Ill.

World's Fair Rest.

At the corner of Evans avenue and Sixty-ninth street is a pleasant brick building of three stories perfectly new, which the proprietor has decided to use during the World's Fair for the accommodation of guests. Rooms will be rented at prices from $3 to $5 per week. Lunches can be obtained on the premises, and there are several Restaurants within two blocks. The "Rest" is within comfortable walking distance of the Fair, and one block of the cable cars on Cottage Grove Ave.; five cents takes one to the entrance to the World's Fair. It is the purpose of the proprietor to meet a demand for low-price rooms for persons of moderate means. Send for circular, which gives all detailed information, to GEORGE M. COOK, Proprietor, 3742 Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago.

THEY WERE STARVING THE BABY.

My baby weighed 8 pounds at birth, 15 pounds when three months old and 12 pounds when four months. I think we were starving it, for no food agreed with it. Dr. Hodgdon of Dedham, who was last called in, recommended lactated food and in two months the little one gained nine pounds, all by using lactated food.

I understand that Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt., who prepare lactated food, will send a regular-sized package free to any mother who writes for it. No mother can afford to go through the summer months, so dangerous to children, without lactated food, which physicians tell me is known to them as the food that saves babies' lives.

It is due to the Harvey Land Association that the public know that the so-called Harvey Temperance Hotel advertised by Mr. Walter Thomas Mills is not located in Harvey proper and never had any connection with the Harvey Land Association.

Neither has the Mutual Home Improvement Co., also advertised by Mr. Mills any connection with the Harvey Land Association.

The Temperance Hotel is located near 147th street, just north and outside the village of Harvey.

THE WESTERN FEMALE SEMINARY.

The thirty-ninth year of this well-known Seminary opens on the 13th of September next, and we invite the attention of our readers to the advertisement in another column. It is situated near the beautiful little village of Oxford, in Butler county, one of the most beautiful and picturesque regions in Ohio. Its modern and commodious buildings are located in a commanding position, and are surrounded by a handsome campus of sixty-five acres of ground covered with native forest trees. After thirty-eight years of successful history, the institution is well equipped for the education of young women. It has a Faculty of twenty-two members, representing graduates of the best colleges and seminaries of the country in its corps of instructors. Courses of lectures and concerts add much to the literary, scientific and musical advantages of the institution in a very helpful and stimulating way.

A WORD TO WORLD'S FAIR VISITORS.

In our issue of April 13 on page 1, we called attention to the delightful accommodations offered visitors to the World's Fair by the World's Fair Temperance Encampment Association.

We are pleased to do so again, having observed that they are doing just exactly as they offered in their advertisements.

Our advertising manager, Mr. S. H. Bloom, has frequently visited the camp and reports that it is situated in a charming grove of shade trees, laid out in streets with ample supply of drinking water, and complete sanitary arrangements; he also tested their thirty-five cent meals served in camp restaurant, and was well pleased; they are well worth the price.

The camp is close to the Fair grounds, any good walker would enjoy walking to the Cottage Grove Avenue entrance; one visitor remarked, "he preferred to walk," however, it is not necessary to tire yourself walking to the grounds, as you will have enough of that after you get there; you can take the Elevated Railway, which passes right by the camp and be landed inside the Fair grounds.

Their kindergarten and nursery for children is excellent; while you are visiting the Fair you can leave your children in charge of a competent lady, and they can study, sing, romp and play, which they would not do in a house or hotel.

You need not have any fear of discomfort from rainstorms, as the tents are all new, well put up, with board floors and double or fly roofs.

If you want a cool, refreshing, restful place at night, or when you are slightly indisposed, you cannot make a mistake in selecting your quarters at the World's Fair Temperance Encampment, 59th street and Indiana avenue, Chicago.

Write them at once and secure their circulars and take advantage of their offer of ten per cent reduction, as seen in last week's issue of THE UNION SIGNAL.

THE ROAD TO RUIN.

It is a broad highway traveled by many. Extravagance, imprudence, dissipation, these are prominent milestones on an avenue strewn with wrecks. Some people follow this road with a persistence and rapidity indicative of an unsettled intellect. Among the many follies of which mankind is guilty, none is more observable than the neglect of health. A slight cold or cough, a fit of indigestion, a gradual falling off in flesh, appetite and vigor, these are not manifestations which it is safe to neglect. Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil, with the Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda, is a medicine which not only has the highest sanction as a pulmonic, but is recommended by physicians in all cases involving loss of flesh and strength. It is admirably adapted to the wants of children suffering from malnutrition and anaemia, and to ladies in delicate health. Scott's Emulsion is positively agreeable in flavor, and never causes aversion to persons who detest medicines as a rule. Perfectly assimilable by the dyspeptic, the vigor, which it imparts to the organs of digestion impels them to regular action and insures perfect conversion of the food into the elements of nutrition which, being taken up by the blood in due proportion, enrich it and promote the acquisition of flesh. Use the Emulsion with persistence and regularity.

CALIFORNIA.

The fame of the climate of California draws to that charming state new friends every year, particularly from sections where long, severe winters, followed by trying spring seasons, work such disastrous results among the weak and debilitated.

The great improvements in passenger train service, higher degrees of comfort in the cars, and shorter time required on the trip, combined with the cheapness of the excursion tickets now being sold to California and back by the Santa Fé Route, make the journey agreeable and, one can almost say, economical. The many delightful resorts now established in California afford every comfort and luxury desired by the fastidious, and present unique attractions.

The Hotel del Coronado at San Diego, the Raymond at Pasadena, the Redondo at Redondo Beach and the hotels at Santa Barbara, Monterey, Riverside, Los Angeles and many other points, have grown as famous as any on the Atlantic Coast—and a fact that should not be forgotten is that they are resorts all the year around, although the greatest number of people from the East are in California between the months of November and May.

Write to John J. Byrne, Asst. Passenger Traffic Manager, 723 Monadnock Block Chicago, Ill., if you are interested in California, and he will send you some reading matter.

The Duke of Veragua sailed for Spain July 1.

The Chautauqua Assembly opened its twentieth season, July 1.

Canada celebrated its twenty-sixth natal anniversary at the World's Fair on Saturday.

Anthony J. Drexel, the great banker, died from apoplexy in Carlsbad, Germany, June 30.

President Cleveland is taking a vacation at Buzzard's Bay, previous to the called session of Congress.

The International Epworth League convention closed at Cincinnati July 2, after an important four days' session.

The Wanamaker Sunday-closing case was taken under advisement, July 1, by Judge Jenkins, of the United States circuit court.

The Evans Dispensary Bill of South Carolina went into effect July 1. The press reports a wild saturnalia the night before the new law's advent.

Senator Stanford's will was probated June 30. His wife is named as sole executrix. Leland Stanford Jr. University, at Palo Alto, Cal., receives $2,500,000.

President Cleveland has called an extra session of Congress, August 7, for the purpose of considering, and, if possible, alleviating the present financial stringency.

Mrs. Potter Palmer has given her official salary, amounting to $6,048, to the fund for admitting the poor children of Chicago to the World's Fair. July 27 will be Poor Children's Day.

Governor Altgeld, of Illinois, who pardoned the three Chicago anarchists last week, was roundly scored by many ministers in their pulpits last Sunday. The press of the country, with solitary exceptions, has also bitterly denounced the act.

The International Society of Young People's Christian Endeavor convened at Montreal, Canada, July 5. Its sessions were presided over by President Clark, who has just returned from his long journey around the world upon which he embarked immediately after the New York convention last summer.

The International Model Sunday-school building, at the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Stony Island avenue, near one of the entrances to the Fair grounds, was dedicated last Saturday afternoon. Three religious services will be held every day of the week till the close of the Fair. The building was erected at a cost of $20,000, half of which was given by Chicago Sunday-schools.

The one thousand students of the Indiana state Normal are in rebellion against the faculty and trustees, because of the removal of a popular professor, and as a consequence the large senior class of sixty students was refused graduation last Friday. Four young lady members of the class were granted certificates which will permit them to teach in the state.

IN order to permit our force to have a full half day once a week at the Fair, the W. T. P. A. offices are closed at twelve o'clock Saturdays. If visiting friends will remember this, much disappointment will be averted.

WILL all the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL please note that letters from America to England require a five-cent stamp for each one-half ounce? Letters are being constantly sent weighing one ounce, which require ten cents postage, with only a two-cent stamp on. In consequence, the receiver of the letter is charged in England sixteen cents, or double the lacking postage. We modestly suggest the same caution to our English friends.

MRS. STEVENS, president of Maine W. C. T. U., writes from her home, Portland, under recent date: "The Royal Commission of Inquiry upon the liquor traffic, appointed by the Canadian Parliament, with Sir Joseph Hickson as chairman, are in our city at the present time. They are interviewing both friends and foes of the prohibitory law, trying to see if it is a success and would be a wise law for Canada to adopt. I took my turn to-day at being interviewed in a sitting of about two hours."

EVEN the Chicago Tribune, which has clamored long and loud for the "laboring man's rights to an open Sunday Fair'," has forgotten its first love, and now that the attendance on the Sabbath has fallen so far below its expectations, recommends that the entrance fee be reduced to twenty-five cents, thus doubling the number of admissions, and thereby increasing the earnings of the concessionaires. How are the mighty fallen! No longer is heard the plea for the "education of the masses by inspection of the marvels of art and science." The "almighty dollar" is plainly in the foreground, stripped of all subtle reasoning and delusions. The people did not want a Sunday Fair, and they are saying so in a very emphatic way—by staying away from it. The Directory have made a sad mistake.

IN another column is a vigorous article from Rev. Herrick Johnson, D. D., the world-known prohibition Presbyterian divine of Chicago. This paper roused much comment in the recent World's Temperance Congress. It makes a fine and much needed discrimination between Principle and Method, which should be "learned by heart" by every practical thinker in temperance ranks. But the W. C. T. U. must protest that the writer—in his meritorious zeal to unite by concession the many-hued temperance forces—degrades total abstinence to the level of a method. We look upon it as the foundation principle of the temperance cause, and "the drinking of alcohol as a sin per se" because it destroys the light of God's spirit in the soul and wrecks the body. For this cause a man must preëmpt the territory round his own mouth for prohibition; and to carry out the whole gospel law of love to his neighbor, and for consistency's sake, he must demand prohibition for every area he can reach. The raison d'être of the Prohibitionist inheres just here—and not otherwise. Next week THE UNION SIGNAL will publish an able article from W. Jennings Demorest on "The Necessity for Prohibition of the Liquor Traffic by Political Party Action."

ONE end of the great Horticultural Hall at the Columbian Exposition—opposite the most magnificent display ever made of the fruits of the earth, God-given for the healing of the nations—is a great wine exhibit from every state and country. The most conspicuous and startling object in the California stall is Kate Field's full-length portrait, on an easel, in the midst of the bottles and kegs. It is true the Viticultural Society owes her a debt for service, that—for a woman—was beyond price, but could it not have paid her a less questionable compliment than making her a spectacle to the nations of the earth as the first and only reputable woman who advertised the liquor traffic on the public platform? The center of Missouri's wine exhibit is the state shield. Over it are the words: "In Wine is Truth." On it is the great motto: Salus Populi Suprema Lex-Esto—the people's safety is the supreme law. We recommend to the citizens of Missouri to start a commission of inquiry to discover how much of her "people's safety" inheres in the wine trade—or other wares of the liquor traffic. If her men have not the time to investigate let them turn the "job" over to the women, with Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman at the head, and we guarantee that in thirty days "truth in wine" will "drop," and at least a third part of the "woe to the inhabiters" of Missouri will drop with it.

WE miss from our exchange list our old and highly prized friend, the Christian Union, and find in its place The Outlook, a name which we do not like so well, because too general. An outlook is a good thing, but not nearly so good as Christian unity, which was the primary object of this esteemed exchange.

THE Fourth of July is to be "America's Day" at the Fair grounds. Colossal preparations are being made for a celebration which shall surpass all previous years in noise and magnificence. The eagle will scream louder than ever; Chicago will have the biggest procession ever seen, hundreds of bands, a gorgeous illumination, and fireworks the like of which the world has never known. It is fitting that this day should, as the management promises, "stand out as the red-letter day, not only of the Fair season, but of the close of the century." Yankee Doodle will be played by all nations represented at Jackson Park upon every conceivable instrument. Old Liberty Bell, enjoying the well-earned repose of a serene old age which comes from a consciousness of "something accomplished, something done," will in silent dignity receive the homage of assembled nations; while New Liberty Bell, cast from historic relics contributed by different states, will, touched by a woman's hand, ring out in jubilant tones the old era of strife and bloodshed, and ring in the new order to which the World's Fair points the way; it will "ring out the thousand wars of old and ring in the thousand years of peace." When at high noon the Columbian Bell begins to peal forth its triumphant pæan to Liberty, every bell in Chicago will join the sounding chorus to the accompaniment of booming cannon and fusillading guns. Every church bell, every school bell, every bell in the land, is asked to unite in swelling the prophetic harmony, until, echoing round the world, these liberty bells shall proclaim the universal brotherhood of man, the reign of universal peace, "the Christ that is to be."

WILLARD HALL noon meetings continue in interest and the attendance grows daily. The cause of Christ and temperance are ever the chief topics, but each meeting is a law unto itself as concerns the speakers and discussions. The real "presiding genius," although not always the visible one, is Mrs. Daisy Hubbard Carlock, vice-president of Illinois W. C. T. U. and secretary of the Chicago Central union, which rents the hall and conducts these meetings. Mrs. Carse's many duties, especially at the noon hour, prevent her frequent attendance, but when she is present much enthusiasm is manifested for this "greatest builder among women." Miss Ada Melville, the book and magazine reviewer for THE UNION SIGNAL, presides at the organ and "ye editors" drop in as frequently as their heavy office work will permit. Last Friday, two National officers, Mrs. Buell and Miss Pugh, assisted in the exercises which were uncommonly interesting because of the presence of a distinguished gentleman from India, Mr. P. L. Nagpurkar, a member of the Bombay presidency, and a warm friend of reform of every sort, being a member of the Indian Temperance Association and a strong councillor of Pundita Ramabai in the conduct of her child-widows' school in Poona, which now has forty-two pupils resident and several day pupils. Mr. Nagpurkar spoke warmly and eloquently upon the subject of Great Britain's traffic in alcoholic liquors and opium in India. "We formed our temperance association," he said, "and called upon England to stop this traffic. What reply did we receive? Simply this: 'We must look to revenue before the morals of the people!'" He said the British claimed that they were forced to take the liquor traffic under their control to prevent "illicit distillation," but that previous to such control a vast majority of the Hindus were total abstainers. Illinois' superintendent of scientific temperance instruction, Mrs. Clara Coombs, also addressed the same audience upon the important work of her department.

THE VIKINGS.

BY KATE LUNDEN.

Long centuries ere the caravels of Spain
Had blazed a highway o'er the trackless main,
A northland dragon spread his wings to flight.
He wooed the winds, he kissed each foamy crest,
And baring to the waves his storm scarred breast
He passed in sunset billows out of sight.

He passed from sight, but in the dusky west
Some later moons espied the seabird's nest,
And saw him fold the tired wings to sleep.
And only made a note when Vinland sank,
A new Atlantis, in oblivion's deep.

The Vikings came, they saw, but conquered not;
What they had found their valiant sons forgot,
And pathless rolled the ocean as before.
Columbus triumphed. While a scoffing world
Above his head its scorn-tipped arrows hurled,
The cross he planted on San Salvador.

. . . . . .

Long centuries since the Spanish caravels
Cut their historic path through gale-swept swells,
Another dragon left the native shores.
His form was ancient, though his frame was young,
And with an old-time leap he windward swung
When nineteenth century Vikings manned the oars.

Hail modern Sea Kings! Scions of a race
Whose deep, though time-worn footprints yet we trace
In western soil, on isles of southern seas.
Columbia greets you! At the shrine of fame
She kneels to-day to crown a long lost name—
Leif, Eric's son, the northern Genoese.

MRS. MANNERING'S "WHY."

BY FAYE HUNTINGTON.

"Why should I belong to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union?" It was with this question that Mrs. Mannering was wont to turn aside all invitations to join the Rushville union. From the tone and manner in which she invariably put the question it was plain that she considered it quite unanswerable. Her friends sometimes tried to show her why every woman, loving her God, her home and her native land, should wear the white ribbon; but she would not be persuaded. Was it because she refused to listen to their pleading voices, because she would not give the matter her careful consideration, that the answer came to her written as with her heart's blood, emphasized with dark sorrow-lines, burned into her soul as with fire?

Hers was a Christian home—a lovely Christian home; a home where faith and love and brotherly kindness, and all the rest of the graces, had been cherished and had grown except temperance; that had become so dwarfed by neglect and coldness as to be quite lost sight of. Mrs. Mannering was, according to her own statement, a temperance woman. She was a total abstainer—well, she was not very particular about a bit of brandy in the fruit cake and mince pies. She believed in total abstinence for the majority of people and this was about the extent of her temperance convictions; temperance organizations, temperance reform and temperance legislation awakened very little interest in her mind.

Accustomed to hear the subject mentioned only with an air of weariness; to hear temperance addresses pronounced dry and stupid; to see temperance literature cast aside with indifference or with contempt, is it any wonder that the young Mannerings had no decided temperance views?

One bright winter day Mrs. Mannering and her daughter Helen were sitting together in the library, very comfortable and happy. The mother, her chair drawn near the open fire, was busy with a piece of embroidery. Occasionally, Helen looking up from her own absorbing occupation would exclaim:

"Mamma, how exquisitely lovely that is!" or "Those sprays of forget-me-nots are simply perfect!" And the mother would smile at this enthusiastic admiration of her handiwork, thinking softly the while of the careful stitches she was secretly putting into a breadth of white satin designed for Helen's bridal robe!

Presently, glancing from the window, Helen said: "Mrs. Elbridge is coming in!"

"Will you go to the door, dear—Jane is out—and bring her in here, it is warmer than the parlors?"

Mrs. Mannering greeted her visitor very cordially, but her face took on a peculiar expression as her eyes fell upon the bow of white ribbon worn by her friend. Helen's unspoken thought, quite in sympathy with her mother's feeling, was: "I cannot understand how a woman of Mrs. Elbridge's good taste and culture can bring herself to wear that white-ribbon badge! It is not as a rule worn by society people; nearly all the women that I know who wear it are quite of the common sort!"

The two women chatted familiarly of various common interests. Belonging to the same church they naturally talked of Christian work as carried on in their own denomination and in their local church. Both were keenly alive to the interests of missions, home and foreign; Mrs. Mannering deplored the indifference of the mass of Christian women to the cause, waxed indignant over the exportation of rum to the Congo region, because of the affect upon missions, sharply censured the British government for so long permitting the opium traffic in India, and criticised the action of the United States in regard to the Indians, Mrs. Elbridge heartily sympathizing in her views upon all these topics.

Presently the visitor said: "I came to see you to-day with a special purpose; our Woman's Christian Temperance Union meets to-morrow for the annual meeting and I have ventured to come once more to ask you to join us."

"O don't ask me! Now really, why should I join the Woman's Christian Temperance Union?"

The same old response sprang readily to her lips. It was the same unanswerable argument which had served her purpose in the past, but Mrs. Elbridge was not disposed to accept this and made an effort to convince her friend that there were reasons why she should join the organization. She tried to prove to her that interest in one's home, in one's sons and daughters, in the purity of society, and the safety of the nation ought to lead one to join an organization whose object is the protection of these interests. She said:

"I do not think any mother can afford to stand aloof from the love and sympathy and prayers and strengthening influences of the 'organized motherhood' of the world —the Woman's Christian Temperance Union."

Mrs. Mannering excused herself on the ground of home duties, church duties, the safety of her own sons and daughters in their sheltered home, which made it unnecessary for her to seek outside help, the fact that the work might bring her into contact with people, and take her into places not to her taste. She said:

"My older children are already Christians, and I do not fear for them. I think that is the secret of safety, to bring them early into the fold."

"But," said her friend, "there are dangers for our children, shelter them however we may, guide them as we will. It is a sad fact that many do wander away and fall, and parents sorrow without hope. And we question why? Is it not too often because we leave them in ignorance of the wiles of the enemy? Or because we have welcomed into our homes this enemy in some of his many guises? Or we have not done our utmost to expel him from the community? When we see evidence that the child has in his heart the germ of righteousness we are apt to consider the work done and safety ensured. But there is no safety while he is yet ignorant of the dangers that surround him. We may have all confidence in our children as to their integrity of purpose, but while we trust them we cannot trust the world. My dear friend, our work is many-sided. We must educate the young in principles of purity and sobriety, and we must fight the saloon as well as comfort and aid those who suffer from the curse."

"Yes, I realize all this, and I am trying to train my children wisely, and that answers your first point; as for the second the men ought to be able to attend to their part of the work."

"But if they do not, or if they cannot, what then? We do not consider it our place to belong to a fire company, but if your house be on fire and there are no men at hand able or willing to put out the flames, you do not stand long for propriety. You work with the means at your command. Because the ballot, the engine that should extinguish the saloon fires is not in our hands, we may not be excused from doing what we can with our buckets of influence. The saloonists think they are standing upon a rock, but one day they may find the rock crumbling beneath their feet having been perforated by unseen influences; or the indignation of an outraged humanity may be the dynamite which, filling these perforations, shall explode with destruction to the saloon. The consecrated womanhood of the nation cannot do less than fight the saloon with such weapons as God has put into our hands. And if it be true that neither your children nor mine are in special danger of falling into temptation or into sins of a kindred nature, remember that there are homes not so safe as perhaps yours and mine are, not so guarded by careful home training. We owe something to humanity."

"I am not indifferent to the claims of humanity," said Mrs. Mannering, with sweet protest in her voice; "you know how in our aid society we are continually doing for those who suffer from the drinking habits of the heads of the families."

Mrs. Elbridge made an impatient little gesture as she said: "I wish I could make you see the absurdity of using the energies of a life-time in bailing water out of a ship without ever making an effort to stop the leak! If the Christians of the United States would concentrate their force upon the liquor traffic it might be annihilated in a twinkling! But until all can come to see the iniquity of the license system we must work on as best we can. This organized effort of the women means, as one of our number has said, 'right home training, right education of the head, heart and mind, and righteous laws enforced,' so that unwary feet may be warned against the pitfalls, and the time may be hastened when the saloon shall no more be known amongst us."

It was a long talk and a serious one. Helen had retired to the depths of the bay-window and was busy with thoughts of a happy future, catching snatches of the conversation and wondering now and then if her mother would give in and join the union. But Mrs. Mannering had no intention of yielding an inch of her position and closed the talk by saying, "Even if I saw any special good growing out of your work, I do not see any reason why I should join your society; you are doing well enough without me. You have amongst you women who are earnest and enthusiastic—I give you all credit for that." This with a meaning smile. "And you really do not need me!"

"I think you are mistaken; the cause needs all the workers; it needs and has a right to expect every Christian woman's help. Even if your statement were true, there is another side to the question, and I want to leave this with you—sometime you may be prepared to answer: Do you not need us? Can you afford to stand aloof?"

SPEECH FOR THE RESOLUTION AGAINST LEGALIZED VICE.

BY LADY HENRY SOMERSET.

Resolved:—That this Council expresses approval of the appointment of a Department Committee for the reception of evidence regarding the new Cantonment Acts in India.

We are justly proud of being Liberal women, and the resolutions that have been passed during these days of the Woman's Liberal Federation, have in every way, I believe, justified that title. We have all gloried in supporting that measure that shall give freedom to a downtrodden nation, and we have been justly proud of being allowed thus to participate with our great leader in this magnificent achievement. We have all of us with one accord given our support to that measure that shall bring freedom to the drink-cursed classes of this nation. We have with one accord supported the resolution that shall give to the women of England the power to lift their voices in the legislation of the land. We have expressed our belief that the woman's vote will be the "open sesame" to the great social and political reforms that are needed. We have also expressed our strong and deep sympathy with, and our practical desire to help, the working women of England, believing that the measures which have been spoken of from this platform will be for the well-being of the entire nation. We have also before us resolutions that deal with that millennium of peace which international arbitration shall bring about. All these measures are worthy of the enlightenment of Liberal women, and not least important is the deep sympathy we give for religious equality in Wales.

We are proud, my friends, to be called political women, but we have to remember the definition that is accepted of the word "political." "Politics is the science of government, that part of ethics which has to do with the regulation and government of a nation or state, the preservation of its safety, peace and prosperity, and the protection of its citizens in their rights, with the preservation and government of their morals." If this be the definition of politics, I venture to say that there is no question that affects the welfare of any class of the community that true political women dare to evade or ignore.

We have formulated the creed that health and happiness are the undoubted heritage of all, and that anything that tends to mar or destroy that heritage it is our bounden duty to remove. If therefore, we have taken this position, it would be folly not to face the fact that there still lurks in the minds of many of women's noblest champions some of that malarious poison which has instilled the prejudice that certain questions may be passed over in silence—that flimsy code which has hitherto been called "the custom of polite society," which has eliminated certain subjects from its vocabulary. Mrs. John Stuart Mills' little daughter once said to her mother, "Oh, mother, that question is too dreadful to know of!" and that wise and tender woman replied, "What others have to bear you can afford to know of!"

We cannot but be aware that the "conspiracy of silence" has too long brooded over some of the most important aspects of injustice to women, and that this silence has been brought about, not alone by the shame that it must give every tender woman to deal with these questions, but by those false ethics that have been too long upheld by men—that these questions are unfit for them to speak or know of. I cannot too strongly or emphatically declare that I believe that it is impossible for any truly liberal mind to hold any inequality in the moral law between man and woman. [Cheers.] But I do not admit that men are alone to be blamed for that standard of ethics. [Cheers.] I believe that the silence of the wives and mothers and sisters of the past has built up a fabric which in our enlightened age it behooves us to destroy.

True nobility can never be hedged in by those conventional barriers that we call the differences of nations, and having obtained this boon for English women, their eyes were bound to be turned eastward to that great land which brings with it so much of the glory of the English nation, but which also brings with it such immeasurable responsibilities; and it was natural that, having freed the women of England, they turned towards the women of India, for that which we would not tolerate on British soil could not be tolerated for women in any land where waves the Union Jack. [Cheers.] If the principle was rotten to the core in European civilization, it is nothing short of diabolical to force it on a nation that we control. [Cheers.] They agitated and they organized, therefore, until the House of Commons decreed that those acts should be repealed in India as they had been in England—that they should be as nefarious in that land beyond the sea as they are now in our own country.

There is but one position that can be maintained upon this question, if we believe that legalized vice is a necessity; and it behooves us, I think, as reasoning women, to follow this question to its logical conclusions. If to safeguard society, to guard the integrity of family life, to make the maintenance of a vast standing army possible a certain section of the community must be sold into a slavery, before which the horrors of the African shackles seem as a silken cord; if we hold that these victims are no more to be possessors of that liberty which we believe to be the inalienable right of every human being, but that for the public welfare their bodies belong to the state and their souls to the darkness to which we often glibly consign them; if the degraded woman is, according to these sociologists, to be an inevitable necessity—then admit this premise, admit that certain women are for the public good, to be sacrificed on the altar of a pure home, and the position maintained by the great historian, Lecky, is immediately justified.

There has arisen," he says, "in society a figure which is certainly the most mournful, and, in some respects, the most awful, upon which the eye of the moralist can dwell. Herself, the supreme type of Vice, she is ultimately the most efficient guardian of Virtue. But for her the unchallenged purity of countless happy homes would be polluted, and not a few, who in the pride of their untempted chastity think of her with an indignant shudder, would have known the agony of remorse and of despair. On that one degraded and ignoble form are concentrated the passions that might have filled the world with shame. She remains, while creeds and civilizations rise and fall, the eternal Priestess of Humanity, blasted for the sins of the people.

Take this position and declare this truth—that such a sacrifice is needed by women for the good of all, but never dare to speak again of the degraded woman. Never dare again to draw away the skirts of outraged virtue from that shrinking figure who is fulfilling the mission that society demands. Rather believe that she is taking the burden of a responsibility that rests on all, that you should be ready to sacrifice your daughter to the same martyrdom for the world's benefit, and the prostitute must once more occupy, as in ancient days, the position of the priestess and the guardian of society. It is the boast of Christianity that, among all the philosophies, the golden rule belongs exclusively to the teachings of its founder. Modern theosophy may have borrowed that splendid axiom, but it was Christ who first implanted in the heart of humanity the standard that bids each "do to others as they would be done by." [Cheers.] Dare any say that they advocate, in adopting Lecky's line of argument, conditions which they would willingly accept themselves? I know it will be urged that there will ever be women whose degradation is so great that they will give themselves over to a life of shame. This we may not deny; but we declare that it is infamous for a Christian nation to so legalize the degradation, so to surround these women with conditions that tend towards a perpetuation of their bondage, that escape is rendered for them practically impossible.

The World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union has sent now six "all-round the-world missionaries," as they are called, commissioned to take to each country their practical gospel of temperance, purity and the sisterhood of women. Dr. Kate Bushnell and Mrs. Elizabeth Andrew were the last commissioned, and they started, as all our white-ribbon sisters have started with no money, but with boundless faith. They came to England, and the British committee for the suppression of legalized vice, empowered them to make certain inquiries in India as to the Cantonment Acts. They had reason to believe that the regulations were still in force that Parliament had by its resolutions condemned, and we believe that the evidence they bring us is so convincing, the proofs that they hold are so undoubted, that we have no loophole for escaping the fact that some one has disobeyed imperial commands.

They will not tell you all that it has meant to them to give their lives—a sacrifice for those bound in chains in that distant land, but they will tell you that amidst all the agony that is crushing the hearts of those child-widows in India, those women still believe in the solidarity of womanhood; they will tell you how they besought them to go to England to plead their cause, how in the midst of all their agony they said: "The Queen does not know our sorrow; the Queen would never permit the daughters of India to be sold into this cruel slavery; the Queen would set us free!" I plead for those women to-day. Oh! you queens! you queens! who reign, possessors of your life and liberty in homes of love and happiness, rise up to-day and in that truest purity, with tongues of fire proclaim the liberty and equality of womanhood!

PRINCIPLE AND METHOD IN THE TEMPERANCE REFORM.

BY HERRICK JOHNSON, D.D.

[Read in the World's Temperance Congress.]

The Independent recently declared (February 23, 1893,) that "the time had come for a concerted effort to exterminate those two allied curses and plague spots of our cities, the liquor saloon and the house of ill-fame." Dr. Edward Everett Hale, in recently considering the question, "On what line may all the enemies of the saloon unitedly do battle?" divided the opponents of the saloon into two classes. First, those who would totally prohibit both the manufacture and sale of all alcoholic liquor for beverage purposes. And second, those who detest the open bar and count it a menace to society and a source of the basest influences; although they do not regard a moderate indulgence in spirituous liquors as wrong. Many of this second class themselves drink wine and other liquors. But they are perfectly willing to take any measures, even the most stringent, for the abolition of the open bar. And Dr. Hale ventures the prophecy that "if it were possible for these two sets of people to unite their forces simply for the suppression of the open bar, or the abolition of the saloon, the saloon would cease to exist within five years, in nine-tenths of the states—perhaps in all of them."

Beyond a doubt, the dominant sentiment of the country is against the saloon. Equally beyond a doubt, this sentiment has never been united and rallied in the extermination of the saloon. If the saloon is the menace and curse to society it is declared to be by our entire religious press, by a large portion of our secular press, by all our church organizations, by our societies of reform, by our publicists and statisticians, and by our courts of justice, it ought to be possible to unite all opponents of the saloon in its effective suppression. It is a great humiliation and shame that this conceded and overwhelming majority, embracing the best elements of society and the state, and representative of all that is enduring and safeguarding in our civic structure, cannot pull itself together and secure concert of action on so vital a matter. Is there a possible "line on which all the enemies of the saloon may unitedly do battle"?

I submit this paper in the full belief that the stupendous interests at stake make the question of the extermination of the liquor saloon far and away beyond any other in practical politics and civic reform, and in the full conviction that sensible men who really hate the saloon ought to let go all minor differences and unite heartily for its suppression.

Perhaps there is no one thing in practical life we need to keep more clearly in mind than the distinction between principle and method. Perhaps there is no one thing that is more often confused and confounded.

Principle comes from a word signifying "beginning." Hence it means "cause," "source," "foundation"; that out of which other things arise, or upon which other things are based, such as rules, methods. Principle is therefore something fundamental and general, needing interpretation and application to particular cases. Method is simply mode of operation.

A principle is a central, representative truth in science or philosophy, religion or morals, as the principles of morality, of equity, of government.

A method is a way of doing things. It is the particular application of a principle. There is such a thing as a principle of utility. Gifts, graces, talents, possessions are for use. The general principle is utility. The methods under that principle are manifold. Judas seemed to think there was only one method of utilizing ointment—selling it and giving the money to the poor. So he charged Mary with wasting the ointment poured on Jesus. He made a false application of the principle of utility. Jesus rebuked him, and taught the disciples that a morally beautiful deed may have a finer utility than a materially beneficent deed.

In general, principle is substance; method is form. Principle is essential; method is circumstantial. Principle is enduring and changeless; method may change with every changing condition and environment. Principle is inherent—the soul of things; method is external—a garment to be put on or off. Principle, in the domain of morals, cannot be honorably abandoned—we must fight for it, and if need be die for it; method we must abandon, if we can thereby promote a principle. Principle allows no choice; method leaves room for great liberty of choice. Principle involves the ethics of action, and hence gets the clinch of conscience; method is the machinery of action, and has little use for conscience.

Now with these clear and wide distinctions before us, it will readily be seen that if we get to confusing and confounding principle and method, we will play the mischief with morals and motives, involve ourselves in endless confusion of thought and speech, and possibly take positions wholly untenable, do injustice to differing opinions, and seriously injure a great cause.

There are three points of danger. We may so far lose sight of or misapprehend principle, as to lower it to the plane of method. This would be to degrade principle, to sacrifice it on the altar of expediency, or to make an abject surrender of it. This would subject us to the "woe" of Scripture pronounced on all those "that call evil good, and good evil; that put darkness for light, and light for darkness."

Then again in our advocacy of some particular line of action, we may lift method to the plane of principle, stamp it as "inherent," "essential," "changeless," and claim that it "allows no possibility of choice," that it involves the "ethics of action," and therefore that it is clinched by an imperative "ought." This would lead to narrowness and bitterness. Along this road bigots are born. In the olden times it led to the rack, the fagot, and the stake. Happily we are done with those material implements of torture. But the spirit of persecution is not dead, and nothing will so easily rouse it to expression in extreme and denunciatory and even venomous speech as enthroning a circumstantial on the high seat of principle and making it the shibboleth of fealty and fidelity.

There is a third danger conceivable. A principle may be recognized and accepted without protest—general assent may be given it; and yet a method of operation may be adopted so utterly out of gear with that principle, and so antagonistic in its results, as to be utterly subversive of it. In such a case, of course the method involves in itself a principle opposed to the one professedly accepted.

We must take care, therefore, lest we degrade principle to the plane of expediency; and again, lest we exalt method to the plane of principle; and again, lest we adopt a method that at last subverts principle.

This is the exposition. Now for the application.

Both principle and method are connected with this question of the legal extermination of the saloon. The principle by which it is justified is the right of society to protect itself from what is hostile to its interests, and the duty of government to furnish such protection. This is the ground of legal enactment against anything whatsoever; not its inherent wrongfulness, but its injury to society. Laws are passed against things evil in themselves, and against things innocent in themselves; but against both alike only in the interests of social order and public safety. The law prohibits murder and perjury for the same reason that it prohibits building frame houses and carrying concealed weapons—to protect society. So far as the ground of Prohibition is concerned, it makes no difference whether the thing prohibited be a sin per se or a sin per circumstance.

Now the saloon is notoriously conspicuous as openly and flagrantly inimical to all the best interests of our social and civil life. Out of it comes no good whatever. The principle of opposition to it is founded in the very nature of government. Just so far forth as government fails of protecting society from this constant menace to social order, to personal purity, to law, and to every trust of citizenship, just so far forth it fails of its supreme end. And the principle strikes at the traffic in strong drink as represented in the saloon, the open bar. It is this that is the raison d'être of all hostile and repressive legislation. It is safe to say that if it had not been for the saloon there would have been no Prohibition party. The principle of Prohibition is righteous hostility to that which is everywhere a social, civil and political curse. It involves not regulation, but extermination. We do not pass laws to regulate evils, but to suppress them. And the objective point in liquor legislation, the thing aimed at, first and amidst and last is the saloon, the open bar, the drinking by the glass.

Now it must be conceded that we are not shut up to just one method of suppression underneath this general principle. Laws are frequently mere experiments to test method. A method is tried under some form of law, and if found defective, another legal device is instituted. It was so with Mormonism. It has been so with other great evils. It has been and will continue to be so with the liquor traffic. Constitutional prohibition, legislative enactment, national amendment, state prohibition, local option, local exclusion, as far and as fast as we can get it —by so many feet from school-house or church, by ward, or district, or township or county—these are methods. Over all, round about all, consistent with all, is the principle. Let no one contend for a particular method, however much he may be in love with it, and however inextricably it may be rooted with his deepest convictions of efficiency, as if it were the principle. On the other hand let no one press a method, conceded to be only a method, if, with any considerable number of those who would unite in repressing the saloon, that method is deemed inconsistent with some great moral principle. If the enemies of the saloon are to come together, and unite along any line of action, if they are to stop divisive effort and to join in concerted effort, it must be by concession—concession that surrenders preference while maintaining principle, and that strikes the saloon without compromising conscience.

For my own part, speaking as a party prohibitionist, I would let every enemy of the saloon in whatever party and under whatever name, know past all doubt that prohibitionists are worshiping no fetich of method, and that they will sink their preferences as to lines of action, and at once and heartily unite with all men in any method which will set determinedly and effectually against one of the mightiest evils of our day.

Is there such a method? I think there is, and it is pointed out and emphasized by our common hostility to the saloon. It seems to me the great body of prohibitionists, pure and simple, should be willing to unite with all enemies of the saloon in furthering this method. It is to capture as much territory from the saloon as possible, narrowing the area of the saloon's occupancy more and more, and aiming at nothing whatever but the repression of the open bar. It is to strike unitedly at the saloon, first and last and all the time, and let every other purpose go but this, to lessen one by one these hotbeds of evil and menaces to public order.

This will demand of the Prohibitionist that he give up his insistence on legislation suppressive of all manufacture of intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes. It will also demand of the Prohibitionist that he do not press the drinking of alcoholic liquor as a sin per se, and that he do not urge any legislation looking to the universal suppression of the use of such liquor as a beverage. By a large section of the great body of men who detest the grog-shop, such legislation is regarded as sumptuary legislation and an unwarranted interference with personal liberty.

On the other hand, this method will demand of those who have insisted on license, whether high or low, as an effective means of repression, to let this license issue lie passive. For by a large section of the great body of men who detest the grog-shop, license is regarded as compromising legislation, involving essential complicity with the evil, and as therefore trenching on a great principle. If we are ever to fight unitedly the common enemy we must respect each other's conscientious convictions. What is it we surrender on either side? Simply a method. We are asked to sacrifice no principle; to make no compromise with conscience.

This means the union of all temperance people in a single purpose and no other. It means organization, painstaking, thorough, wide, pervasive, looking toward one object, and no more. It means if we can keep a saloon five hundred feet from a school-house, we will do that. If we can extend the exclusion to a thousand feet, we will do that; if to a ward, or a county, or a city, or a state, we will do that. We will take what territory we can from every saloon-cursed district everywhere, until the open bar is exterminated.

Prohibitionists, local optionists, license men, government regulationists, saloon opposers of every sort, let us forgo our preferences, lay aside our prejudices, stand for principle, insist on no shibboleth of method, band together, and see if we cannot smite to the death this national curse —the grog-shop.

HILLSBORO CRUSADE SKETCHES.

BY ELIZA J. THOMPSON.

IX.

The ladies of the Temperance Association of Hillsboro had very little to do with the legal proceedings connected with the injunction granted by Judge Safford against the association, "restraining them from praying and singing around, before, or anywhere in the vicinity of Mr. Wm. H. H. Dunn's drug store." 'Tis true, quite a number of matrons, (about thirty) assembled at the residence of the secretary, Mrs. Dean K. Fenner, by request of their lawyers, Messrs. Harrion, Williams and Thompson, for conversation upon the subject in litigation. Mr. Thompson a day or two later met the members of the association in the lecture room of the M. E. church and read to them the affidavit, which they signed and swore to in the presence of Squire Doggett.

When the day arrived for the hearing of the case the "lady defendants," to the number of about one hundred, our band had increased during these days of persecution, formed in procession, after an early prayer-meeting at the M. E. church and marched down High street to the court-house. We were received courteously and seated, although the court room was densely packed. The greatest interest was manifested in the extraordinary proceedings and temperance sentiment was created, even more rapidly by our court-house experiences than by our saloon visitations,—so the world said.

The case was argued for four days with great skill and much feeling on both sides, during which the most intense interest was shown by the people from the rural districts as well as by our own citizens. Finally the case was concluded, and Judge Steel gave his decision. "The temporary injunction was dissolved, but only on a technicality, and not on the merits of the case." Both parties were disappointed, and throughout the state there was much feeling evinced on the part of temperance advocates because of the fact that this decision gave to many localities an assurance of the law on the liquor side, so that efforts were made in many towns in Ohio, where the movement was in progress, to put a check upon it in the same way. But thank the good Father of all our mercies, the courts were generally in sympathy with the ladies. Judge after judge was appealed to in vain. In Morrow serious hindrance was suffered on the part of the temperance people because of the restraining orders of courts, but through the decision of Judge Smith of Lebanon, all honor to his name, the women triumphed in the only injunction case of the Crusade that was decided on its merits. Without entering into the arguments upon which his decision was based, let it be remembered that the pivot upon which all arguments turned with that good, wise, common-sensed judge was that "the plaintiff had no right to ask legal protection for a manifestly illegal business."

Soon after the new experiences of the legal proceedings were over (as we supposed) it was thought best by the women of the association to make some changes in the usual order of things; after some discussion as to time and place of holding the future meetings of the association it was unanimously agreed that this whole subject should be referred to the executive committee of ladies and the ministers of the several churches; hence a called meeting for the purpose was appointed.

During the next week this meeting was held, and the following plans agreed upon: First, the morning meetings were dispensed with for one week, as an experiment, the afternoon meetings and the visitations substituting them. Evening union temperance services in the Presbyterian church on Monday, in the Baptist church on Tuesday and in the M. E. church on Thursday evening of each week were decided upon. All-day prayer meetings were held in the churches occasionally. These services proved to be of great interest and profit to the many who attended them; testimonies full of interest were given by not only workers at these meetings, but by many men, as well as women, who had been spiritually benefited by this "Temperance Pentecost."

A very great effort was made by a committee, appointed for the purpose, to secure good and reliable speakers for our evening meetings; several invitations were sent abroad to earnest workers in the state—Mrs. Wills, Dr. Staunton and others, but so great was the demand upon them, that we were disappointed. Then we turned to some among ourselves, whose constant occupation in the field of labor assigned them by Providence, had prevented their joining in the daily round of service for which they felt the most earnest sympathy; preëminently among these was Miss Emily Grand Gerard, a native French lady, but, one who had been educated by our own Dr. Mathews, and in full and hearty accord with every good word and work. She was principal of the Presbyterian Institute for Young Ladies, and her friends were legion in all churches and circles, yet her modesty was only equaled by her ability. She accepted an invitation to address an evening union temperance service in the Presbyterian church, and chose as her subject "The Crusader." After delineating the Crusaders of olden times in a most attractive manner, she brought to bear the glorious privilege of the modern Crusader in such bold relief that all felt the power of her words, and gave hearty assent as she exclaimed: "Nor do they throw themselves in the breach unguarded and unarmed. No valiant crusader ever went forth to battle clad in such a panoply as they wear. Our modern crusader, for we accept the name given in derision, and will make it as significant of good as other titles bestowed in the same spirit—Methodist, Huguenot, etc., is furnished with weapons from the armory of Heaven, Ephesians, 6: 10, 11, and with such equipments who would dare be discouraged!"

The entire address of this gifted Christian lady was a benediction to the faithful band of workers, and from that evening they assumed the appelation of "Crusaders," counting it a high privilege to suffer persecution in a cause so glorious.

"Remember Lot's wife," is also one of Hillsboro's mottoes, and the weekly meeting all the way along since 1873 held by the temperance women, proves that the live coal of the Crusade is still burning upon the altar.

About the 20th of March, 1874, the members of our association realizing the near approach of house-cleaning and other busy days for housekeepers, determined to call a meeting of the executive committee for consultation, and on April 23, the following ladies met in the home of Mrs. John A. Smith: Mrs. Thompson, Mrs. Mc Dowell, Mrs. Scott, Mrs. J. A. Smith, Mrs. Glascock, Mrs. R. S. Evans, Mrs. Cowden, Mrs. Foraker, Mrs. D. K. Fenner. The consultation resulted in returning to the morning meetings and other work. The entire number of members who were in the spirit of "willing workers," were to be divided into four equal parts to be known as bands A, B, C and D, each band to have a leader and assistant leader, to be elected monthly. These leaders and assistants were also to be members of the executive committee. The first election resulted in band A, Mrs. Jos. Glascock, leader, Mrs. Rev. Cowden, assistant; band B, Mrs. H. S. Foraker, leader, Mrs. Dr. Sams, assistant; band C, Mrs. F. Ellifritz, leader, Mrs. Pickering, assistant; band D, Mrs. R. S. Evans, leader, Mrs. P. Janes, assistant. Thus, while some were at work in their respective homes, the visitations upon the few remaining open saloons and bars were prayerfully looked after. Grand evening meetings were held in the different churches and the interest seemed unabated.

THE WOMAN QUESTION IN THE COLLEGE.

BY F. A. MANNY.

Professor Levi T. Griffin in the annual address before the senior class of the Michigan University Law school recently said:

"As respects national sentiment, in all your political aspirations try and keep in touch with national sentiment. It is only a few years ago that I conceived a horrible prejudice against what is popularly known as woman's suffrage. I got the idea from St. Paul that women ought not to speak in meeting. I have been gradually drawn from this proposition, and I believe that national sentiment is rapidly drifting in favor of extending to every human being the political privilege which is accorded to one. . . . . It seems absolutely ridiculous that any woman who has graduated at the University of Michigan or Wellesley College should be compelled to lock herself up in her domicile and engage all her time and strength in seriously adjudging and determining the question what her husband should have for dinner or supper, and deny her all rights and interests whatever in national affairs in this great country of which she forms so important a part, of which she is a citizen and in which she has property rights and property interests. . . .

"So as regards the Chinese; national sentiment in this country will condemn the present method of treating the Chinese. Think of this great republic, afraid of thirty thousand Chinese! . . . The United States as a nation cannot prosper, at least cannot have peace and harmony with all the nations of Europe and the earth, if it discriminates between nationalities. Let there be, if you please, a limitation upon emigration, but let that limitation be founded upon no nationality, but upon uniform principles applying to all nationalities alike. Good men of all nationalities we want; the bad we ought to shun and avoid."

Is it any wonder that Michigan strides forward toward universal suffrage when her prominent educators stand like this? One of the leading law schools of the country is that of the University of Michigan. Its graduates are well and favorably known all over America and it has counted among its graduates several prominent women lawyers. The present senior law class contains nearly four hundred students of which two only are women but these two testify to the most courteous treatment by faculty and students alike.

Degrees conferred on women from 1871 to 1890 inclusive: Literary, 315; medical, 258; law, 27; pharmacy, 19; homœopathic, 64; dental, 21; honorary, 2; total, 706. Honorary degrees have been conferred on Alice Freeman Palmer of Cambridge, Mass., and Lucinda N. Stone of Kalamazoo, Mich.

Up to 1890 there were enrolled nearly 500 women who did not take degrees. At present there are about 600 women in all departments, of whom about 38 are in the graduate and 500 in the literary departments.

Statistics concerning marriage are very inadequate, but up to 1890 at least one-third of the women who had studied in the University of Michigan had married. There are many married women now in the University, in a large number of cases husband and wife are together in their work. Women and men past forty and even fifty are often seen. One successful candidate last year for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy is the wife of a leading minister here, and has two children in the University.

This year, for the first time, women have been on the college daily and the lecture board, also in the oratorical contests. Several members in the University Y have helped in bringing these advances.

Among our leading alumnæ are Alice Freeman Palmer, formerly president of Wellesley College and now connected with Chicago University; Martha Strickland, a prominent lawyer of Detroit; Louisa Reed Stowell, of Washington; Professors Cowan, Chandler, Sheldon, Chapin, Andrews, Gelston, Darling, Case and others, of Wellsley; Professors Byrd and Peck, of Smith; Professor Salmon, of Vassar, and many others prominent throughout the country.

In one respect alone is the University deficient, it has no women connected with its faculty; a few are employed as assistants, but they have no official relations. This cannot last ever with the growing sentiment among its alumni and students, and before long it is hoped this last barrier will be removed.

Woman in Politics.

WOMAN'S LIBERAL FEDERATION.

(Concluded.)

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The burning new question of the Woman's Liberal Federation was the state regulation of vice, embodied in in the following resolution:

That this Council, bearing in mind the resolution against all legislation regulating vice, which was unanimously adopted by the House of Commons on June 5, 1888, and indignant that under the East India Cantonment Acts and Regulations, 1889, that resolution of June, 1888, is evaded and frustrated, thanks the Government for the appointment of a Departmental Committee to inquire into the matter, urges the Government to take all necessary steps for carrying out the vote of the House of Commons, and resolves to use every practicable means to secure the abolition throughout the British Empire of all such Acts or Regulations which strike at the fundamental liberties of women.

This difficult and delicate subject had never come before the Federation, and some of the leaders were so much afraid that it might prejudice their society that it was set down for the last morning, and the following statement was made on the Agenda: "A discussion of this question has been fixed for the morning of the last council day of the meeting in case there are any delegates who do not care to take part in the debate."

Lady Henry Somerset, to whose lot it usually falls to stand up for unpopular movements, introduced the subject in a speech which many consider to have been her best. (See page 2.) She threw all her powers of argument, persuasion and pathos into this plea for the down-trodden and outraged little Hindu widows, who are furnished for the use of British soldiers in the military cantonments of India. The measure was seconded by Mrs. Stewart Brown, of Liverpool, who stated during the discussion on the C. D. Acts: "It is easy to say that man cannot be made virtuous by act of Parliament, but we answer men may readily be made vicious by Act of Parliament, and against this we wish to guard, for there are three classes of men, the virtuous, the vicious, and the weak; the latter is perhaps the largest class, and Parliament must safeguard these by diminishing the dangers of temptation. Ignorance is not innocence, and indifference is not modesty. In the burning heat of indignation, in the scorching sun of publicity, the legalizing traffic in women shrivels like a weed, and a conspiracy of silence is almost sure to be a conspiracy of sin. Certain officers of the British army in India would fain wipe out the penalties that nature has attached to nameless sins, but they will vainly try to unlink cause from effect. We may well paraphrase the words of Madam Rowland and say: "Oh, modesty! what atrocities have been committed in thy name."

A delegate was present whose son had just enlisted in the British Army. The mother was so wrought upon she could hardly remain through the convention; she said: "My boy shall not go. I will buy him off. I will never submit to it; I am going home to have a meeting and I will stir up my neighbor women. We will see whether officers of the army can go on having the service on Sunday and saying, 'We beseech thee to hear us, good Lord,' reading out the seventh commandment, and responding, 'Lord have mercy upon us, and incline our hearts to keep this law,' and then putting up tin signs, fifteen inches square, to guide these young fellows, the soldier boys, to the quarters of the women who are kept for the special use of their regiment. I tell you this thing has got to stop, and we are the women who will help to make it stop."

Lady Carlisle made a brief but electric speech in which she said the Queen should know of this; a declaration that elicited universal applause, which was repeated when she added these pregnant sentences: "If soldiers cannot live without a sacrifice of women in India or in any other country, then I say, perish the army! Shall it be for naught that we have a woman on the throne? This is not yet a popular cry but it is for us to make it so. They talk of the health of the troops—how dare they? I will not use that precious word health in a connection so contemptible."

Lady Aberdeen counseled the local societies to bring this subject before their members that there might be united movement against the C. D. Acts, which, although illegal throughout the British Empire, are still illicitly enforced by certain wrong-headed officials in India and South Africa.

Mrs. Elizabeth Andrew and Dr. Kate Bushnell, both of whom had been made delegates, spoke with great convincing power to the council, giving the testimony they had secured at so much heroic self-sacrifice, and they were loudly applauded, as they are everywhere, by these enthusiastic, warm-hearted British audiences. The resolution condemning the Indian officials, who thus defy the law, and thanking the authorities who have instituted a committee of investigation, was passed unanimously by a rising vote, with an enthusiasm that bodes no good to those who persist in the degradation of womanhood in this or any country.

Among the notable women present was Mrs. Priscilla McLaren, of Edinburgh, the eldest sister of John Bright, a woman of statesmanlike appearance and utterance, whose keen brain and motherly heart have been for a lifetime devoted to the cause of the oppressed in every land and nation, but most of all to the enfranchisement of women in Great Britain. In the course of the debate Mrs. McLaren told an anecdote of a woman suffragist who was urged by leaders of the party of progress to hold that question in abeyance, because the "Fisheries were now at the fore," whereupon Mrs. McLaren, with her clear emphasis, said: "My dear, be true to your sex, and leave the men to look after the fisheries, which they will not be slow to do." There is a principle in this declaration that a great many excellent but undeveloped women would do well to ponder.

Another potent individuality is the treasurer of the association, Mrs. Eva McLaren, daughter-in-law of "Saint Priscilla"; she and her husband, the Hon. Walter McLaren, M. P., have devoted themselves with untiring zeal to woman's cause, and stand in the front of the battle to-day.

There was a fine Scottish contingent, led by Lady Trevelyan, wife of the secretary for Scotland. Mrs. Broadley Reid, the secretary, is admirably adapted to her post, with a mind quick as a flash, and a versatility that adapts itself to the situation as readily as the needle poises in the binnacle.

The Countess Alice Kearney, who is constantly in the field organizing new societies and strengthening old, seems deservedly a favorite. Mrs. Jacob Bright, who championed married woman's rights, was much applauded. All these names are known to us beyond the sea. Our own Hannah Whitall Smith was a delegate, with her lovely daughter, Alys, who is foremost in the white-ribbon work and every good cause.

A dinner was given to those specially interested in the work of Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell, after which the guests were invited to listen to a statement of the situation which was opened by Mrs. Sheldon-Amos, sister of Percy Bunting, Esq., editor of the Contemporary Review. Mrs. Amos is a woman of power and devoted to the emancipation of the white slaves in India.

There were lunches and receptions all through the conference given by different leading ladies; most of these feasts were spread at the magnificent Holborn restaurant, the walls of whose banqueting rooms have certainly in the last week echoed enough gospel to save, not one poor planet only, but a whole solar system.

Lady Henry Somerset gave a lunch to the Welsh delegates, which was a delightful affair in its good fellowship. The Doxology furnished our blessing; the toasts were many and a vote of thanks was given in Welsh; the national hymn was also sung in that language.

Lady Aberdeen gave a reception in the beautiful gallery of watercolor paintings, where Lady Henry Somerset had received the delegates to the British Women's Council a month before. The Earl and Countess of Aberdeen united in welcoming one thousand five hundred guests, and the evening was all that could be asked. For myself, I was more interested in meeting the Rev. and Mrs. Haweis than any others except our host and hostess, for I had read "Music and Morals" many years ago in my Wisconsin home, and it was delightful to meet the author with his genial and accomplished wife.

The manner in which the election was conducted has in it a hint for ourselves. The polling room was kept open each day between certain published hours; the council appointed women who should have the ballot boxes in charge, and as the delegates entered, a full printed list was handed to each containing names of the chief officers of the executive committee, as proposed by the executive committee, and any local societies who chose to send any nominations for that committee. An "X" was placed opposite each name for which the delegate desired to vote. The sheet was folded and handed to the scrutineer and placed in the box—thus no time was taken from the convention for the election. The method of securing seats is also noteworthy. Each delegate received, before coming to London, a ticket which was equivalent to our credentials paper, and each bearing in letters the tier, and in figures the number by which she would find her seat. All the seats had been balloted for in the local societies, a diagram of the hall having been sent, on which all the seats were duly marked. Take it for all in all I was obliged to admit, and I did it with natural reluctance, that this was as fine, if not the finest meeting of women, so far as general average of speaking was concerned, that I have ever attended. The sifting process had been applied and here were the results. The delegates were of what is called here the "middle class," except a few leaders from among the "aristocracy"; they were women of remarkable intelligence and more than average education. They were well heard, having for the most part deep, clear voices and good enunciation, and last but not least, they were an attractive collection of women attired in tasteful spring suits of the most approved regulation order, for dress reform has made but little progress here; waists are ligatured, heels high, and hats display the sad remains of many a tuneful little life; but take them for all in all, England will certainly not look upon their like again until the "Woman's Liberal" comes once more upon the stage.

Finally, I wish to record my high appreciation of the sisterly courtesy and kindness of Lady Aberdeen, Lady Carlisle, Lady Henry Somerset—indeed every officer and member of the Woman's Liberal Federation. It is a fact of pleasant significance to me that my first political vote in an organization of women was cast in favor of all the resolutions I have named and for the three ladies mentioned, beside our white-ribboners, Miss Florence Balgarnie, Mrs. Hugh Price Hughes, and others as members of the executive committee. Nor was it without a sense of pleasure that I voted for Miss Helen Gladstone as a member of the committee, her illustrious mother having retired, and her name standing at the head of the poll.

TOBACCO AMONG STUDENTS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—One of the most enjoyable hours that I ever passed was in the normal school at the little town of Winchester in Southern Tennessee. The principal Prof. Rufus Clark, is a consistent temperance advocate and prohibitionist, and the influence he exerts over the impressionable minds of the young people in his charge cannot be overvalued.

I was particularly pleased with his corroboration of the remarks I had made to the school of three hundred pupils on the subject of tobacco. He said: "As an educator, I am prepared from my own experience and observation to indorse all that has been said in regard to tobacco. I am convinced that it is an injury physically. I believe it is an injury morally. I know that it is an injury mentally. Fortunately, we have few students who use tobacco, but when one does use it he shows it in his standing in class. If there is an exception to this statement, if a young man does maintain rank in his recitations, and is still a user of tobacco, he is one who has such natural mental ability that if he did not use it he would so far distance his classmates that he would soon be out of sight. Of one, of whom I am now thinking, the other students say: 'We don't object to his using tobacco, for that is the only reason why we can in any degree keep up with him.' I can go through this school and put my hand on every boy that uses tobacco, for he shows it in his face, and if I am in doubt, I can prove my surmise by looking at his recitation marks."

IN ROSE TIME.

BY ESTHER HOUSH.

A rose tree climbed by the window-side,
Coronaled over with green;
And ambient kisses of sun-lit May,
And crystal dews, at the close of day,
Wooed the pearly buds, that folded hide
The crown of the summer's queen.

Under the steps of stone so cold,
Under the steps in dearth and mold,
A strong root ran that felt the life
Of the outside world with beauty rife—
And it peeped a tendril up to see
If any chance of growth could be.
Not a hint was there of sun or dew,
Not a gleam of light the darkness through,
Only cobwebs and clay, and pebbles and dust,
It must grow through these, if grow it must.

The roses bloomed by the window-side,
Creamy and sweet and fair;
The royal crowns of a royal June,
The gold of a summer's golden noon,
Cups of the gods, distilling wide
Ambrosia on the air.

Above the steps of stone so cold,
Above the steps a tale was told
Of life that would live because it must,
Of life and growth in darkness and dust,—
For a green leaf smiled at the florets fair,
Showering their glory everywhere,
And more to me than the roses' gold
Was the wealth of praise one leaf could hold.

Ah, leaf so brave! how many there be
In human life, seeking light like thee!

HOW IT WORKED.

BY EVA KINNEY GRIFFITH.

"Now, Mrs. West, I want you to confess your sins and tell me all the dreadful things you've been doing during the fall campaign," I said, as my hostess, having looked after all my wants, seated herself by the grate, ready for a cozy chat.

I was an itinerant organizer and speaker for the "cause," and she was a gentle stay-at-home, who wasn't supposed to be doing any of the radical things we more public workers sometimes do. Her hair was white, and little crow-feet wrinkles lingered about the corners of her eyes, yet she was a beautiful woman. There was a halo of contented happiness in her face, that betrayed the mistress of a happy, well-ordered home, an adored wife and a beloved mother.

"What have you heard about it?" she asked, smilingly.

"Why, they say you've been meddling with politics; that you actually took the stump and defeated your husband at the polls. Is it possible that you did such a thing as that? And if so, why isn't your family broken up and you and your husband fighting in the divorce courts instead of looking so amiable and happy in this lovely home?"

"My husband and I have no desire to break up our home, and we have not even had a dispute over politics yet, although it is quite true that I helped defeat his election as representative to the state legislature last fall."

"Well, do tell me how you managed it."

"There was nothing very new or strange about it," went on Mrs. West in her quiet, womanly voice. "It came about in this way. When Mr. West sought my hand in marriage, now some twenty-five years ago, I, at first, refused on account of the difference in our religious views and principles. He persuaded me to change my mind and we were married with the understanding that politics and religion were never to be discussed in our home, and each was to be left to pursue a free course without criticism or interference from the other. For twenty-five years we have lived together and kept this agreement inviolate. We have never discussed our differences and I have been accustomed to form my own plans for work in the different causes I have espoused without any reference to Mr. West, and he has done the same by me.

"Last fall, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Columbia county, of which I have the honor to be president, determined on a very aggressive campaign, deciding to go out into the field and work and pray for the defeat of every candidate for the legislature who was not in favor of the temperance laws we wish to have passed this winter. We made no secret of our plans and as leader and speaker I was pushed to the front, taking a very active part. Seeing that our influence was very great and that there was a good fighting chance of our success, the opposition began to scheme to get ahead of us. Knowing that Mr. West's principles were not so strict as mine on the temperance question, and that he openly disfavored the laws we wished to have passed, the managers of the other side hit upon the plan of nominating Mr. West as representative from our district, thinking that would best silence me. My husband is not a politician and did not care for the office, nor was he aware of my plans and the secret motive in offering him the nomination. So, when the committee waited on him and assured him that on account of his business standing he was the only man who could save his party from defeat, he allowed himself to be nominated with considerable reluctance.

"I first heard of the nomination through the papers, and I confess that I was a little staggered to know what to do. But after a day and a night of prayer and consideration, I determined to go on with my plans just as I would have done if a stranger had been nominated, leaving the results with God.

"We had a hot campaign. I traveled and spoke nearly every day. The women and young men were thoroughly organized, and we watched the enemy's every step, carefully matching their every move with a counter move. The opposition became very angry as the battle grew close, and again and again delegations visited my husband and demanded that he call his wife down. What answer he made them I do not know but he never mentioned the subject to me, and the usual quiet and peace of our house was disturbed by no arguments, pro or con.

"As the campaign became warmer my son came over to my side, declaring that mother was too plucky to be left to fight it out alone. He is but just past twenty-one, and I was more than glad to have won him over and to know that his first vote would be cast in favor of temperance. He put his strong young shoulders to the wheel and gave me most efficient help in the work, bringing with him to the cause a score of young voters of his own age.

"When election day arrived I went to the polls early, accompanied by several faithful sisters of the W. C. T. U. My son soon followed me and stayed by me to the last. My husband's friends were also there and sometimes they made very sarcastic remarks about me in my hearing. Once or twice some very pleasant gentlemen came and tried to reason with me, giving a flattering description of the honor it would be to me to have my husband in the legislature. When I turned a deaf ear they went to my husband and tried to get him to insist on my coming home. But I am told he only smiled and answered:

"'If you had lived with my Annie as long as I have, you would know that no authority of mine could call her home if she has decided that her conscience requires her to stay. I have never interfered with her reform work in any way, and it is too late to begin now.'

"He did not go near the polls all day, and remained down town until very late in the evening waiting for the returns. I stayed up for him and confess that I felt some little trepidation lest his disappointment, if defeated, should trouble him. But when he came in he threw himself into a chair wearily and said:

"'Well, Annie, you're ahead as usual. But I don't know as I care much about going to the legislature this year. I'm afraid my business would have suffered in my absence.'

"I just went over to his chair and put my arms around his neck and laid my cheek against his. He drew me into his arms and kissed me, and that was all there was to it. We have never talked much about it ourselves, but my irrepressible son cannot keep from joking his father about it once in a while, so they indulge in considerable chaffing back and forth occasionally. The Germans who were in my husband's party were very angry about the defeat, and can't understand how Mr. West could allow his wife to act so. They think me a dreadful woman."

Mrs. West smiled as she finished her story and presently left the room to attend to some household duty.

I stayed three days a guest in her home, and never hope to see a happier or more peaceful abiding place. The question as to whether families will necessarily be broken up by women taking an active interest in politics was most pleasantly answered in this case.

THE MOTHER'S PRIVILEGE.

BY MRS. J. H. KELLOGG.

[Read at World's Social Purity Congress.]

One of the foremost philanthropists of the age was wont to say: "It is worth a life effort to lift a man from degradation; to prevent his fall is better." This work of prevention is in the highest sense the mother's privilege. She it is to whom is given the first opportunity of influencing the man or woman that is to be; the privilege of laying the foundation stones of their future life structure. To her is entrusted, in a great measure, the working out of God's ideal for each child in her care, and upon her will it largely depend whether characters shall be rounded in the fullness of a noble manhood or womanhood, or dwarfed by neglect and deformed by sin. It is a great and blessed privilege to start aright the one just entering upon the perilous journey of life. The hope of the world lies not so much in reformation as in right formation.

The minds of noble and earnest men and women, the world over, are engrossed with the problem how to elevate purity and root out its antagonist, evil; but that problem would largely solve itself for future generations did the mothers of this generation appreciate to the full their privilege, and with consecration of heart and life seek enlightment and fitness for their God-given work, beginning at the very outset of the lives of their children to help them to become in their childhood and youth what they ought to be as men and women.

It is the misfortune of many mothers that they fail to awaken to their responsibilities at a sufficiently early period in the lives of their children. They think, as they watch their little ones in their cradles, as they hold them in their arms or guide their footsteps, "When my child grows older, I will endeavor to train him wisely." If for the present his physical needs are well supplied and the enjoyment of his waking hours assured, that is considered all sufficient. But in this the mother is mistaken. Her golden opportunity lies, as did that of Jochebed, in the earliest years of her child's existence.

One of the most universal sources from which arises the stream of impurity is the lack of proper training of the appetite, in that its gratification is not made subservient to right and reasonable ends. The appetite, like all natural instincts, is susceptible of education, both in a right and a wrong direction. This fact is often unrecognized, and the child's appetite left to a chance development, which far more frequently than otherwise leaves him subject to it rather than ruler of it. Depraved appetites are often inherited, but are as often created through lack of proper care and training, sometimes at the very beginning of life. Picture, if you will, the first epoch of the life of the average child. Eating is the first, and for sometime the chief activity of his babyhood. During this period of helplessness he is fed in season and out of season, without thought or regulation. Expressions of pain and discomfort are habitually met with proffers of food, until the gustatory sense, habitually gratified to appease the demands of all the other senses, becomes the regnant propensity. The immediate result of this treatment is the inauguration, at the very outset of life, of a disordered digestion and a morbid condition of the stomach, which creates a constant craving for the pleasurable sensation produced by eating and drinking. The ultimate outcome of such management is that it teaches the child to crave animal sensations, and establishes a dominance of appetite, a love to gratify the senses for the sake of the sensation, which, indulged in one direction, will be hard to restrain in others, and which will cast its influence over his entire life. The abnormal appetite created by deranged digestive functions opens a door, through which, if unguarded, the whole train of evils, gluttony, intemperance and impurity, may enter later on in life.

Purity of heart is a condition quite incompatible with sensual pleasuring of the appetite. How hardly, then, shall the soul that has through years of wrong education in childhood been in bondage to the appetites and propensities, arise and shake off its shackles, and bring the body under when the years of youth and maturity are reached! Wrong tendencies, as well as right ones, are continuously strengthened by exercise. The desire to gratify inclination and satisfy the taste does not lessen with the increase of years. As has been aptly said, "Impressions, inclinations, appetites, which a child may have derived from his food, the turn it may have given to his senses, and even to his life as a whole, can only be set aside with difficulty, when the age of self-dependence has been reached. They are one with his whole physical life, therefore intimately connected with his spiritual life."

The child who is taught to respect his own body as the temple of the Holy Spirit, lent him for his temporal use to be returned pure and undefiled to its Creator, will find it far easier to exercise control in the use of it. Self-reliance, early taught, will aid in making the child capable of self-entertainment in wholesome and profitable ways. The boy or girl who is wholly dependent upon some one else for entertainment and happiness, who does not know how to spend a leisure hour profitably, is in great danger. Such an one is easily led into pernicious associations, and may, only because of favoring circumstances, escape the path to ruin. Each good trait of character, like each single block in a granite wall, fills a special purpose in making the structure strong to antagonize vice.

It must be remembered that all effective preventive work must be twofold. It is not enough that we guard the outer approaches of character, seeking immunity from evil by efforts to keep it out of sight and knowledge of the young. We must instill into their hearts high ideals and purposes, and fill their minds with pure and noble principles. Something will fill the mind, something will leave its impress; if it be not good it will be evil. As was forcibly illustrated by the young man condemned to death, whose mother, visiting him in prison, exclaimed, "Oh, my boy! What has brought you to this awful end?" The young man sternly replied, "Mother, you are the cause." Bursting into tears she sobbed, "Why! what wrong have I ever taught you?" To which the son made the sad reply, "You taught me no wrong, but you neglected to teach me any good, and, as I knew no better I have sunk lower and lower, until I am here."

It is the mother's privilege to walk so closely side by side with her children, starting with them upon their own level, and so united in heart and sympathy that she may possess through life their fullest confidence, thus forming around them one of the surest and most lasting safeguards against vice which it is possible for human love and wisdom to construct. Said a mother of growing sons, when asked how she managed to keep her boys so firmly attached to home and so willing to spend their evenings there, "I live with them and try to be, not only a faithful mother, but an agreeable companion." If mothers could only be made to realize what a tower of strength such a living with their children may become, no effort would be considered too great to be spent in cultivating this sympathetic relation, for it must be cultivated if it is to be continuous. It must grow with the children; it must broaden with their years, and take in their play, their playmates, their studies, their reading, their work as well as their pleasures, their joys and sorrows and their deepest yearnings. Like a thread of gold interwoven through all the years of life, it will form a bond of union between the mother and her child which will enable them to work together to overcome evil and build up a life, the beauty and symmetry of which will bear the light of Heaven.

'TIS THE FIRST ONE THAT COUNTS.

BY S. JENNIE SMITH.

Beware of the first drink of liquor, my lad,
As that will lead on to the rest;
Turn away ere beginning a habit so bad,
For that way is surest and best.
Don't fancy you're strong and can stop at the first,
That one to a hundred amounts.
Refuse e'en a sip of this glass so accursed;
'Tis always the first drink that counts.

Beware of the very first smoke, my boy;
The cigar or the cigarette vile
Will multiply tenfold your health to destroy,
Your flesh and your blood to defile.
Then reject at the start this poisonous weed;
Remember your liberty's lost
If once you allow this foe to succeed;
And here, too, the first step will cost.

Avoid the first act of deceit, my dear;
When once you have turned from the truth,
Retracing your steps is not easy, I fear—
'Tis impossible almost, forsooth.
Beware of beginning with falsehood to deal;
That act good intention surmounts,
And by it your weakness you clearly reveal,
For 'tis always the first lie that counts.

Look out for the very first theft, my love,
Though it seem but a trifle so small,
Yet when judged by our Father who reigneth above,
It's reckoned a terrible fall.
Dishonesty grows till it brings forth the deed
Which to sorrow and ruin amounts;
Then beware when you're planting the very first seed,
For that is the moment that counts.

Avoid the beginning of anything wrong;
Fight bravely to conquer the first,
As that of itself is sufficiently strong
To quickly lead on to the worst.
For don't you see, darling, without number one,
There never could be two and three,
Or a still higher number? For sin not begun
Can claim no existence, you see.

SHARPENING TOOLS.

About the first thing you will learn is that it takes more grinding than you thought, to wear away a little metal. Cutting edges are tempered steel, and of course very hard. Generally speaking, edge tools should be perfect wedges in cross section. That is, the converging lines should be straight, not curved. Or they may be even curved inward in some cases, such as "hollow ground" razors. In the chisel, plane, drawing knife, adz, shears, and perhaps some other things, the slant is all on one side. In axes and knives, including the surgeon's lances and scalpels the slant is equally divided.

Suppose we begin with something easy, this half-inch chisel. Before starting the grindstone, find a place on this board, beyond the rag, where you can rest the end of the handle so as to make the slant of the chisel fit the surface of the stone. Mark the place or remember it. Turn the stone toward you in this case because when it goes the other way a feather-edge will conceal your work. You now have nothing to do but hold steady, and see that you do not grind off one corner more than the other. As the nicks vanish, bear lightly, and when the edge is smooth go to the hone. Here you must touch the whole surface of the slant upon the hone or you will make a curved line and a blunt edge.

Now you want a way to decide when the edge is perfect. Don't carve your thumb as your grandfather did, and don't flatter yourselves that you can see quite perfectly either, but just get a stick of white pine, such as dry-goods boxes are made of, and try the edge on that. See that you always have the same quality of wood. Try various cuts but the final test is a thin shaving, so thin that it is translucent and will curl as it comes off. And this, too, without grasping the tool firmly, but while holding it almost loosely. In the case of a pocket knife you push it with the thumb, not a whole hand grip, and should be able to skim up the shavings two or three inches long.

A plane is sharpened the same as a chisel; only, being wider, there is more danger of grinding one corner short. You must have a try-square and use it every minute or two. I believe we talked about curving the edge of the plane-iron before, didn't we? I should have said that a chisel must be slightly curved as well as a plane.

When you come to pocket-knives, you will find nine out of ten with curved sides. I have known professional knife-grinders to leave them so—perhaps because they know they will soon need attention again. They are hopeless cases for the hone; you must clap them on the stone. Get some kind of a rest, and a uniform position; look at the work often and hold steady until the stone can touch the blade from the thickest place to the edge. Make sure of this, and then go to the hone. Lay the whole side of the blade on the hone, bearing a little toward the edge, but do not lift the back of the blade from the hone. Try it on the pine stick and do good work. When a knife so sharpened becomes slightly dulled, a half dozen strokes on the hone will restore it. This can be done a number of times before it will need another grinding.

Soft metal will not hold a fine edge, and it is not worth while to try it. Here is a twenty-cent bread-knife. No need of scientific sharpening here. Grab a file, rest the blade on the end of a shelf to support it, and just file it sharp in thirty seconds. See that the file slides along the blade with every stroke, or you will make notches. This makes a rough edge, which is perfection for bread and carving.

You can sharpen shears with a file. Points from you, back of blade resting on edge of shelf. Make sliding strokes, for the least notch is fatal in shears. Even in grinding you must be careful not to curve the edges. Be very particular as to the angle of the edge. Poor workmen always make it too sharp. Better err the other way. Once the blades cut into each other, your shears are ruined. Study new ones for a pattern.

Here's a beautiful trick for giving shears a temporary edge: Take a sewing needle in the very points of the shears, as if to cut it in two. Hold the needle at right angles to the blades, and bring it up to the joint, forcing the blades wide open as it moves. Press gently upon it, but not so as to prevent making the movement in half a second. Might turn the shears over and repeat, to insure equal treatment of the blades; and now the dullest pair will cut the finest silk or wet tissue paper. This edge will not last long, but is worth everything to tired fingers while it does last. Some day a peddler will come along with an "electric" sharpener, a needle fastened to a piece of copper, with printed directions. It retails for fifteen cents, and is simply what I have just told you.

Now show your skill by applying my general rules to specific cases, and come next time prepared to hear about doors.

Vineland, N. J.

THREE REASONS.

I wish to give three reasons why all the boys and girls ought to be on the side of temperance. First, because they know enough about the evils of rum and the meaning of the pledge. Some one who thought boys and girls ought not to sign the pledge asked a little boy, "What does the word 'drunk' mean?" He answered, "Getting crazy on purpose." Then he was asked, "What does pledge mean?" He answered: "To promise something and stick to it." The man saw the boy understood it, and so he let him sign the pledge and work for temperance. The second reason that I want the boys and girls on the side of temperance is because men by and by will be in character what we get the boys to be now. Bad boys will most likely be bad men, and good boys good men. In France, when wicked tyrants were kings some of the boys had a band of hope, and when they marched they had on their flags the words, "Tremble, tyrants, we shall grow up." They intended to drive the wicked rulers out of the country when they were men. So temperance boys can say, "Tremble, intemperance and rum-selling, we shall grow up and put a stop to it." The third reason is because everybody can do something to help the cause of temperance, even the boys and girls. If there were only two temperance people in the world to-day, and each of them should get one more every year, it would be but thirty years before all the people in the world would be on the side of temperance. Let us all sign the pledge and keep it and get everybody else we can to let rum entirely alone. —W. F. Crafts.

SEATED at the dinner table a few evenings ago were the father, mother and their two young hopefuls, the youngest a five-year-old and very averse to going to school. The mother said to the eldest, "Ethel, Lent will soon be here. What are you going to give up?" She could not make up her mind, but Enid, as quick as a flash, said, "Mamma, I know what I will give up, I will give up school."—Boston Traveller.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Our fountain is now in Chicago, and I am glad to tell you that it will soon be placed upon the pedestal in the World's Fair grounds. The little girl is just as she has been pictured to you, and has the pleased and happy expression on her face that the giver of a cup of cold water "In His Name" ought to wear. And so she will stand, during the summer heat, with outstretched hand, as a type of the Loyal Temperance Legion round the world, extending the free gift of a cool drink to all who thirst and will take it. Blessings on the little bronze maid with her happy look, and on all His little ones everywhere who have helped to place her there.

Such numbers of children's pledge-cards have come that it has been impossible to place them all in festoons over the W. C. T. U. (the mothers') exhibit, so the rest will add to the decorations of the children's building at the Fair and plainly show to all the visitors there that the children's white-ribbon brigade is in reality and in name, a Legion. Affectionately,

NEPHEWS AND NIECES.

If I get to go to the World's Fair I shall visit the Temple. I thought the piece in the last UNION SIGNAL was very interesting about the meeting in Edinburgh, Scotland. I think that Lila Tibbits' suggestion is a very nice one about writing to each other. MARY C. BROWN.

Holder, Ill.

I am glad you liked the piece, and hope many Cozy Cornerers will act on Lila's suggestion and correspond.

Can I come in your Cozy Corner? I would like to be one of your nephews, too. I am not nine years old yet. I am a temperance boy and want to be a temperance man. My papa and mamma are temperance. I wish the Fair grounds would close on Sunday. GUY SHANEWISE.

Aurora, Ill.

You are very welcome, Guy.

I thought the picture of Willard Fountain beautiful. Mamma and I intend to go to the World's Fair and I want to see the fountain.

I want to join the Cozy Corner
Because I think 'tis right
To be a temperance worker
And work with all my might.

LURA MOLING.

Bethany, Mo.

And there's a jolly hand-clapping all around the circle at those last lines, Lura.

Will you please let me into the Cozy Corner? Mamma takes THE UNION SIGNAL and papa or I generally get it first; papa likes it for the temperance news, and I like it for the Cozy Corner. We both have Temple mite-boxes and are trying to fill them. GRACE FARNSWORTH.

Rio, North Dak.

You are one of us, little niece. If every temperance believer in the United States would fill a mite-box for the Temple, it would soon be all our own.

REAL ESTATE VERSUS PHILANTHROPY.

[The editorial which follows was printed in these columns July 28, 1892, and is reprinted now at the request of its writer, Frances E. Willard. It expresses the sentiments of the editorial force both at that time and the present, and it is due to Miss Willard that the public should be convinced that she has strongly resisted the use of our name and official titles in each and every enterprise of a personal or money-making nature.]

At the regular meeting of the directors of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, held in the office of the business manager, July 13, 1892, the following resolution, offered by the president of the National W. C. T. U., was unanimously adopted:

"Resolved, That we have no criticism to make upon our friends who have gone into the real estate, hotel or bichloride of gold business, or into any syndicate they may have seen fit to form, but we do not purpose to injure the influence of a great religious and philanthropic movement by permitting that influence to be in any wise utilized by any individual or corporation for the promotion of their own financial interests. Therefore,

"Resolved, That the name or the initials of the W. C. T. U. shall not again be used in any advertisement in any of our publications."

Another resolution, offered by Mrs. Louise S. Rounds, president of Illinois W. C. T. U., was unanimously adopted, namely:

"WHEREAS, Circulars have been received from the Woman's Land Association, wherein the business manager and others in the employ of such association use the letters W. C. T. U., and make allusions to our society with evident design to help float their project, we therefore

"Resolve, That they be requested to cease the use of such letters, and if the request be not heeded, that we publish the facts in the columns of THE UNION SIGNAL."

It was not intended by these resolutions to cast any reflection upon any association whatever. Probably it has not occurred to those thus using the name of the W. C. T. U. that there was harm in so doing, and we did not ourselves think of it at first. We have before us a circular that we have reason to believe has gone out broadcast over the country. It contains the following sentence: "The ladies interested in the association are all W. C. T. U. workers, and naturally we have had a hearty support from that organization." We are so deeply interested in the development of women along all lines of honorable occupation that we have been glad to lend a hand in all the years since THE UNION SIGNAL was founded, but the outlook has now changed. When the day of great things comes, one almost wishes that the day of small things had not passed! A few years ago none were so poor as to pay us reverence or revenues, but now the men and women who seek the W. C. T. U. as a peg on which to hang an enterprise, would make a procession reaching from the Woman's Temple a long way on the road toward the newest real estate venture in the illimitable suburbs of Chicago! All this has come about, not by wrong intention, but through the instinct of self-development and acquisition.

We are not writing this that we may blame our friends who are engaged in the endeavor to improve their fortunes, but we have been slowly waking to the significance of it all in its relation to the white-ribbon movement. In short, it was time to call a halt and this has now been done, with malice toward none and charity for all. We believe that real estate is apt to be an illusion and a snare to good people by reason of the obfuscation of their minds in dealing with it; for instance, we have been told by one of our leaders of an excellent man—a minister at that—who came to her and said if she would allow it to be known that she had bought a lot in a certain new section of the city she would never need to pay for the same, but it would be given her in recognition of her work, whereupon she replied: "I will accept the lot if you will allow me to state through the press that it was given me in consideration of my promise to speak well of the enterprise." But at this the fashion of his countenance was altered and he said: "Oh, no, that wouldn't do." It is needless to add that no "transaction" grew out of this interview.

Now it is quite likely that all the business ventures advertised in THE UNION SIGNAL are of par value. We have nothing to say to the contrary; indeed, we know nothing to the contrary, but we are not willing to stand in the attitude of "backers" to these enterprises, and we are the more determined not to do this because we have, perhaps, the most unique constituency that any paper has ever won. Those who read our columns are true, loyal, homelike, and to a great extent confiding people, who, if they see a thing advertised in THE UNION SIGNAL, think that it must have twelve inches to the foot, sixteen ounces to the pound, be warranted to wash, and all the rest of it. Since this is the case, we have tried from the beginning to choose from the great number of advertisements coming to us those that would do most good. In order to compass this we have been obliged to throw out from one-fourth to one-half of all those offered to the business department, and thus we have lost immense sums of money since the publication house was founded. But we find that our readers "jump at conclusions" as to our relations, especially to the real estate enterprises advertised in our columns; for instance, as a matter of good-will toward a fellow worker, the editor-in-chief of THE UNION SIGNAL agreed to speak some Sunday during the World's Fair at the World's Fair Hotel in an addition that has been made to the temperance town of Harvey. We had also said that we were glad a hotel was to be built there for temperance people (and we can freely say we should be glad if every hotel on the planet were of the same wholesome variety), but now appears a pamphlet with a presentation of our physiognomy wherein we are generously idealized, and the statement, "Read what the leaders say." Surely this is not in accordance with what we had supposed we were doing when we promised to make a speech as a token of our good-will. Again, a bichloride of gold institution was recently founded in the city, and connected with it a society for the moral and religious training of the men and women who came to be treated. We were asked to be one of the vice-presidents of this society, when, behold, a similar photographic presentation was made in the pages of a beautiful pamphlet which has gone broadcast over the country. We are warmly friendly to this movement and believe it to be doing great good; we also feel complimented to be set forth in such a handsome manner, although the sequel will be worse for us when those who accept the picture as correct have their mental image of us dashed to the earth by the facts as they exist should we ever come face to face. We are always glad to be associated with good men and women in their enterprises, but we feel that the impression made concerning our relation to these movements is not altogether correct, and for that reason we are writing this editorial.

A friend of ours to whom we were speaking in this strain a few days ago said, "But didn't you go into the soap business, giving your name to a saponaceous enterprise years ago in Maryland?" Yes, we did, but it was in our callow days and the bargain was that the W. C. T. U., and not any private individual or corporation was to receive so much on each cake of soap that it would sell. We claim that this was altogether different in spirit and intention from the business enterprises of which we have been writing. But we are now grown so way-wise that we are not sure we would accept the World's Fair as a present even if it were offered to the W. C. T. U. in fee simple—we should fear that behind it lurked some sort of speculation in corner lots.

We must give the credit of our practical wisdom in this particular to that noble man and eminent jurist, Judge Merrick, of New Orleans. We were in his home when the first of many offers came to us to be gratuitously insured as to the continuance of our longevity upon this sphere. We were simple-hearted enough to think it a good plan and most generous on the part of the agent, but the Judge remarked sententiously, "If you take my advice you will have nothing whatever to do with agents and enterprises; even though they may be 'all right' as men say, you, as a reformer, can never be mixed up with them except to the injury of your own standing and that of the reform in which you have embarked 'your life, your fortune and your sacred honor.' If I were you I would not own stock in any corporation and I would be able to say that my finances had not been enriched beyond an honorable maintenance and the ability to give somewhat to the movement as your prosperity shall warrant." We do not pretend to repeat our friend's language, but it was to this purport that he spoke. We, therefore, can take but little credit to ourselves for having acquired a certain amount of wisdom in respect to finances, and we hereby asseverate that the records of speculation will be searched in vain for any autograph of ours, and we believe this to be true of white-ribboners in general.

There are just three enterprises of a national character in which we have endeavored to enlist the great constituency that has our confidence even as we have theirs, and the outcome of all three is philanthropic and not personal, so far as gains go. These are the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, the Woman's Temperance Hospital and the Woman's Building Association, which last was organized for the purpose of erecting the Woman's Temperance Temple.

We are credibly informed that in many towns there are agents selling lots of land and other material of an earthly nature who make bold to go into meetings of the local unions, to exhibit copies of THE UNION SIGNAL and say to our simple-hearted women, "You see this is a great enterprise; THE UNION SIGNAL advertises it and we wish the opportunity to speak of it here and now." Against everything of this nature we must strongly protest, and against every such person we warn our local unions. When you see real estate advertised in THE UNION SIGNAL, inquire for yourselves, and remember it is a private venture with which no department or branch of the W. C. T. U. has any connection whatever.

We do not believe it to be right for money to be made by private individuals or business corporations out of the name, reputation and work of a society born in prayer and sacrifice, continued in faith and devotion, and, if we are loyal to God and humanity, certain to be crowned some day with such a consummation of its hopes as shall endear it to every home on earth, and hasten the coming of Him who is the light of life and whose kingdom is not of this world.

A STRONG LESSON FROM THE LIZZIE BORDEN TRIAL.

One of the most remarkable criminal trials in the history of our country has just come to a close in the city of New Bedford, Mass. Probably since the trial of Guiteau for the murder of President Garfield there has been no event of like nature which has so universally held the public eye and thought. The crime was a double one, committed under circumstances of peculiar atrocity. On the fourth day of August last, Andrew J. Borden and his wife, Abby Borden, were found dead in the house which had been their home for more than twenty years; and the proofs that they had come to their deaths through cruelest violence were too patent to admit of doubt. These facts in themselves were sufficiently horrible, but, when added to these comes the statement that the youngest daughter of the home, Lizzie Andrew Borden, was suspected, arrested, and has been confined in prison for the ten intervening months, having but just received the verdict, "not guilty," on June 20, we have a case unparalleled in the records of our courts.

That daughters have murdered their parents in the past is an incontrovertible fact. That women have been guilty of as atrocious crimes as have ever been committed by men, though fewer in number, is another statement which will not admit of contradiction. The cruelty of Lizzie Borden's arrest and trial does not depend upon either of the above premises; but it does depend upon the fact that, with insufficient evidence, with hardly a trace of anything which could cast suspicion upon her, in entire disregard of her past thirty-three years of absolutely blameless life, she was arrested, and has been held in duress, simply, as it has seemed, to prevent the Commonwealth of Massachusetts from appearing to have failed in finding the murderer or working out a theory of the murder.

During these months spent by Miss Borden in the Taunton jail, whenever her friends, and they have been many, have complained of the delay in her trial and the unnecessary suspense to which she was subjected, there have never been wanting those who would say, "Oh, you may be sure this delay is only merciful on the part of the government. They have so clear a case against her that her sentence is certain to be adverse. Wait till you hear the evidence they must have to warrant them in this course."

And the public has waited for ten long months; and Lizzie Borden has waited, her heart growing sick and faint within her as the days have dragged themselves wearily by. The great trial so long anticipated has at last transpired, and lo! the vaunted "proof" is found to be no proof; the very witnesses upon whom the prosecution most depended have been found of avail to the defense. Lizzie Borden is acquitted by a unanimous verdict, and the public, which has followed with intense interest every stage in the proceedings, cannot see how the verdict could have been other than "not guilty."

Surely there must be something radically wrong in the system of "justice" which makes such deeds possible. Surely there should be something demanded of the officers who enforce our laws other than a zeal to fasten crime upon a possible perpetrator. If such a course is to be allowed in the days to come, then no child in any home is safe against cruelty and violence should a like misfortune invade that home. If this be the system upon which our courts are run, then no past record in any life, though it be the most blameless, the most Christ-like, is to be considered a guaranty against the perpetration of the most atrocious crimes. If we are to take this case as a sample of what our country conceives to be a maintenance of the dignity of the law, then the dignity of the law can alone be maintained by hurrying to prison the first person suggested to an ignorant policeman as a possible assassin. From the first to the last of this trial, from the famous "Star chamber inquest" to the still more famous scenes in the New Bedford courthouse, the prosecution has acted as if it had but one object in view, and that to convict Lizzie Borden, whatever might be the facts in the case. Were any attempts made to find other clues? Were even the clues suggested by the sight of the mysterious stranger upon the street, to which so many testified, followed up? An unprejudiced investigation of the case seems to have been the last thing which presented itself to the minds of those who were supposed to be thus investigating it. They did not say, "We must not be biased in our judgment by what seems to us exclusive opportunity. We must give this girl the full right which belongs to her under our free institutions of being considered innocent until proven guilty." No, they said, "She did it," and then proceeded to make their facts fit their theory. With the warrant for her arrest in their pocket, they proceeded to twist her words in an inquest, where she was not allowed the presence of her friends or her counsel, where her brain, half paralyzed by the awful shock, and further benumbed by the morphine powders given her by her physicians, she was tortured into saying, she hardly knew what, in regard to the minor details of her time on that fateful and fatal morning. Did it occur to her inquisitors to ask themselves if they could give a categorical account of all their time for any certain day? Did it occur to them to think that, if she had been the astute person they gave her credit for being, she would have had her story so carefully prepared and learned by heart that nothing could alter her delivery of it one hair's breadth? Did they give her the benefit of the doubt in any one particular? No, they said, "Somebody did it, and we don't know who else it could have been, consequently it must have been you." Not exactly the logic upon which we should, any of us, care to have our own lives depend.

Lizzie Borden is acquitted, but what can ever make up to her for the anguish of these months? What can ever remove the shadow from her heart and life? She has passed through a Gethsemane of anguish such as comes to but few human beings. Her life must always be an overshadowed life. Such horrors are not easily forgotten nor wiped out. It is said that she intends to remain quietly in the old home believing that by living her life among those who have dealt so cruelly with her, she can best live down any remnant of suspicion. We honor the heroic courage which can plan such a course, but our hearts ache for the woman who must be subjected to the daily anguish of living it out. God help Lizzie Borden! Each white-ribboner should make this her daily prayer, for she, too, is a white-ribboner, bound to our hearts by that magic tie as well as by the closer bond of a common humanity.

The lessons to be learned in this ordeal are many, but not one comes so close to our thought as the great fact apparent at every stage, that justice can never be fully dealt out to a woman until she has a voice in the making and enforcing of the laws by which she is governed and under which she may be executed. If this awful event but opens the eyes of the mothers in our land to the fact that their own daughters are not safe with such laws upon the statute books, if it only arouses them to claim their right to a voice in the making of laws and the election of law-enforcers, then Lizzie Borden will not have suffered in vain. She will have made the way smoother for some innocent man or woman who may come after her along the thorny path of unjust suspicion.

THE Wesleyan Christian Advocate, Atlanta, which has for several weeks been carrying on a heated debate springing out of the refusal of the North Georgia Conference to indorse the W. C. T. U., closed the discussion in a recent issue with an article by Dr. Candler. The tenor of the Doctor's article is that the woman's suffrage tendencies of the W. C. T. U. are acknowledged, and therefore the white-ribbon army is unworthy of confidence. Unhappily for the Doctor, said army continues to increase in numbers and strength and unless all indications are deceptive, "in favor with God and man."

In regard to the suffrage question Dr. Candler says:

"As to the merits of woman suffrage, I do not propose to waste time and space. It is an unscriptural, unwise, suicidal revolt against God and nature."

And again he refers to "these days of female shriekers."

We are profoundly sorry for a man, especially a young man, and one who counts himself progressive, who has allowed the world to get so far beyond him that he does not know that woman's suffrage has long since passed the stage of development when it can be summarily dismissed by the unsupported assumption that it is "unwise, unscriptural and suicidal." The truth may be very bitter to such men as Dr. Candler, nevertheless it is the truth that it has become a matter of serious question whether woman's suffrage is "unwise," etc. Christian men as devoted in their allegiance to Christ, and quite as prominent in the church as Dr. Candler, believe that it is wise, scriptural and absolutely necessary to the salvation of the nation and to the further progress of humanity. It therefore requires either stupendous ignorance or unparalleled egotism for any man in this day to make the statement quoted from Dr. Candler.

The time is also fifty years behind us when calling names will injure any one or anything except the one who calls them. At the beginning of the woman's suffrage movement its advocates were egged and all sorts of epithets applied to them. To-day their doctrine has spread until it is treated with respect over the entire civilized world and they themselves are honored by the best men and women of the world. They may be mistaken in their views but every honest man believes that they are true, noble, gifted Christian women and admits that they have done a great work for Christ and humanity. The man who dubs them "female shriekers" only brings upon himself merited contempt.

Another writer in the same paper, referring to the action of the conference, says: "Never was action knightlier taken. The women of the South, if they had been present, would have rejoiced in the spirit of reverence and honor for the sex, and the eloquent tributes paid to their devoted activity against the liquor traffic." The good brother evidently thinks this is something new under the sun and that the women who are justly aroused by the insult offered them by the North Georgia conference are to be mollified by "pats and pretty words." But women who have been forced to an open conflict with the world are familiar with these "eloquent tributes" and have learned to estimate them at their true worth.

It is a well-nigh incomprehensible mystery, in view of the great work accomplished by the W. C. T. U. along numberless lines, the introduction by its department of education of temperance instruction into the public schools of all the territories and forty of the states of the Union, its homes for fallen women, its day nurseries for little children whose mothers are obliged to leave them all day to work for daily bread, its work in prisons, etc., ad infinitum, it is an inscrutable mystery, we say, in view of all this, how Christian men can refuse to give it the right hand of fellowship, even though at the same time they protest against its woman's suffrage views. Why can they not indorse what they believe to be good, and oppose only what they believe to be bad? No one can honestly question that these women mean right, surely it is better to trust them even when mistaken than the liquor traffic even if on some point the latter should chance to be right. But right here lies the weakness of the "children of the kingdom." For often they train their guns upon one another because, forsooth, on some minor points they disagree. Not so the "children of this world." They sink all minor differences and work unitedly for their evil end.

A young orator who recently made a speech against prohibition used the phrase, "I venture to think," twenty-five times in fifteen minutes. It is wonderful how venturesome some people can be.

At a recent meeting of ministers it was soberly suggested by one of them that the husbands of wives of talent be paid sufficient salary, so that they could put extra help into the kitchen and let the wives devote their time and talents to help their husbands.

The following naïve opinion of an educated young Japanese may be of value to Christian workers: "In the world there are many kinds of policy, and her policy is a good one. (Referring to a friend.) Perhaps she will not use one hundred per cent for good, but I think she will use seventy per cent for good. No one can use his or her power one hundred per cent for good. Even a Christian minister or missionary cannot work for good purpose only. They spend time or money thirty or fifty per cent for nothing, I suppose."

On Duty has recently come across some choice concealed treasures, and one of them is the undelivered address of welcome written by Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens, of California, for the Denver Convention last fall. Here is a pretty paragraph: "The central figure in the seal of California is a woman, a scepter in one hand, the other resting upon a shield, the cabalistic word 'Eureka' over her head. She sits calmly contemplating the magnificent harbor of the Golden Gate; the shadows on the mountains, the richly tinted clouds, all indicate the peaceful sunset hour, and the woman is seated at her ease, as if after many weary wanderings in search of an earthly Paradise, she had found the land of perennial sunshine."

"And O Lord! grant that we may not despise our rulers; and grant that they may not act so that we can't help it."
—Dr. Lyman Beecher, in a public prayer.

All nations have some kind of currency. That word is taken from the word "currere," which means "to run," expressive of the way money has of slipping through one's fingers. In Hindostan they use a kind of small shell, with which they are made to "shell" out.

An exchange gives an account of a native lady of India who had been converted through the work of a woman missionary of the Methodist Episcopal church. The convert was taken sick, and when she found that she must die, asked to be baptized. She was told that no woman had authority to perform the ceremony and, as under no circumstances could a man be permitted to enter the zenana, her wish could not be granted. At that, she called for water and solemnly baptized herself. This case, because of the faith and wisdom of the heathen convert herself, is stripped of its sadness, and is not to be compared with the terrible instance which a few months ago we copied from another paper in which a convert who might have been saved from the bondage of heathenism by the simple rite of baptism, was carried off and consigned to a life of shame while the women missionaries were gone to get a man to perform the ceremony. Nevertheless, both cases are "God's facts," pointing unmistakably to one and the same conclusion, that the time has come to set aside false sex discriminations and recognize that "in Christ Jesus there is no longer male or female."

It is most interesting to note the variety of directions in which women are branching out in these days. Each sturdy pioneer on a new path blazes the trees that others may find their way more readily. It is noteworthy that the latest development has resulted in giving us the most important discovery of its kind that has been made since Tischendorf found the Codex Sinaiticus in 1844. Mrs. Lewis, widow of the late Rev. S. S. Lewis, of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, recently made a journey in company with her sister, Mrs. Gibson, Mrs. Bensley and two gentlemen, across the desert with a caravan of thirty camels, enduring much hardship, and encamping at last in the garden of the famous monastery of Mount Sinai. Here, Mrs. Lewis on a previous visit had discovered and rescued a palimpsest, separated the leaves by steam from her kettle, and copied all the pages by photography. It contains the gospels in Syriac, and is a priceless treasure. The recent journey was made for the purpose of copying the old manuscript by hand, a most difficult task, as everybody knows who has any idea of the intricacy of the Syrian script and the mazes of the chirography.

DOMINION CONVENTION.

After a long ride over the rich fields of Manitoba and past small villages, a great surprise awaits the white-ribbon traveler as she approaches Winnipeg, the Prairie Queen city of the Dominion, numbering over forty thousand inhabitants; a surprise and delight that deepen the longer she stays. The beautiful homes, fine blocks of stores, handsome school-houses and churches betoken a prosperity that is easily accounted for, when on Sabbath morning all business ceases, the street cars all stop running, and the people, en masse, attend church service, in obedience to the command, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy."

In this attractive place, and into these delightful homes, the members of the Dominion W. C. T. U. were welcomed on June 15. The hospitality was emphasized by the fact that for a week they had been entertaining the Provincial union; but the cordiality of the welcome was not abated one whit. The great distance debarred many who would gladly have attended, so that numerically it was the smallest convention ever held by the Dominion. The meetings were held in the fine school-room of Knox Presbyterian church, and there, at half-past nine promptly, on Friday morning, the president, Mrs. E. F. M. Williams, called the meeting to order and conducted the devotional exercises. The regular committees were then appointed. The roll-call showed all the officers but the treasurer present, and twelve delegates. By some oversight the Manitoba fees were not forwarded in time, so their delegates could only be honorary members, thus lessening the number of voters.

Mrs. Cavers, president of Ontario, conducted a Bible reading on "God's presence with us." This feature of the convention was noticeable, in that the devotional exercises were never omitted or abbreviated, except once when workmen repairing the roof made so much noise it was impossible to hear.

The afternoon was devoted to reports; that of Miss Tilley, the recording secretary, was most encouraging. Every province had made a gain. Manitoba doubled its membership; Ontario and Quebec showed a large increase, the Maritime and British Columbia reporting accessions. At the close of the report the president asked the convention to rise and sing the Doxology, which was heartily done.

The public meeting was held that evening in Grace Methodist church, a fine, commodious audience room with a seating capacity of fifteen hundred. After the opening exercises, Mrs. Manhan, of Winnipeg, gave the address of welcome in a most pleasing manner. Mrs. Cunningham, of British Columbia, was to have responded, but being detained, Miss Bowes, of Vancouver, read it for her. Her allusions to the progress of temperance and the general prosperity of Manitoba were received with hearty applause. Greetings from the ministerial association were given by Rev. Mr. Turk, pastor of the church, also from Mr. Mulock, president of the Prohibition league.

The president then gave her address. She sketched the history of the Dominion union, its rise and progress, and in closing said it was customary to make birthday presents, and as this was the tenth anniversary of the Dominion, she took much pleasure in giving them a prize banner, which should be presented annually to the Provincial union showing the largest per cent of gain during the year. She then unrolled a beautiful banner of dark red plush, bearing a spray of maple leaves, and the words, "Dominion W. C. T. U. prize banner 1883-1893." At the close of the address the following resolution was passed: "That we accept with thanks the magnificent address of our president and that its suggestions be referred to the plan of work and resolution committees."

It would be unpardonable to omit mentioning the music rendered by the chorus choir during the evening. The selections were most appropriate, and beautifully sung. The convention was convinced that the musical standard in Winnipeg was of no mean order. It was a delight to hear the great volume of song that arose so heartily from the various congregations, led by such efficient choirs, as though they rejoiced to obey the command, "Let all the people praise Thee."

During the morning of Saturday Mr. and Mrs. Begg, of New Zealand, were introduced to the convention. They had left home, hoping to be present at the World's W. C. T. U., but being delayed for a few hours in Winnipeg, and seeing a notice of the Dominion union meeting, they came to the church. Mr. Begg gave an interesting account of the work in his country, and said that in the fall elections the women were to have the full franchise. This was greeted with applause. On leaving they were presented with copies of the Woman's Journal, Dominion reports and leaflets. Mrs. Norinne Law, one of the National W. C. T. U. organizers, was then introduced, and made an honorary member of the convention. The twenty-nine departments were all reported during convention, and the animated discussion that followed each paper was worthy of comment.

Public meetings were held every evening. That on Saturday was given to the vice-presidents, who reported the work in their provinces. Mrs. Blakley read a report of the Woman's Congresses in Chicago. On Sunday afternoon an evangelistic service was held in Zion Methodist church, conducted by the president, Miss Tilley, and Mrs. Cavers gave short Bible readings.

On Monday morning the election took place, resulting in the return of the old officers: Mrs. E. F. M. Williams, president; Mrs. Dr. Todd, vice-president at large; Mrs. Rutherford, recording secretary; Miss Tilley, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Tilton, treasurer. The convention prayer-meeting at noon was led by Miss Scott, editor of the Woman's Journal. The afternoon was devoted to a school of methods, conducted by the president in a masterly manner. Papers were read on the following topics: Literature as a departmental help; lectures and public meetings; duties of a local corresponding secretary; duties of a local recording secretary. Each was followed by discussion, and then came a parliamentary drill and the question-box. It was a very profitable feature in the convention, and it is hoped that one session, at least, will be given to this important branch of our work in all our conventions.

Monday evening the Y's held their public meeting in the Congregational church. The gallery running round the auditorium was hung with "bands of ribbon white," the platform decorated with palms and flowers, and on a dark, red shield behind the speaker was a large Y, made of white flowers. The girls, "our girls," were at their best; the papers, bright and suggestive, and the meeting a success.

The closing meeting took place on Tuesday evening in Knox church, when the prize banner was awarded to Quebec, but Manitoba, through its president, announced that it intended to capture it next year. After singing the good old hymn, "God be with you till we meet again," the convention adjourned sine die.

Too much cannot be said of the generosity of the press and the churches. The ladies of five congregations took turn in supplying lunches noon and night, and seemed to vie with one another in setting before us all the delicacies of the season. In fact, if there was anything omitted in any way that would have added to our comfort or happiness, we have not been bright enough to discover it yet. It was with "sorrowing yet rejoicing" that we saw the spires of the churches fade out of sight as the cars bore us swiftly away. Sorrow at parting, but joy in the thought that now, if never before, we know and are known, and never again can there be anything but a warm, loving tie between the white-ribboners of the eastern provinces and those dwelling on the golden plains of Manitoba.

IOWA.

DISTRICT CONVENTION ECHOES.

Although it is some time since this state has been heard from, her women are resolutely holding the ground and gaining in membership and unions. Many county and district conventions have been held during the past few weeks. Louisa, Guthrie, Clayton, Floyd, Mitchell, Dubuque, Delaware and other counties have had profitable meetings. Our state president has attended as many of these as it was possible for her to reach.

It was stated at Washington county convention that the W. C. T. U. in the little city of Washington had discovered that nearly $2,000 worth of tobacco and cigars had been sold in one month, and this in a city of less than 4,000 inhabitants.

At Clayton county convention held at Edgewood there was a children's meeting, when the body of the church was filled with favored children who never saw a saloon. The fathers in that place are a lookout committee who me t very enterprising owner of a billiard table and would be saloon-keeper more than half way with such a convincing "no admittance here," that they are forced to turn back before the dust of that place even touches their shoes. Alas, this is not the case in many cities and towns in Iowa; prohibition does not prohibit here as it did a few years ago. Still the law is well enforced in the larger part of the state.

At the eleventh district convention Mrs. Joanna B. Shesler was elected president for the eleventh time. This tried and true worker is enshrined in the hearts of the white-ribboners of her roomy territory.

The third district convention was held in Hazleton. Mrs. Dunham, Miss Estey, state superintendent of Y's, and Miss Cecilia Probert, state superintendent of school savings bank department, and other helpers were in attendance. Mrs. Dunham, Rev. Abby R. Hinckley and Miss Estey rendered invaluable assistance at the fourth district convention at West Union early in June. The world's social purity congress drew away our Mother Benedict who is the personal property of this district. Delegates were present from seven counties.

Our state president everywhere speaks strongly in favor of pressing Temple work, assuring the women that as one of the Temple trustees she assisted in investigating the Temple management after the cruel attacks upon its noble founder, and was satisfied that the charges were utterly groundless. But our women knew all the time that our Mrs. Carse was pure gold and have been passing resolution upon resolution expressing unwavering trust in her integrity and ability, and a steadfast purpose to stand by the enterprise until she shall have the joy of presenting to our National society this magnificent proof of her unselfish devotion.

The addresses of state and district presidents at the fourth district convention were clear and decided against the manipulation of party politicians to compass the overthrow of prohibition.

It is well known that prohibition in Iowa hangs in the balance in the hands of demagogues. It has been repeated again and again that Republican leaders were forced to work for the enactment of our present statutory law to appease the wrath of the people on account of having been defrauded of our organic prohibitory law by political trickery. But these leaders made no adequate provision for enforcement, some of them insolently saying: "Now, we've given you the law, let the long-haired cranks and short-haired women enforce it."

True-hearted men and women, in the face of the most powerful opposition, and at heavy personal expense, have done all they could to beat back the incoming tide. Less than a dozen papers in the state stand pledged to exert their influence for prohibition; the great majority are keeping the people blinded in regard to the real danger that confronts us.

True friends of prohibition are misrepresented and misunderstood, obliged to endure ridicule and revilings, and the grief of having those who would be their strongest supporters, did they know the truth in the case, regard them as working against the law they are doing their utmost to maintain. Politicians have condoned and fostered the criminal work of liquor dealers until they will brook no interference with their lawless business, as witness the terrible Muscatine outrages, wrecking three happy homes by dynamite, and imperiling the lives of fifteen innocent persons.

We are diligently watching the different schemes to destroy prohibition and save "the party." The Ohio mulct law has been declared, by a man greatly honored, to be a "NO-LICENSE mulct TAX," a "step of progress." With specious reasoning he endeavors to convince his readers "that this Ohio plan keeps all we've got for temperance and gets something more"—the "something more" being nothing less than the saloon vote. Other devices have been planned, but one by one each treacherous scheme has been exposed by the few papers that stand for the right.

The great-hearted masses want prohibition, but they are bewildered and prejudiced by the misstatements of a high-license press. The Prohibitionists have held their convention, and have nominated a full state ticket, headed by one of the noblest men in Iowa, Hon. B. O. Aylesworth, president of Drake University, Des Moines, for governor, and as may be expected, the pens of pretended friends of prohibition are turned against him to work his ruin. May the Lord shield this great man from all the fiery darts of the enemy, and enable him to stand firmly for the right, as God gives him to see it.

A medal contest was held in Davenport some time ago composed of colored contestants. The music was rendered by five colored boys, who have been banded together for over a year fighting whisky and tobacco. The church was crowded, the speaking excellent, the listeners enthusiastic, and since then the frequent inquiry has been, "When will you have another?" The programs were sandwiched with advertisements, for which $31 was received by the union, the ticket money amounting to $28 more. Best of all, a union of colored women is expected to follow soon.

U. S. Government Baking Powder Tests.

The report of the analyses of Baking Powders, made by the U. S. Government (Chemical Division, Ag'l Dep't), shows the Royal superior to all other powders, and gives its leavening strength and the strength of each of the other cream of tartar powders tested as follows:

	LEAVENING GAS. Per cent.	Cubic in. per oz.
ROYAL, Absolutely Pure,	13.06	160.6
The OTHER POWDERS TESTED are reported to contain both lime and sulphuric acid, and to be of the following strengths respectively,	12.58	151.1

NOTES.

Two new unions have been organized in the fourth district.

The state president has calls from several points in the district to effect organizations, and is now at work here.

Our Iowa workers heartily indorse the "do-everything policy," our only regret being that we can't do more good in every direction in these evil days.

Belmond union sustains a reading room, which is cleared of reading matter every Saturday by its busy bees, who roll up literature and place the packages in farm wagons. This union saved $4 self-denial week, and sent to World's treasurer.

NEW JERSEY.

HARD WORK WITH A BIT OF SUNSHINE.

While winter has been rapidly passing into the lap of summer, seemingly I have neglected to chronicle the many events which have been transpiring in our midst; but the pleasure of writing them has been denied me for a time, therefore the "little bits" of the multitudinous matter accumulated is all I can now give you, or at once you'll exclaim—"stale news!"

Twenty-one counties have held their spring meetings, and if space would allow, I could tell you something good of each, but must sum up for all. Increased attendance and interest have been marked features of the sessions, the discouraged have been strengthened, and all along the line there is an unwavering firmness, coupled with a persistency native to woman, "never to give up."

Mrs. Bourne, state president, has been most abundant in labors, attending nearly all the county meetings, and in various practical ways aiding in their success. Just now she is consummating plans for a successful school of methods at that cosmopolitan place—Ocean Grove, July 6 and 7, a full account of which I hope to give you in my next.

Resolutions if acted upon mean much; but if only on paper, are of but little account, therefore I seldom repeat them, but these, passed at the Salem and Camden county meetings, are so appropriate to our present situation I append one from Salem and two from Camden:

Resolved, That since all laws licensing crime such as liquor-selling and gambling are a disgrace to the commonwealth, and unjust to the mothers, wives, sisters and daughters of their victims, we call upon the Christian voters of the state to protect the women and save the men and boys, by sending honest men to our legislature, men who cannot be bought with the proceeds of wickedness.

WHEREAS, Recognizing the fact that as men failed as citizens and voters to keep a disgraceful element out of our legislature this past winter, therefore,

Resolved, That we, as members of a Christian organization, ask that women either have the liberty of the ballot or else that our representatives see to it that our state shall no longer be disgraced by passing laws legalizing race tracks and gambling.

WHEREAS, The supreme court has declared that the right to sell liquor is not an inherent right to citizenship, that no legislature can barter away the public health or public morals; and that the saloon is inimical to the public health, public safety and the public morals.

Resolved, That the logical chain of decisions is complete, declaring license unconstitutional, and the sa- loon an outlaw and

Resolved, That we call upon our brothers to force the test case in courts, pledging ourselves to stand by them, with our money and our prayers.

Mercer and Burlington gave several helpful and interesting papers: At Mercer, on "Narcotics," "How to reach young girls who are bread winners," "How to hold Reform Men," "Is Cider Prohibited in the Bible?" While at Burlington, the "Value of THE UNION SIGNAL to the White Ribboners," and to give impressiveness to a very able paper on the flower mission by its superintendent, a new feature was introduced; each union was requested to send a small floral tribute, tied with white ribbon, and a card with name of the union and Scripture text attached. After being used for decorations during the day they were sent to the sick "shut-ins" in the village as souvenirs of the convention, thus a double mission was served by them.

Flower mission day has been most sacredly observed, as never before, in memory of Miss Jennie Casseday.

Through the courtesy of the state secretary on Sunday-schools, Mrs. Applegate, superintendent of Mercer county for this department, was invited to speak for our cause at a recent meeting of the Sunday-schools in Trenton.

Middletown, Monmouth county, has recently dedicated a new hall costing about one thousand dollars. The Y's united with the W's in making the undertaking a financial success.

Moorestown, always prolific in new ideas, offered a prize to any pupil of the schools who should write the best essay, showing the effects of tobacco upon the human system. Forty-five essays were handed the judges, showing a deal of thought and research, and the prize was won by a girl. Later on an entertainment was given by the L. T. L's, entitled the "Trial of Prince Nicotine." About forty pupils dressed in costumes representing different nations of the world, took part in the trial conducted just as cases are tried in court, and was both instructive and pleasing.

Cumberland county has been utilizing their young people by engaging them in Demorest medal contests, and is now entitled to hold a gold medal contest by a class made up of the six who have already won a silver medal. Our L. T. L's have, at almost every county meeting, been a special feature in the program and this is as it should be, for our strongest hope is in the future man. Mrs. May Sparks, the state superintendent, has been exceedingly helpful in making this advance along the Legion lines.

The Essex county Legions had a large gathering at Newark. Four hundred children from the various Legions were in attendance, and six scholars who have been under instruction for two years were awarded the first diplomas ever given in our state. A beautiful souvenir was given each child present, as well as refreshments, at the close of a delightful exercise made up of recitation and song. Hudson county L. T. L's met in Hoboken and six diplomas were given. The superintendent of an infant class numbering three hundred in Jersey City gave an object lesson, showing how alcohol in liquor injures, and four boys—while the room was darkened and gas lighted—with great solemnity carried out a bottle on a bier to bury it and its contents, which was very impressive. After a short talk by the pastor of the church, all adjourned to a picnic in a grove near by, thus mingling profit and pleasure in an afternoon's entertainment.

East Orange L. T. L's have had a Mother Goose entertainment, also a military drill for boys and a cantata—"Columbia's Reception"—by the girls, which was very successful every way. Many of our best speakers have been in the state, some for lectures, others at county meetings. Among them we find Dr. Anna Shaw, Mesdames Lathrap, Burt, Boole, and Miss Yates, while Anthony Comstock has been stirring up the slumbering parents on the evils of impure literature, near their own door, perhaps.

Mrs. Ellis, our loved state corresponding secretary, has been very near that shore from which no incoming tide ever comes; but thanks to our Heavenly Father, she seems now to be slowly coming back to strength and life. Mother Penfield, as we all love to call her, keeps our cause as a state and the wider interests of the National and World's unions ever at the throne of grace; and who but the Eternal knows how we should go astray if it were not for the pleadings of these "shut-in mothers"? May they long be spared to us, to help and bless our labor.

While the supreme court of our state is hearing the arguments in the race track suits, all the tracks have been licensed all over the state and are making great preparations for opening the season on our nation's birthday. Already fruit is ripening to the sorrow of many households. One case occurs to us of the many—the Pennsylvania Railroad agent at East Moorestown, although hitherto a very upright citizen, has by his own confession attributed his downfall to the Gloucester races, and now awaits his trial in jail as a defaulter for $1,800, while his wife is suffering untold agony in their once happy home.

Recently the court of errors and appeals has rendered a favorable opinion for the Prohibitionists, and they can now use the official ballot, by striking off all candidates and inserting their own without petition, which previously they had to do under our new ballot reform law. Now let the brethren educate the Christian voter as to his privilege and soon there will be the dawning of a better day, when race tracks and their twin brother, the saloon, shall be a forgotten dream!

SOUTH DAKOTA.

SUMMER GLEANINGS.

The golden moments in the stream of life rush past us in these rare June days with a quicker ebb and flow than is usual, and as we note the passing from earth of those who have so faithfully borne the "burden and heat" of the battle we, in this fair young state, feel more and more the need of training the young among us to efficient service in the temperance cause. There is in Pierre a splendid opportunity for just such work. As I look over the field here I long for efficient help to lead these young people in the right way.

The Hughes county W. C. T. U. convention was held in Pierre, June 6 and 7. The churches in which the convention was held were beautifully decorated for the occasion; the welcome given the visiting delegates was hearty and sincere, and your correspondent believes that good was accomplished. The address of welcome was given by Miss L. J. Robinson, of the Pierre University. A graduate of an Ohio institution, a lady of rare culture and good sense, Miss Robinson always gives efficient aid wherever found.

Our honored president, Mrs. H. A. Fentress, living just now on a Dakota ranch, came to preside over the gathering, with a heart full of prayer and with a host of good words on her tongue. She is the embodiment of the Crusade, living on these far-away Dakota prairies. Her address was forcible and full of good thought. She was unanimously reëlected president of the county organization. "Many will rise up and call her blessed." The papers, "Personal Responsibility" and "The Leprosy of Society and its Remedy," were requested for publication.

A strong effort is being made by the Christian women of Pierre to help their fallen sisters to a better life. May I not make an appeal in this column to South Dakotans for these sisters of ours, for whom earth's gladness and fulness seem not to be? Who will help us, either with influence or money, to build a "home" here which shall be a shelter for those desiring to be redeemed? No work for Christ could, it seems to me, bring better returns. To save a soul from death is more than to wear an earthly crown.

How satisfying at the close of one's earthly pilgrimage, to hear the voice of the Master saying,

"Go in peace this day to the haven wide,
Thou shalt see His face, and be satisfied.
Thou shalt know His heart, and rest in Him
With a peace that passeth thy knowledge dim.
Not for thyself alone, but for all
Thy heart has yearned for, great and small.
And some shall enter the haven wide
Full sail, on the breast of a glorious tide.
And some shall come, sore, battered and spent from an angry sea.
But thy heart shall count them one by one,
Till God has gathered them all to thee."

SHINING SKIES.

JUNE is here with her bright days and pleasant weather; her green lawns and brilliant flowers, and her fast ripening fruit. How we revel in her sunshine and shade, swinging in hammocks or lying on couches on shaded piazzas, reading the last new book or magazine, while leaving the work-a-day world far behind us! Surely it is the poet's month, and a month for everybody to be happy in.

Three reports have found their way through the mail since last writing. Morristown meets weekly, on Tuesday. The first Tuesday of the month is their business meeting; second, prayer-meeting; third, mothers' meeting; fourth, parlor meeting. They have distributed social purity leaflets and other literature where they thought it would do the most good. They did what they could for the election of the prohibition candidates before the last election. They worked faithfully for the passage of our bills before the last legislature (for scientific temperance instruction and the better protection of girls), circulating petitions, writing their representatives, etc. They also circulated petitions for the abolition of the smoking compartment in sleeping cars.

Their last parlor meeting was an unusually pleasant one. They had music, prayer, talks by the pastors, and select reading from THE UNION SIGNAL. Then came a discussion of W. C. T. U. work, and after that a general, nice, social time. They have sent temperance and religious literature to the jail; $7.30 to the Temple at Chicago, and $3 to the Temperance Hospital. Mr. and Mrs. Bailey, the prohibition singers, visited Morristown and gave two enjoyable entertainments, during which five new members were added to their number.

Harriman union is working faithfully, as usual. Their meetings are held weekly on Thursday. The first Thursday in the month a Bible reading; the second Thursday a program arranged by the superintendent of some department; third, a business meeting; fourth, a mothers' meeting; fifth, a parliamentary drill. The second meeting in May the program was prepared by the superintendent of prison work, and was quite interesting. A week or two since they had a memorial service to Jennie Casseday, after the program in THE UNION SIGNAL. A few days later they visited Kingston, where the Roane county jail is located. There they were kindly and courteously welcomed by the county officers and the pastor of the M. E. church. They were conducted to the jail, where services were held, and each prisoner presented with flowers, and a Scripture text card. Then they distributed literature.

Harriman union has built a magnificent W. C. T. U. temple. The entire cost of the building has been $9,000. Of this, about $5,000 has been paid, there remaining due on the temple about $4,000. They are sending out urgent appeals to the friends of the W. C. T. U. everywhere for money to help pay off this debt, fearing that this great money stringency may result in the loss to them of this beautiful building. This temple has a seating capacity of about one thousand people. It has one large room, with gallery and several smaller rooms. Here, of course, the city W. C. T. U. has headquarters. In this hall several state conventions of different religious, benevolent and philanthropic bodies have been held. It is the hall in which all the important meetings held in the town are convened. Out of debt, it would be a source of considerable income to the W. C. T. U. It is a worthy object, and merits the assistance of every friend of the W. C. T. U.

Jonesboro union is an earnest, faithful, consecrated band of women, and interest in their work grows daily. They meet regularly every Thursday, and hold a mothers' meeting once a month. These meetings are well attended, and full of blessed results. Active work is being done in all the departments they have taken up. The superintendent of press work seems specially wide awake, as she never misses filling a column in their weekly paper. They observed flower mission day on the 8th of June, flowers being sent to the sick and to the prison. They have had a few lectures and several entertainments, from which they realized fair sums.

There is an effort being made to organize our state into district unions. Presidents of these unions have been appointed by our state president, and urgently requested to proceed to the work of organization. That this movement will result in good to the union in this state there can be little doubt.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

THE Orange, N. J., W. C. T. U. has grown to splendid size, numbering 120 members, who are doing good work. Mrs. Louise Downs Quigley writes: "I shall not rest until every one of the 120 has THE UNION SIGNAL."

MISS FRANCES GRIFFIN has been in Arkansas the better part of two months and by special and popular invitation will deliver the Fourth of July address at Little Rock, her subject being "The Girl I Left Behind Me."

MRS. H. A. STONER, one of the most faithful workers in the East Lincoln union, and a warm friend of THE UNION SIGNAL, died May 23, in Lincoln, Neb., after an illness of five months. The union will greatly miss the help and inspiration of her work.

MISS LUCIA KIMBALL, of Portland, Me., has been made National lecturer of the department to secure homes for homeless children. Miss Kimball has long been at the head of the Sunday-school work of the white-ribboners and can readily combine with it this added effort for good, as she is continually on the wing, speaking and writing on behalf of the children. The purpose of this department is to secure a home for every homeless and unprotected child, and so far as possible to leave no childless home uninvited to accept a little guest from the ranks of the forgotten and forlorn. Mrs. Margaret Merrill is at the head of this department, and any wishing to learn her method can write to her at 99 Winter street, Portland, Me. The New Hampshire W. C. T. U. has recently adopted this department of work, also the state of Louisiana in carrying out its plans.

MAJOR E. T. SCOTT held a very successful series of temperance meetings lasting ten days, recently, in Pasadena, Southern California. Beginning with an audience of six hundred in the tabernacle, where the B. Fay Mills' meetings were held, every seat, which means 2,200, was occupied the last night when Major Scott spoke, while Mrs. Scott addressed an immense audience in the large Congregational church the same hour. Every religious body in the city, save one or two, united in the work, the pastors respectively presiding in turn. Throop University was ably represented by several of its professors participating in the preliminary exercises of each service. The influence of these meetings as a result of Major and Mrs. Scott's work is seen in the remarkable advance of prohibition sentiment among all classes in the city and vicinity, while the advocates of high license have received a serious check in their designs.

THE W. C. T. U. in Evanston, Ill., has branched out on a new line of the white ribbon work. Under the care of Mrs. Jane Eggleston Zimmerman, sister of Edward Eggleston, the novelist, a night school for boys has been organized and is a pronounced success, the pupils being earnest, eager, and doing their "boys' best" to behave. During the winter there have been as many as seventy pupils. Subscriptions have been made by well-to-do business men. Along with the three R's an effort is made to instill principles of purity in the habits of life, and to win the boys to a higher sense of manliness, at the same time amusing them and interesting them so that they will be kept off the street and away from the influence of bad companions. Mrs. Zimmerman writes: "The burden is heavy in addition to my other cares, but it is such a glorious opportunity to influence and help forward our working boys that I cannot be sorry the task was set for me."

THE WOMAN'S LECTURE BUREAU.

During the World's Fair the Woman's Lecture Bureau has its headquarters in the organization room of the Woman's Building.

We will be pleased to meet patrons, lecturers and visitors, and talk over the work of the coming season.

We trust that great good will result from our summer's work and we wish to urge upon all who sympathize with the work of the Bureau that every effort possible be made to put this department of work on the footing it deserves. This can only be done through the effective coöperation of the local county and state unions.

We have a few dates at our disposal of the popular Swedish lecturer, Miss Cecile Gohl, subject: Home life in Sweden (in costume) and the famous Smith sisters concert sextette. Mrs. Laura Ormiston Chant and Mrs. Fenwick Miller, of England, will fill a few engagements.

The following lecturers are under our management, and we call your attention to the splendid list of workers:

Frances E. Willard, on her return home.

Lady Henry Somerset, while visiting this country.

Rev. Anna H. Shaw.* Pennsylvania and Ohio early fall.

THE JULY MAGAZINES.

The CHAUTAUQUAN for July contains the detailed program of public exercises and entertainments which will take place at Chautauqua during the approaching season. Among the familiar names that appear on this list of rare treats are Prof. Henry Drummond, Dr. Herrick Johnson, Mr. Leon H. Vincent, Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson, Mrs. Josephine R. Nichols, Mrs. Kate Douglas Wiggin, Dr. Edward Eggleston, Rev. Joseph Cook and many others.

CURRENT LITERATURE for July devotes some fifty pages to World's Fair material which will be of double value since it serves as a reliable guide when those who contemplate visiting the Exposition are "reading up" beforehand, and when the visit is over such material helps to crystallize memories that might otherwise become vague and confused. "Life on the Midway Plaisance" is the cream of the article in question, giving rare descriptions of the quaint and curious sights there beheld.

The Current Literature Publishing Company, 52-54 Lafayette Place, New York City.

The Columbian number of the CHILDREN'S HOME FINDER, Davenport, Iowa, is of more than ordinary interest, as it contains in compact form a summary of the work performed by the Children's Home Society, of which it is the organ, during the four years of its existence. The rapid and strong growth of this society in the past year is convincing evidence that its organization and methods offer the very best solution of the child-saving problem. The HOME FINDER contains, besides this summary, a carefully-prepared illustrated article on the World's Fair, and several other interesting features.

In SCRIBNER'S magazine for July, W. Hamilton Gibson contributes the first of a group of Artists' Impressions of the Fair—brief articles by men who are accustomed to look at things from the picturesque side, with many illustrations from the notebooks of the artists who write the papers. Mr. Gibson has written of the landscape-gardening aspect of the Fair, under the title of "Foreground and Vista." His illustrations give beautiful glimpses of the Wooded Island, the Rose Garden, the Japanese Temple, and Horticultural Hall, with their great variety of flowers and trees from every country of the globe. The series on "The Poor in Great Cities" is concluded with a very thoughtful paper by Oscar Craig, president of the New York State Board of Charities, summarizing the results of the most approved methods for "The Prevention of Pauperism."

The HOMILETIC REVIEW for July comes to hand with a varied and interesting table of contents. "The Higher Criticism" finds sympathetic treatment at the hands of Rev. J. Westby Earnshaw, whose article is nevertheless discriminating and conservative. The Rev. James M. Campbell writes with ability on "The Truths of Scripture Verified in Christian Experience." Dr. Wm. Elliot Griffis tells the story of Bartholomeus de Glanvilla, under the title, "A Fourteenth Century Preacher's Companion." Professor Hunt, of Princeton, gives a helpful paper on "Religious Books and Reading," and Dr. William Hayes Ward continues his series of contributions on "Light on Scriptural Texts from Recent Discoveries," with a brief account of "The Babylonian Creation Story." The Sermonic Section contains much material of interest to preachers, and other sections are of equal interest.

Published monthly by Funk & Wagnalls Company, 18 and 20 Astor Place, New York City.

The July issue of LIPPINCOTT'S contains a handsomely illustrated article by Barr Ferree, entitled "Chicago Architecture." Among the illustrations are, the Auditorium, Studebaker Building, Art Institute, Masonic Temple, the Temple, the Rookery, Chamber of Commerce, the Tacoma, City and County Building. High tribute is paid to the modern architecture of the City by the Lake: "No other American city can claim such a record, and it is not the least glory of the whole that the artistic results are as satisfactory as they are characteristic. . . . At last America has buildings worth going a thousand miles to see, and the traveler who sets forth from New York on his first Western tour will find in the buildings of Chicago some examples of a new form of architecture, a more sensible and more business-like treatment than he will find at home. The least impressive of the lessons he takes away with him will not be the one he gains from the study of Chicago's new buildings."

ENGULFED IN THE NAME OF VICTORIA.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The first telegraphic dispatch announcing the foundering of the battleship Victoria stated that it was the most serious calamity of the kind, in respect of the loss of life involved, that was known in British annals. This was an error, however, soon corrected. When the Royal George went down in the quiet sea, as she was undergoing repairs off the harbor of Portsmouth, there was nearly or quite double the loss of life that occurred in the recent awful catastrophe. The poet Cowper in his elegy upon "The Loss of the Royal George" thus mournfully sang:

"It was not in the battle;
No tempest gave the shock;
She sprang no fatal leak,
She ran upon no rock.

"His sword was in his sheath,
His fingers held the pen,
When Kempenfelt went down
With twice four hundred men."

It appears that there was a ball in progress at the time, and, it was said, hundreds of degraded women went down unwarned to a watery grave with the seamen and soldiers. Pity it is to destroy the poetry that may be in a measure associated with the historic event referred to, but we seek the truth and the whole truth, and for the good of our fellows of the living present it may be well to tell it in plain prose.

"On a ship coming into port," said an English naval officer, half a century or more ago, "large numbers of prostitutes are frequently allowed to come and live on board, or come off in the evening, and are sent ashore in the morning." A naval officer of our own said of his ship while in Port Mahon, "I have seen five hundred of these lost, degraded creatures on board at a time, all the decks full of them, between the guns, and in every direction were they to be seen with the seamen."

But, it will be said, it is not at all likely that the naval and the military service of to-day is witness of such shocking demoralization. Nevertheless, to take the case of England's vast dependency of India, we know without a doubt that the operation of the "cantonment acts" in that country is such as to continuously involve the degradation and ruin of great numbers of Hindu girls, to satisfy the lust of the resident soldiery from Christian England. Engulfed, alas, in the name of Victoria, Queen of England and Empress of India! Hundreds of these wretched creatures foundering in the sea of life year by year! The battleship and its four hundred have gone down, and all Britain is shocked and stirred withal with profoundest sympathy. When shall be similarly manifested the tokens of national sorrow because of that greater holocaust of Hindu maidens sacrificed year after year to the God of war?

PETITION OF THE WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION FOR THE PROTECTION OF THE HOME.

Addressed to the Governments of the World.

Honored Rulers, Representatives and Brothers:

We, your Petitioners, although belonging to the physically weaker sex, are strong of heart to love our homes, our native land, and the world's family of nations.

We know that clear brains and pure hearts make honest lives and happy homes, and that by these the nations prosper, and the time is brought nearer when the world shall be at peace.

We know that indulgence in Alcohol and Opium, and in other vices which disgrace our social life, makes misery for all the world, and most of all for us and for our children.

We know that stimulants and opiates are sold under legal guarantees which make the Governments partners in the traffic, by accepting as revenue a portion of the profits, and we know with shame that they are often forced by treaty upon populations, either ignorant or unwilling.

We know that the law might do much, now left undone, to raise the moral tone of society and render vice difficult.

We have no power to prevent these great iniquities beneath which the whole world groans, but you have power to redeem the honor of the nations from an indefensible complicity.

We therefore come to you with the united voices of representative women of every land, beseeching you to raise the standard of the law to that of Christian morals, to strip away the safeguards and sanctions of the state from the drink traffic and the opium trade, and to protect our homes by the total prohibition of these curses of civilization throughout all the territory over which your Government extends.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

And one of them when he saw he was healed, turned back, and with a loud voice glorified God. And he said unto him, Arise, go thy way; thy faith hath made thee whole.—Luke 17:16, 18.

The following extract is taken from a lengthy article in the New York Sun, of June 7, on the Temple: "The Woman's Temple is the splendid monument of woman's enthusiasm, hard business sense and clever financiering. It stands on the corner of La Salle and Monroe streets, one of the best business sites in Chicago. In its exterior it is an ornament to the city. . . . It is the interior, however, that discloses in its shining propriety, its purity of color, its spotless cleanliness, the fact that it is a woman's building. The white marble fittings assist this aspect. The entrance is into a marble rotunda, whence a row of wrought iron cages are flashing to and fro like shuttles; floors of mosaic, wainscoting of white marble, a field of cream and a frieze of clear glass frame in the halls, which are lighted from the windows in the rear wall. From top to bottom the vast building is kept like a parlor. . . . This building, with its buoyant sense of lightness, pleasant color and cleanliness, so distinctly different from the office buildings which shelter the varied enterprises of men, not only in dusky Chicago, but in the clearer atmosphere of New York, it is not surprising to learn, receives higher rents than any other building in the city, except one."

Many white-ribboners are greatly disappointed when visiting the Temple of which they are so justly proud, not to find the name of their union enrolled on the tablets in Willard Hall. We trust that all such persons will return to their homes with the determination to stir up their union to undertake the work of raising $100, and thus do their part toward paying for the Temple, besides insure to their own state a perpetual income for temperance work. Remember, dear sisters, twenty-eight persons placing a penny a day in the Temple mite-box for a year will secure a hundred dollars. The following unions have determined to have their names go down to posterity on the roll of honor in Willard Hall. Mrs. S. E. Johns sends $75 for the Canastota, N. Y., W. C. T. U. She says the union expects to send the balance ($25 soon) and adds: "I wish each member throughout our unions would be asked to give one dollar; if there was such a call sent out it seems as though our Temple would soon be paid for. Why not do so? I will do my part again." Such a call from the trustees will soon be issued. Then we will see who is on the Lord's side of this great enterprise. Miss A. M. Henderson sends $10 which completes the hundred dollar pledge of the St. Paul, Minn., W. C. T. U. She also sends $21.30, third payment on pledge of the Hutchinson, Minn., W. C. T. U. Mrs. W. E. Currah sends $20, third payment on pledge of Helena, Mont., W. C. T. U. Lancaster county, Pa., W. C. T. U. sends $18.86 on pledge. The Payson, Ill., W. C. T. U. sends $10 which completes the hundred dollar pledge. Through the good management of their efficient superintendent of Temple work, Mrs. A. Hoad, the union raised the above amount in ten months. She writes: "We hope in the coming months to follow the same line of work and for the same cause." If all unions would do likewise it would create such a tidal wave as would soon sweep the Temple out of sight of all indebtedness. The Wyman, Iowa, W. C. T. U. sends $10 on pledge. The Factoryville W. C. T. U. sends $17.16 to be applied on the Wyoming county, Pa., tablet. The Charlestown, Mass., Y's send $14 which completes their hundred dollar pledge. In eight months this wide-awake union raised the $100. There is not a Y union in the land but could do the same if they but set about it. Girls, why not? All the young men will be more than glad to help you.

Mrs. C. I. Richmond sends $50 which completes the payment of Mrs. Esther T. Housh's tablet by the Vermont W. C. T. U. Mrs. William I. Greene, Pittsburgh, Pa., sends $25, ten of which is to be applied on the Madam Willard window. Ethel Stout, Melbourne, Florida, sends $10 for Baby Band which is to be applied on the Jennie Casseday tablet. The W. C. T. U., of East Pueblo, Col., sends $10 for Baby Band, to be applied on the hundred dollars the union is now trying to raise for the Temple. The W. C. T. U. of Farmington, N. Y., sends $11.87 to be applied on the Mrs. Decker tablet. Mrs. Chas. Burchard sends $10 for the Frances J. Barnes tablet from the L. T. L. of New York City. Miss D. E. Brownlow, Paw Paw, Ill., sends $3 in memory of her beloved mother, an earnest white-ribboner, who lately entered into her heavenly inheritance. "Thirty years ago," writes Mrs. L. L. Nelson, Pasadena, Cal., "our lovely blue-eyed darling left us and went to her bright home above. We have treasured all these years the little store of coins which loving friends had dropped into her bank as something too sacred for common use. I feel now that in no way can I better dedicate it to her memory than to give it a place in the 'House Beautiful.' I have added enough to fill my mite-box, rejoicing that I am permitted the blessed privilege of carrying even a 'wisp of straw,' to help forward the grand and glorious work."

A two-cent stamp sent to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the Temple, Chicago, will secure a mite-box. Remember, any one placing in the box $2.50 from May 1, 1893, to May 1, 1894, will receive the lovely Columbian souvenir made of aluminum, with a cut of the Temple on one side and on the reverse the face of Miss Willard and the founder of the Temple, with suitable inscriptions. All money orders should be made out in the name of the treasnrer, William D. Preston, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara Johnson, the Temple, Chicago, Ill.

WHAT MEANS THIS STONE?

A most beautiful booklet with cover having these words entwined with delicately tinted apple-blossoms, has just been issued.

The illustrations of the poem written by Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap on the laying of the corner-stone of the Temple, which were designed by Stella B. Robens and Mary R. Bennett, and printed at the Fine Art Works in Germany lend an added beauty to the words, bringing out more vividly the prophetic vision expressed in the lines,

"We give thee to thy mission sweet,
With lavish wealth of love complete,
Nor count the sum.
Who knows but on the altar place
May shine the glory of His face
When Jesus comes!"

Visitors will find it very desirable to take home as a souvenir of the Temple. Mailed to any address, nicely boxed, for 60c.

MRS. HELEN CAMPBELL'S LATEST STORY,

"SOME PASSAGES IN THE PRACTICE OF DR. MARTHA SCARBOROUGH," like all of this author's writings, is written with a purpose. It is a story which teaches plain common sense in food and daily living as of greater value in the preservation of health and the prolongation of life, than the use of drugs and medicines. Mrs. Campbell, although she has an earnest purpose in this book, has produced no dry, didactic essay, but a story full of juice, and which, apart from the lesson it teaches, is attractive and interesting.

"WHAT SHALL WE DO FOR OUR LITTLE SISTERS?"—Bible.

Help them out of their lives of shame. How? By purchasing a copy of Mr. Charles A. Crittenton's charming booklet, especially describing the Holy Land. It also contains a sketch of Florence Crittenton Missions by Charlton Edholm, superintendent of press of the World's W. C. T. U.

Around the World with Jesus,

As is well known by white-ribboners, Mr. Crittenton, the famous evangelist, already largely supports eight Florence Crittenton Missions for the rescue of erring girls, and at the Denver Convention pledged $5,000 to the W. C. T. U. for founding five more missions under their auspices. These are now being established, and every cent realized from the sale of "AROUND THE WORLD WITH JESUS" will be given to the Florence Crittenton Missions, and every one whose heart throbs for our erring girls may aid the grand work for their redemption by circulating this little souvenir. It contains beautiful pictures of Mr. Crittenton, Miss Willard, Lady Henry Somerset and Mother Prindle, Matron of New York Mission, all white-ribboners, and it cannot fail to interest all. Price only 35 cents. Send orders to

A Minneapolis Miracle.

THE REMARKABLE CURE OF J. B. WHITE OF THIS CITY.

A Cripple for Two Years, Pronounced Incurable by Physicians and Given up by His Friends to Die—How He Obtained Relief and Became a Well Man—His Daughter's Marvelous Improvement.

(From the Minneapolis Journal.)

"Precious is the panacea that cures when hope is gone and medical advice pronounces the death sentence—'incurable.' How terrible it is to think of leaving this sweet life before the allotted years of man's time here on earth are spent." Thus spoke J. B. White, of 1201, 3d St., N. E., last night to a Journal reporter. Mr. White has been much talked about of late, and the following conversation explains why:

"I am a native of Shediac, New Brunswick, and of French descent. I have been in Minneapolis for many years. I am now sixty years old. I fell from a building two years ago and broke my thigh, besides injuring myself internally. The doctors could do nothing for me but let the bones grow together as best they could. When I was able to walk on crutches, I came near dying from the complication of troubles that had set in after the fall. For one year and a half I walked on crutches, striving in vain to find some relief from the misery I felt night and day. The worst part of my afflictions was that I could not eat anything. If I could have taken nourishment and kept it down I could have stood the pain better. I had four doctors, and kept taking all sorts of medicines. I had to stop all of them or I would have been a dead man. I have enough bottles left to start a drugstore. I would be troubled so with headaches, and my hips would pain me so that I often thought I should go crazy. I was so emaciated that there was nothing to me but skin and bone. Last summer I felt as if I was nearly dead. My kidneys then began to bother me. I got so I could not sleep only at intervals. Finally I gave up in despair. One day I was sitting out on the porch. It was a beautiful, sunny day. The singing of birds and the odor of flowers set me to thinking of my childhood days. From that my thoughts reverted to the little French weekly paper, Le Moniteur Acadien, that we got, and I thought I would like to read it and see how things were at my old home. I told my wife to give me the last number. She brought me the one that came that morning. The first thing I saw was a long article about the miraculous cure of a cripple. I read on and on, becoming more interested than ever. The patient described in the article said that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People cured him and they would cure others. The story aroused my interest and I induced my druggist to send for them. I did not expect relief right away, but soon they made the headache pass away. After taking them some days I could eat. People laughed at me when I began to take the pills, telling me I was taking so much candy. But the day I threw away the crutches they thought different. I am now well and hearty as a young man of twenty-five."

At this juncture his married daughter, Mrs. N. White, came into the store. "There," said he, "is another case. She has tried them, too." The reporter thought it would be a good idea to speak of her case, also, since it was a woman's. Mrs. White married a man of the same name as her father, so this accounts for the same name.

"The doctors," she said, "told me I had uterine trouble. I was in a miserable condition. Nothing that I took could alleviate the pains I would feel in my limbs and abdomen. I often had fluttering of the heart, and frequent weak spells. I would eat, but it would do me no good. I could not sleep. I was in misery and despair. My father took Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and his improvement was so rapid that I thought I would take them, too. At first I felt worse, and then I began to mend so rapidly that I was astonished. I have taken seven boxes, and am now nearly well. I can do my own work, and can sleep and eat well. In the mornings I feel refreshed after a night's rest."

August Grotefend, who keeps the Germania Drug Store, at 1011 Main St., N. E., corroborated what Mr. White had said above in regard to his condition, saying, "I have sold a great many since these cures. Some of the lumbermen going in the woods have taken half dozen box lots of these pills with them. They certainly have done a wonderful lot of good, and should have the entire credit of the cures."

On inquiry The Journal reporter found that these pills are now on sale at the various wholesale drug houses of Minneapolis and St. Paul and are meeting with a good sale, but not as fast at they will sell as soon as their merit is fully known. He also found that they were manufactured by Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y., and Brockville, Ont., and the pills are sold in boxes (never in bulk by the hundred) at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are a perfect blood builder and nerve restorer, curing such diseases as rheumatism, neuralgia, partial paralysis, locomotor ataxia, St. Vitus' dance, nervous headache, nervous prostration and the tired feeling therefrom, the after effects of la grippe, influenza, and severe colds, diseases depending on humors in the blood, such as scrofula, chronic erysipelas, etc. Pink Pills give a healthy glow to pale and sallow complexions and are a specific for the troubles peculiar to the female system; in men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of any nature.

CONOVER PIANO.

Too much cannot be said in praise of the Conover Piano. Although a new and not widely-known instrument, it possesses most excellent qualities. Its beauty, power and purity of tone is a revelation, and have been greatly praised by most able artists. Its construction includes numerous valuable patents; it possesses sweet singing qualities, great volume of sound, brilliancy and clear, ringing tones like the sweetest of bells. This piano is fitted with a new dulcet middle pedal, enabling the performer to produce the most charming and delicate effects possible. The combination of this and the loud pedal, with an elastic, crisp touch, makes very clear, soft Æolian-like music. The Conover is made in various styles, both in uprights and grands, by the very reliable and enterprising Chicago Cottage Organ Company, 215 Wabash Ave.

"IN the third century B. C.," says Prof. Max Müller, "a new idea was started at the Buddhist council, viz., the conquering of other nations, not by force of arms, but by the power of truth."

RUSSIA takes the lead of the rest of Europe in some things. Already she welcomes women doctors and lawyers, and one of her universities has bestowed a certificate on a woman for veterinary surgery.

"AS THE saloons were closed yesterday the police had very little to do. There was not a drunk in any one of the stations,"—a significant comment on the value of prohibition for one day, taken from a Toronto paper.

THERE are 250,000 women in London whose daily wage does not exceed 15d.; but there are plenty of men in London who pay £1,000 to decorate a house-boat for their mistress to sit in at the Henley Regatta, or who can give £250 for a pianoforte recital by Paderewski!

A CENSUS of the great redwood trees of California reveals the fact that there are over two thousand six hundred of them left, their average diameter being thirty-eight feet. Two giant specimens are in the Horticultural and Government Buildings at the Columbian Exposition.

THE Rev. Hugh Price Hughes of London recently said in a temperance address: "As 80 per cent of the population of England live in houses rated at less than £20 per annum it would be quite impossible to shut up a single public house against the wishes of the poor. The real point is whether the rich and privileged classes should have it in their power to keep these houses open if the poor did not want them!"

THE Patriotic League which was formed last year has for its main object the training of young people in the practical duties of citizenship, the originator claiming that it is far more important that an American boy or girl should get an intelligent idea of the jury system, of the machinery of primaries and elections, and of legislation, than that he should be initiated into all the mysteries of the natural sciences.

MISS SOONDARBI H. POWAR, an accomplished Indian lady, who has been speaking in London for some time past, has returned to Poona, India, where she will be associated with her friend, the heroic Pundita Ramabai, in conducting the school for high caste Hindu widows. She writes to Miss Willard as follows: "I am very glad to tell you that the sixteen girls who belong to our family are adopted by different friends who agree to pay their expenses with us. Two of these are in America, one has been adopted by you, and one by Lady Henry Somerset. These are included in eighteen already supported, and I have five more promises for five girls, besides one that an Indian gentleman agrees to support, so that we can take six new ones into our family. I love them dearly, and we shall make them as happy as we can. I am invited to America for the Woman's Congress and sorry I cannot go, but think it better to return to my native country and help our dear Ramabai."

CALIFORNIA.

The fame of the climate of California draws to that charming state new friends every year, particularly from sections where long, severe winters, followed by trying spring seasons, work such disastrous results among the weak and debilitated.

The great improvements in passenger train service, higher degrees of comfort in the cars, and shorter time required on the trip, combined with the cheapness of the excursion tickets now being sold to California and back by the Santa Fé Route, make the journey agreeable and, one can almost say, economical. The many delightful resorts now established in California afford every comfort and luxury desired by the fastidious, and present unique attractions.

The Hotel del Coronado at San Diego, the Raymond at Pasadena, the Redondo at Redondo Beach and the hotels at Santa Barbara, Monterey, Riverside, Los Angeles and many other points, have grown as famous as any on the Atlantic Coast—and a fact that should not be forgotten is that they are resorts all the year around, although the greatest number of people from the East are in California between the months of November and May.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

The financial stringency is reported over in New York.

Judge Blatchford died at Newport, R. I., July 7, aged seventy-three years.

Western railroads have agreed to one fare for the round trip, on limited tickets.

The W. C. T. U. conference at Lake Bluff, Ill., opened July 9, with Miss Esther Pugh in charge.

The Infanta Eulalia reached Madrid July 7, and expressed herself delighted with American hospitality.

Riotous mobs held possession of many streets in Paris last week, the police being powerless to effect order.

The World's Fair Board of Lady Managers met July 7, and confirmed the appointments for the Jury of Awards.

President Cleveland was reported seriously ill last week, but his physicians declare his trouble only a slight form of rheumatism.

Two Southern universities, that of Alabama, at Tuscaloosa, and of Tennessee at Knoxville, have thrown open their doors to women.

A sudden wind and rain storm in the vicinity of Chicago, Sunday, wrecked several frail yachts on the lake and caused the death of four people, besides seriously interfering with traffic and pleasure.

Princess Victoria May of Teck and Prince George of Wales were married at St. James Palace, London, July 6. The Princess of Wales presented jewels worth $1,250,000, probably unsurpassed in value, as a wedding gift.

The town of Pomeroy, Ia., was the scene of a terrible cyclone, July 6. Forty-two people were killed outright, and over one hundred injured. Nearly one thousand were rendered homeless. Generous aid is being furnished by Iowa citizens.

As we go to press Monday afternoon at four o'clock comes the frightful news of a great fire in the Cold-Storage Building of the World's Fair. Thirty people are reported killed and twenty-five injured, most of them firemen. Particulars cannot be obtained.

The Spanish caravels, models of Columbus' three small vessels, Santa Maria, Pinta and Nina, reached Chicago July 7, and were given a royal welcome at the Exposition grounds. They are anchored in the lagoon, near the Convent of La Rabida.

THE Temple items will be found on page 13. Read them.

A SOUTH CAROLINIAN judge has declared the Evans Dispensary Bill unconstitutional and denounced it as "a great monopoly." He truly says that it is not a regulation of the liquor traffic, but intended to return revenue to the state. The Palmetto state is early meeting with lions in its supposed flowery path to prohibition.

OUR brother, John G. Woolley, writes: "Please let all the faithful know that on Tuesday, July 18, there will be a grand reception to Jessie Ackermann at Rest Island. You might add that Rest Island is on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railway, convenient to good hotels and boarding houses in the loveliest scenery of the Mississippi river. The annual convention is July 16–23."

MAYOR HARRISON, of Chicago, in an interview on gambling, has expressed himself concerning his municipality as follows: "Chicago is no pent-up Utica, and puritanical ideas cut no figure this World's Fair year. You can't make people moral by ordinances and it's no use trying." Every decent paper in the city is taking him to task for insinuating that "Puritans" alone object to gambling, and for classing this far-reaching and abominable evil with the innocent pleasures incidental to a great Exposition.

MR. JOHN MCDOWELL, of New Zealand, is now in Chicago as the representative of the Prohibitionists of his country and paid THE UNION SIGNAL a pleasant call last week. He reports two important temperance measures as likely to pass the present legislature—the Direct Veto bill, which means that the people will be given the opportunity to vote directly on the liquor question, and the woman suffrage bill, which passed the lower house at its last session. Our New Zealand friends believe with us that woman's vote will be the solution of the liquor problem.

THE attendance at the Exposition on Sunday is steadily decreasing, there being only forty-two thousand on the grounds July 9, although the day was perfect. Sunday opening is a failure, confessedly so by its strongest advocates. The popular movement in Chicago now is for a general Saturday half-holiday with twenty-five cent admission. This is sensible, and if it had been adopted from the start would have made friends among all classes. President Palmer of the National Commission has put himself on record as opposed to Sunday opening from principle.

MR. P. A. BURDICK, the well-known temperance lecturer, died at his home, Alfred Centre, N. Y., July 3, and was buried from the same place July 7. Mr. Burdick had been ill for several weeks, and almost his last prolonged work was done in Chicago last March, when he conducted a successful campaign against the city saloons and their supporters. A beautiful memorial is left of his brave, fearless, yet gentle and helpful spirit, in the result of the twenty meetings which he conducted in Willard Hall. He will be greatly missed from temperance ranks, for he was only in his prime and a score of useful years seemed before him.

THE complications in respect to the new liquor law in South Carolina are very perplexing. Temperance people do not wish to be allied with the whisky traffic in the opposition, yet thousands of them will not sacrifice their principle that revenue from the sale of liquor is "justifying the wicked for a reward," and not even the state can give to another the right to do wrong. The Evans Dispensary Law will doubtless prove to perplexed temperance people, as well as to the world, that government, with its merciless grasp on revenue, is the most conscienceless, soulless, shameless, impenetrable and unstampedable foe prohibition has ever encountered.

MONTREAL has been holding an exposition of Christian zeal the past week which in enthusiasm, if not in size of attendance, easily outrivals Chicago's great Exposition. Sixteen thousand young people is a great force in any community, but when focalized on one object and that the telescopic one of "The world for Christ," something must move. The great meetings of Young People's Societies of Christian Endeavor opened at Canada's great commercial capital. Thursday, July 6, and adjourned on Monday the 10th. The immense drill hall, especially arranged for the occasion, a large tent adjoining and many of the down town churches reverberated for five days with words of loyalty to Christ and echoes of hearty response. The noble leader of these young Christians, Dr. Francis E. Clark, who has just returned from a world-wide Endeavor mission, received royal welcome and in his annual address spoke as follows upon Exposition Sunday opening: "We have proved for one thing that we are not boycotters whatever ill-natured people may say. There is a color of lawlessness in that word 'borrowed' from the bogs of old Ireland. It is not our word, nor does it express our attitude. We protested and petitioned; we did everything we could as individuals and societies to save the nation from the threatened disgrace; and now we, each one for himself without judging others, will decide what He would have us do in regard to going to the Exposition or staying away from it." Telegrams were sent to the National Commission expressive of gratitude to those members who voted with the Christian sentiment of the country, and again entreating that the gates may be closed for the remainder of the season. An unexpected disturbance was created among the rougher French-Canadian element by the words of a Hindu preacher in comparing Mohammedanism to Catholicism. English volunteers turned out and aided the police in preventing a riot. In the meantime, meetings in the tent were discontinued. The Catholic mayor's welcome was most cordial. He said: "It is not a battle of creeds nowadays, but a battle between belief and unbelief." The secretary's report showed a total membership of one million and a half, with a thousand societies in foreign lands. Long may the Christian Endeavor banner wave!

DESPITE the growing warmth of summer days and the many attractions of the World's Fair city, empty seats in the Willard Hall noon meetings grow fewer, and it is a pleasure to note that within the "floating membership" which must more or less characterize such a gathering, is a nucleus of earnest-faced men and women who, day after day, are found in their places ready to lend a hand wherever there may be need. The leaders are from north, south, east and west; some presenting this phase of "the cause," some that, but all uniting to advance the kingdom of Christ. The meetings of the past week have been peculiarly of a prophetic nature, since coupled with the presentation of the startling phases of intemperance and its allied vices have been most fervid utterances of a hope of deliverance not very many decades in the future. Perhaps the most thrilling appeals during the week, and those touched with the brightest hope, have come from speakers whose words were born of a two-fold experience—the lessons of past sin and the lessons of present righteousness.

THE Herculean labors put forth to secure wedding presents for the Princess May are being unfavorably commented upon by the London press. Self-constituted committees, beginning with some titled person, who is at the head of a community and who passes the word along, are going from house to house, shop to shop, and school to school. The whole demonstration is "machine made." In this year of an unprecedented drought the people are less willing than ever to give. In many instances business people, desirous of disposing of their wares, have been the instigators of these gifts; jewelry and resolutions on parchment seem to be the principal returns thus far secured. In contrast to this piling up of gold and gain, the following figures are significant: In London, one in every fifteen citizens dies in the workhouse, the hospital or the penitentiary; in England, eighty out of every one hundred homes bear valuation of but one hundred dollars; in London, only one boy in forty attends any kind of school after he is twelve years old, and it goes without saying that the percentage is much smaller among girls. One million two hundred thousand of the residents in London live on less than five dollars a week per family, and three hundred thousand are in chronic want of food. In the poorer parts there is one public house to every eighty persons. There are ninety thousand actual paupers, and yet the charities are such that there would be £1 apiece, i. e. about $5 for every man, woman and child in the city of London annually. The King and Queen of Italy, when the suggestion was made that they should have a present, on the recent occasion of their silver wedding, from the people of Italy, begged that it should take the form of an industrial school for boys and girls. We can but wish that Protestant England, through the young people who have just united their destinies, would give the world an example of Christ and His teachings, as Catholic Italy has done.

THE WHITE RIBBON ARMY.

BY MARIAN W. HUBBARD.

TUNE—Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean.

Encircle the world with a ribbon!
A beautiful ribbon of white,
The badge of the temperance women,
The emblem of freedom and right;
Of freedom from bitterest bondage,
The terrible bondage of drink
That binds down the glory of manhood,
And fastens a heart in each link.

Hear the pitiful wail of the children!
And list to the mother's low moan.
Wives weep in the anguish of sorrow;
Oh, what for such woes can atone?
Love, truth, and home life are shattered,
And hope now lies crushed at the feet
Of the demon who tramples upon them—
Every tie that made living so sweet.

Shall no standard be lifted against him?
This foe that spreads ruin and shame,
And sullies our star-spangled banner
By plying his trade in its name?
O yes! for while temperance women
Have power to speak for the right,
We'll encircle the world with our ribbon,
Our beautiful ribbon of white.

Vineland, N. J.

MRS. MANNERING'S "WHY?"

II.

BY FAYE HUNTINGTON.

After showing her visitor out, Mrs. Mannering returned to the library to be greeted by her daughter with the exclamation:

"Mamma, I think it is just dreadful the way those women do go on! The idea of cultured, refined women being mixed up with such matters as saloons and gambling houses!"

"Well, daughter, these women are honest I think, though they do seem a little erratic. Mrs. Elbridge was peculiar in her ways of thinking even as a young girl. I remember we used to have discussions upon this very subject of temperance when we were school-girls together and she was just as radical then as now. But I always believed in her, though I might not sympathize in her views. Then she married Dr. Elbridge, as much of a fanatic as herself, while I married your father who was more conservative. I sometimes wonder what he would say to all this talk of the extremists! The last ten years have brought out a great many methods and plans which are very different from his ideas, and I am not sure that he would agree in these new notions." She said this with a weary little sigh, then after a moment she added, "I am sure Laura Elbridge really believes all she says, and I have no doubt she is this minute agonizing over the thought that I will not join her; but I never could follow her in her flights!"

"Why, mamma, it just distresses me! I am strong for temperance, but I never could bring myself to advertise my principles by wearing a white ribbon! You know last summer I wore my watch without the chain, with just a ribbon to match my dresses tied in the ring? One day I tied in a white ribbon to wear with my white cashmere, and do you know two or three of the girls said, 'Why, when did you become a Y?' Wasn't it funny?"

"Well, daughter, I would not infringe upon their right to wear the white ribbon so long as you have all the colors at your command," said Mrs. Mannering laughing. And so lightly did these women dismiss a subject that concerned them deeply, a subject that should take hold of the heart of every woman. Oh, that the young women could realize that the position taken by them upon this great question must bring to them either happiness or sorrow.

Helen Mannering was a Christian girl, she was moreover an enthusiastic Christian Endeavorer; but while she was active in the work of the society she invariably declined to work upon the temperance committee, always insisting that though it was well enough to have such a committee, for her own part she could not get up any interest in the subject. Half an hour after Mrs. Elbridge left the house, Helen sprang up, saying with delight in her voice, "There's George with a horse and cutter! Now for a sleigh-ride!" And in a few moments she was cloaked and hooded and tucked in under the soft robes in the prettiest of cutters, and the young couple, to whom life seemed all brightness look whichever way they would, behind to a happy childhood, around them in a sunny present, and forward to a blissful future, were skimming over the smooth roads. After a few turns about the town the driver struck out into the open country where broad fields spread out in the whiteness of the snow covering. The mettlesome steed, away from the excitement of the crowded thoroughfares, settled down into a steadiness which gave his driver an opportunity to enjoy conversation.

"This is really delightful," said Helen. "Do you know I was falling into a fit of melancholy when you drove up! Mrs. Elbridge was in to see mamma and they discussed the temperance question and the W. C. T. U. until I nearly went wild!"

"Well, it is a subject to go wild over, I suppose," returned the young man gravely.

"Oh, I don't get excited over the subject, but when they talk, and talk, and talk, it grows wearisome."

The young man made no reply. He was thinking, "It has never touched her! Perhaps it is not strange that she treats it lightly, yet it seems as though a woman would feel it for others if not for herself," and then and there he vowed that if possible he would never let her know what it was to feel the curse. Alas, for inherited weakness and failure to take hold of the strength that is mighty to save!

George Donaldson and Helen Mannering were married in the early spring of that year. They went to reside upon an estate which young Donaldson had inherited in a distant city. Colonel Donaldson had followed three sons to dishonored graves. and George, the grandson, was the last of the race. The Colonel had been a moderate drinker but he never came to see that his own precept and example had been the cause of the downfall of his sons. George was his grandfather's comfort and pride and the old man died in the assurance that this sole representative of the house of Donaldson would honor the name.

"We have been looking forward to your coming among us!" said a bright young woman to Helen soon after the young couple were established in their new home. "Mr. Donaldson is one of our members though he has not met with us lately, but of course we understood the reason, and now that you are here we hope to see you at our meetings. Have you a Y at Rushville?"

A Y! Well there was one—so much Helen knew, but as for any further knowledge of the organization she had none. She did not say that it was a great surprise, not to say shock to her to learn that her husband was a member of the despised organization and that she was expected to join. She replied that if Mr. Donaldson was a member and wished to continue his connection with the Y of course she would join. All the time she was saying within herself, "I'll soon talk him out of that!"

When her husband came home she said laughingly: "Well, George, I had a great surprise to-day; in fact, I nearly lost my self-possession. You never told me that you belonged to a temperance society! And Miss Briggs called and claimed you as an honorary member of the Y's! I did have sense enough to hide my amazement. But why did you never tell me?"

"Well, I don't know; I suppose I never thought to mention it. I believe I am a member, at least I joined, though it is a long time since I have been to any of the regular meetings or to the social gatherings, but I have kept up my dues."

"Oh, of course it is well enough to help them with money. I suppose they do accomplish some good among certain classes."

"I met Jennie Hammond yesterday and she asked if we would be at the next meeting," said Mr. Donaldson, rather ignoring the slur. "I told her I thought we should be there. I forgot to mention it last evening."

"Of course if you wish to go we will attend." Helen's voice had in it a touch of dissatisfaction which her husband detected at once.

"I see—you do not care to join?"

"I cannot say that I do, though I will if it will please you; but mamma does not belong, though the women were always after her. I think she does not quite approve of their methods."

Perhaps Helen Donaldson will never know what she did in that hour! A soul had come to a turning point. It seemed to George Donaldson that a door opening into safety had suddenly closed upon him, against him, leaving him exposed to temptations from which he knew not how to escape. He scarcely heard what his wife was saying as she went on in her even tones.

"You know they are so mixed up with different things, even bringing in politics! To be sure, Miss Briggs says that to become a member one has only to sign the constitution and pledge and that you may think what you please on other matters, but after all, don't you see that it is rather disagreeable for people of refined tastes to be classed with women suffragists and women preachers? I have a prejudice against seeing a woman on the platform or in the pulpit, and all these things go together." Helen thought she was very wisely conservative and withal very high-toned in her exclusiveness! She said further: "Of course I believe in temperance, even in total abstinence. I never touch wine, not even at dinner parties; indeed, I am quite radical in my views, but I think it much better to be conservative in expression—it lays one open to criticism and misjudgment to be so very outspoken." Mrs. Donaldson did not appear to notice that she was having the conversation all to herself and she would have been amazed had she known of the gloom which was settling down upon her husband's heart.

Long afterwards he said: "The trouble with me is I must be one thing or the other, an out-and-out something. If I could have held on to the rope that once was thrown out to me I might have been hauled in, and I should very likely have become a radical of radicals, a fanatic of fanatics! But letting go my hold upon that rope I have become what you see me—a wreck!"

Six months after his marriage it was no uncommon occurrence for George Donaldson to come home late and under the influence of liquor! His young wife's astonishment was only equaled by her disgust. Sheltered as her life had been, the curse had not come near her, and she had not in the least realized what it could mean to be a drunkard's wife. Oh, the shame and the anguish of it! A year or two later, one night after the midnight hour, Helen Donaldson met her husband at the door as he was brought home by two companions, only a little less helpless than himself. Thanking the men, she declined their offers of assistance, thinking she could get him to bed alone. This she found to be impossible, and all night he lay upon the parlor floor, she sitting beside him. She placed a cushion under his head, and covering him with a rug, she waited for the morning and its developments. At length he woke from his sleep of intoxication, and taking in the situation vaguely, he thrust his faithful wife away from him and in his anger struck her a heavy blow. The insult stung the woman far more than the pain, and she exclaimed:

"George Donaldson, I will never forgive that!"

It was days before they were reconciled, but at length the husband received a reluctant pardon, with the assurance that she would never overlook the repetition of the events of that direful night. Said she:

"I will never live in fear of being struck down by a man crazed with liquor. I will certainly go home to my mother if the insult is repeated."

Do not blame her too severely; it was such a sad and strange awakening from a fancied security to a terrible reality! Neither her experience nor her observation had prepared her for this sorrow. She had doubtless read and heard of the misery of the drunkard's wife, but it had never been real to her, it had never taken hold upon her imagination, and, indeed, it was as though she had not read or heard. And in her terror, her only thought was to escape! Can you blame her? A stronger woman, or one trained to self-denial and self-reliance, would have accepted her fate, and, with womanly love and constancy, suffered to the end, but Helen could only think of the sheltering arms of her mother.

And the poor, weak young man, her husband? What wonder that cursed with an inherited appetite, with no restraining influence thrown around him save the angry threat of his outraged wife, what wonder, I say, that again he fell. With temptation on every side, how could he escape? One fatal night, three years after their marriage, he came home late and in his frenzy struck his waiting wife a blow that felled her to the floor; then he crawled away to bed. When he awoke it was noon and Helen was gone! Swiftly she had packed her trunks and by the time he awoke she was far on her way to her childhood's home. I cannot go over in detail all that sad time to tell you of the appeals by letter and in person and through friends of the young husband. To all Helen would say with a weary, listless air:

"I dare not go back; I am a coward, and I shrink from the abuse and from the blows; I can endure the sorrow and the disgrace of living apart from my husband; but the terror, the dread of those homecomings I cannot live over again. There is no anger in my heart; indeed, I think it is too broken to ever again be capable of any strong emotion. Just to be left here in peace is all I ask." And the pitiful pleading of face and voice could but touch the hearts of those who came to set before this young wife her duty to her husband, and she was left with her strained nerves and breaking heart to the tender care of her devoted mother whose own heart was wrung with grief.

A SAYING from that gentle spirit, Jasper L. Douthit, of Shelbyville, Illinois: "Judge just and charitable judgments, never condemn a person or cause on hearsay, read and hear the other side for yourself so far as possible, then speak the truth in love, act well your part, do not be afraid, be of good cheer and leave results to God. 'At eventime it shall be light.'"

DEFINITE POLITICAL ACTION NECESSARY TO ANTAGONIZE THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

A Most Atrocious Public Outrage.

BY W. JENNINGS DEMOREST.

The march of civilization has developed such rapid strides in general education and such extraordinary progress is made in the arts and sciences, that the latter part of the nineteenth century stands out as the wonder of all nations, and marks this age as the greatest epoch in the world's history. But the machinery of government still hitches and creaks with numerous imperfections, and to make it work smoothly and effectively in the interest of the people, many improvements are absolutely essential.

But will the people summon the moral and physical courage that may surmount and overcome the many difficulties that block their progress? Can the people rise to the moral plane that will give to them all the advantages of a higher grade of moral reform? Our privilege coupled with our ambition and great necessity at the present time, affords a tremendous inspiration to activity.

An old maxim says: "Necessity is the mother of invention." Urged by necessity and with high moral aspirations for our country's welfare, we are led to inquire, does the magnitude of the injury produced by the sale and use of alcoholic beverages justify the invention or formation of a new combination of the people to oppose it?

In the first place, we ought to realize the dangerous and injurious character of the liquor traffic, and the terrible injury produced in society everywhere by the use of alcoholic beverages. In the second place, we know that all revolutionary reforms must of necessity come through an awakening of the people to their personal responsibility. The people must therefore learn the important and significant fact that the liquor traffic is the great octopus on society, the monumental curse of our country —a curse without one mitigating feature; that this traffic embodies diabolism unparalleled by any other evil, and certainly is the most dangerous, destructive and intolerable nuisance that has ever been allowed to exist in a civilized country. There is no other evil or injury to human life and happiness that bears any comparison to this hideous curse of alcoholic poison. Wherever it lifts its hydra head of criminal horrors it dwarfs all other outrages and shames into silence the most aggravated crimes of history. No age or condition in life is safe from its terrible ravages; no character or position in society is too exalted to be reached by its baleful influence. Our homes, religion, education, property, and all the most sacred ties of wives and mothers, and the endearing claims of childhood are blasted and blighted by this vile monster of vicious, selfish cruelty. It is a self-evident fact that the devil, with all his infernal ingenuity, can never devise a more subtle and terrible array of evils to degrade humanity and curse the world than those caused by the use of alcoholic beverages.

What aggravates the outrage of the liquor traffic and intensifies the evil is the fact that the people themselves are wholly responsible for the existence of this terrible scourge. The only practical method, therefore, that will reach and destroy this monster of crime and misery is the people's fiat of prohibition and entire suppression by law, and the only effective way to secure the enactment and enforcement of that law will be found in a combination of the people for this purpose at the ballot-box. Every important and vital interest of the nation, therefore, demands that the liquor traffic be outlawed, and outlawed immediately by a rally for its entire suppression by the strong arm of law faithfully enforced.

The apathy and pernicious sophistries that have taken possession of the minds of the people, together with the wicked, selfish legislation that sanctions this traffic, has been produced by the connivance of interested parties, but more especially by the ever active and determined enemies of reform, the liquor dealers. These cormorants of society fully understand this question, and also the significant virtue of combined action. They have accordingly fortified and entrenched their business by a combination of their interests, operating through their numerous allies. Using their moneyed interests they have largely subsidized the press to silence, and by the use of sophistical arguments as the most effective means to accomplish their nefarious purposes. The necessity for right and truthful reasoning, but more especially a definite combination to oppose the liquor traffic is, therefore, absolutely imperative and must be done immediately.

Up to the present time, everything of a generous nature, every humane instinct and every spark of intelligence and sentiment of virtue have been invoked to remove this holocaust of crime and misery, have been appealed to for an effective remedy against the allurements of the saloon. But what has been the result? The traffic still defies the people's protest, and only laughs at these mild and futile efforts to crush it out.

But how easily could a combination exterminate this monster of viciousness! The people in the majesty of their political power could hurl this terrible evil of liquor selling into annihilation, and this, too, with one stroke of their mighty will. Will they do it? It must come, and must come now. Every day, every hour a cry of anguish goes up from desolated homes, ill-treated, diseased and beggared children, uttering piteous appeals to "save the perishing."

The greatly increased consumption of alcoholic poisons, with the constant increase of crime, is in itself an effective argument by which the people are to be aroused to the enormity of the evils, and they are being forced to the conclusion that prohibition of the manufacture, importation and sale of alcoholic beverages is the only certain and practical method for saving our country from the flood of crime and wretchedness that now threatens our homes with destruction.

The traffic now dominates society because liquor-sellers know and act on the assumption that moral suasion only, even with earnest entreaties, sermons and prayers, does not count. Their only dread is "penal statutes, hedged about by legal measures of prevention"; or, more definitely expressed, absolute prohibition by law. Therefore, as life, property and personal safety are wholly dependent on the methods we employ to preserve the purity and dignity of the franchise, and as the traffic debauches the voter, pollutes the ballot and corrupts elections, we must suppress the saloon for the sake of good government by the ballot. A community that depends on law for protection should and must insist on having the kind of law that will protect. Therefore demand is made for prohibition of the liquor traffic as the imperative need of society, and the only method to save our homes and country from its destructive ravages must come and only will come through the political action of the people.

As we now have liberty to make law, let us secure prohibition through law. This can only come through action of the people crystallized for a definite object. With this new combination of legal and moral forces we must have a grand uprising of the women of our country joining our youthful heroes, echoing their battle-cry for prohibition. Let us stimulate each other to vigilant, active duty, and also encourage our youthful warriors and noble women to fling their banner to the breeze, inscribed, "Up with the home, down with the liquor traffic." Then with a gallant, determined and unflinching front we will charge this piratical enemy of our homes until his retinue of selfish outlaws shall receive its just deserts. A grand uprising must come, and will be sure to come when this call to duty awakens the nobler aspirations of patriotic citizens to join in an ambitious eagerness to strike for right and justice. The welkin must be made to ring with the shouts of enthusiastic earnestness until the cry is reverberated everywhere: "The liquor traffic must go," and then the grand consummation will be achieved in entire prohibition as the universal, uncompromising, effective power to crush this enemy of our homes and country.

THE PAGEANT FOR HOME PROTECTION IN ENGLAND.

BY LADY HENRY SOMERSET.

"I have been on my beat for five and twenty years," was the remark of one of the police constables on Saturday, June 10, "but I have never seen anything like this," and truly no more wonderful sight could have been witnessed in the annals of any reform than that displayed in the streets of the world's metropolis. The long line of banners, the enthusiasm, the triumphant notes of many bands, and the continuous tramp of thousands of feet along the highways of the city must have brought good cheer to the government which have had the courage to bring in the bill for reforming the liquor traffic; but far beyond the mere pageant, encouragement must have come from the sight of the class of men and women who took part in the demonstration.

A more orderly, good-humored, good-hearted people could not have been found than those who walked so sturdily, tramping miles from north and south, east and west, to gather in Hyde Park. "Are you tired?" was an observation made to one of the men who was almost weighed down by the immense banner he was carrying. "Tired!" was the cheery reply, "I would walk for a week if it gave us the veto bill," and this was the spirit that animated the immense crowd, a spirit that must have produced in the hearts of our opponents a certainty that the temperance people meant to win.

A more picturesque or beautiful sight could not be imagined than that witnessed at about four o'clock on the Thames embankment. As far as the eye could see across Blackfriar's and Westminster bridges, down Fleet and Farringdon streets, stretching away to Trafalgar Square, the great procession marched, the sun shining upon the many colored banners, as they moved on in double file, the dazzling decorations of the different orders, the gay flags that floated from the brakes (in America "float" or "charabanc") seemed to make the gray buildings of the old city "blossom as the rose."

The picturesque was largely eliminated from our national life when the reformation swept from the land the old religious processions that were the expressions of the nation's faith; and not among the least of the many debts of gratitude that we owe to the temperance reform is that once more the "outward and visible form of inward and spiritual grace" is shown to the world with music and movement, color and contrast. The banners told the story of the great cause of home protection, and the quaint designs and antiquated costumes of some of the devices spoke of the days when any help from legislation seemed, indeed, afar off; some were dragged, torn, and battered by many a day's weary march in storm and rain, but on this day of June the graphic picture of the evils of drink and the blessings of total abstinence waved triumphantly in the breeze. The mottoes were appropriate to the occasion. "The Devil in Solution," was the inscription on a bottle hung from a gibbet. The real stimulant and the false were proclaimed on a jaunty little car where the milk can and the beer barrel were placed in juxtaposition. "Bung's Funeral" was inscribed on a white banner with a deep, black border. But the majority of the legends were verses of Scripture or short aphorisms that spoke of the earnest purpose that inspires the hearts of temperance people.

The Catholic Legion of the Cross with their bright green sashes and forty bands of music made a brave show, and spoke to many of the memory of that great prelate, Cardinal Manning, whose heart would have rejoiced in the sight that the vetoists presented. The Good Templars, Sons and Daughters of Phœnix, Rechabites, and other temperance bodies in the metropolis, were there in force, and not the least conspicuous among the demonstrators was that long line of forty-four brakes, with their blue and white banners, that told of the women's part in the mighty movement.

The British Women's Temperance Association was magnificently represented. From the center of the embankment the procession of four-horse brakes stretched away to Farringdon street, while the tender, motherly faces of hundreds of "our women" looked out upon the scene, and, as the great march paused a moment opposite Blackfriar's bridge, the reason for the faith that was in them was never more apparent.

In the South London contingent were two vans filled with those ragged, starved, neglected children that are the very seal of the results of the liquor traffic—homeless and outcast, the flotsam and jetsam thrown up upon the banks of our civilization from the great tide of evil, the cruel and relentless sea of strong drink that floods the nation. "For God and Home and Every Land" was the motto that gleamed from the women's procession, and truly they never held it so dear, never felt the sacred fire and enthusiasm for the holy cause burn so strongly within their hearts as when they saw those wan, little pinched faces gaze with childish wonder at the gay gala pageant that seemed so dazzling to them, though they knew not how much it meant to the children of the future.

The World's W. C. T. U. was also well represented; a large brake, with four gray horses, adorned with white and blue ribbons, carried the contingent. A daughter of the Ganges, and another from the mountains of Lebanon, occupied prominent places, and sisters from Australia, Canada, America and South Africa were among the company.

Stars and stripes waved gaily, and many a hat was lifted as the American flag passed through the streets. Not less noticeable was the white banner, with the portrait of the founder and president, and as the procession moved along, many a finger pointed and many a child was lifted on strong shoulders as friendly voices said, "That is Frances Willard." One little fellow climbed on to the carriage which held the executive committee and said, "Which is she? It's that Miss Willard I want to see." It was to many the greatest disappointment of the day that illness had prevented her from being in her place in the procession.

The most artistic feature of the procession was the flower-decked carriage generously provided by Mrs. Massingberd, of the National Executive of the B. W. T. A., and founder of the Pioneer Club, for the president of the association and her friends, a mass of blue and white blossoms, cushioned with blue corn flowers and white carnations, with exquisite standard bouquets of white lilies and blue iris, tied with blue and white ribbon—a feast of perfumed beauty to the weary Londoners and a testimony to the value of the cause for which such decorations were a fitting display.

The music was characteristic; here and there a band broke into the hackneyed strain of the "Man that broke the bank at Monte Carlo," but the sonorous chorus of "Onward, Christian Soldier" rose in a volume of sound as a more familiar song to the earnest-hearted men, who looked so full of solemn purpose and deep conviction, and whose voices at once caught up the inspiring strain.

It was something new to temperance workers that the Chancellor of the Exchequer with his accomplished wife, (who is the daughter of John Lothrop Motley, the American historian), reviewed incognito, the procession at the Hyde Park demonstration that he might for himself judge the strength of the people's sentiment. It will be remembered that the Chancellor, Sir William Vernon Harcourt, is the author of the Local Option Bill in support of which the great demonstration was organized. When his carriage was recognized, Sir William and Lady Harcourt were the recipients of a "demonstration" so intense that they were fain to drive down a side street and depart.

Sir Wilfrid and Lady Lawson were no less warmly welcomed, for the people recognize Sir Wilfrid as a leader who is "not ashamed to declare the whole counsel of God," as revealed to his consciousness and his conscience, in the long and arduous argumentation that led up to the present climax; indeed, Sir Wilfrid has had a larger part in it than any other man and he stands to-day without a peer among the temperance leaders of the British Parliament.

Some estimate may be gained of the magnitude of the demonstration from the fact that the procession occupied four hours in passing a given point; there were no fewer than one thousand banners, one hundred bands and one thousand, two hundred vehicles. Over two hundred thousand people are estimated as having joined in the procession or accompanied it along the streets; and the platforms erected in Hyde Park numbered twenty and extended over half a mile.

"The temperance reform lies at the foundation of all reforms," said Cobden, and as we looked on these stalwart men and the mother-hearted women who marched by their side, we felt assured that such as these could be trusted with all those living issues of our time—the labor question, justice to women, purity of heart and life—all of which are the ripe fruits that shall yet hang on that mighty banyan in the forest of reform—the sturdy tree of temperance.

MRS. LOUIS AGASSIZ AND THE HARVARD ANNEX.

BY NADINE CRUMP.

Prof. Louis Agassiz, honored by all the scientific world, is reverenced by his friends and neighbors in Cambridge, Mass., who remember the man more than his work. When one realizes that he was born so early in the century as 1807, that he has been sleeping in Mount Auburn cemetery for more than twenty years, one is somewhat surprised on coming to Cambridge to find the wife of that great man still actively engaged in present affairs.

"I cannot afford to make money" is a saying that is associated with the name of the great scientist. Such has been her manner of living, that the same sentiment could, with equal propriety, have fallen from the lips of his wife. Mrs. Agassiz comes from a race of benefactors. Her grandfather, J. W. Perkins, in his day the merchant prince of Boston, gave up his home to Dr. Howe for the accommodation of his school for the blind. The same unselfish spirit of the grandfather is found in the granddaughter.

Mrs. Agassiz is a woman of more than seventy years, if calculated by the calendar, but in activity and interest in present affairs she is as young as the youngest. A woman, who, for many years, has been intimately associated with Mrs. Agassiz, said to me: "Every one interested in a good cause goes to her for aid, and no one is sent away disappointed." To this helpful disposition her connection with the Society for the Collegiate Instruction of Women, familiarly known as the "Harvard Annex," is due.

This connection came about in the following way: While sitting by her fire one day she received a call from some friends. These friends were considering the plan whereby women might receive the same instruction enjoyed by the men in Harvard College. The purpose of this call was to interest Mrs. Agassiz in the plan. This they succeeded in doing. An organization was effected, of which Mrs. Agassiz was made president, and during the fourteen years of its existence she has been its chief source of inspiration.

This plan was first formulated in 1878 but the society was not incorporated until 1882. The plan was formed with the understanding that the courses of study were to be identical with those given in Harvard College, and that no teacher should be employed except those of the Harvard faculty. During the first year there was an attendance of twenty-five students. The enrollment for this year is two hundred and sixty.

The eagerness with which the young women have improved their opportunities has proved that such an institution was a necessity. Its graduates have won for their alma mater recognition in the world of education. The university, until very recently, has shown no inclination to receive it under its protection. The time is coming, however, when the status of the "Annex" is to be changed. It will be placed in its relation to the university upon the same footing as the divinity and the law schools.

This will bring to the university extra expense. Before such a step can be justified the "Annex" must be made practically self-supporting. President Eliot has said that, if an endowment fund of $250,000 were raised he would recommend to the Board of Overseers that the "Annex" be incorporated as a part of the university. A proper recognition of the "Annex" students depends upon this, for, although the same courses of instruction are given in the "Annex" as in the university, students on graduating receive a certificate instead of a degree. These certificates are worth as much as a degree of Harvard, but they do not give their possessor the same standing as a degree from the oldest university in the country.

Were the "Annex" a part of the university, its students would have far greater advantages than they now enjoy. They would have, what they greatly need, freer use of the library, of the museum and of the laboratories. Under the present condition it often happens that the work of the college makes such drafts upon the time and strength of the professors that the work of the "Annex" is neglected. Since the society is not able to pay for courses of instruction, especially post-graduate courses, unless a certain number of students want them, many valuable courses cannot be given.

Of the $250,000 needed before the women of the "Annex" can enjoy these privileges, only $76,000 has been raised. It is no uncommon thing for a single person to give millions to colleges. Women make large donation to men's colleges; will not some of them seize this opportunity to benefit their own sex, and thus open to women the best educational advantages this country affords?

The building that is now used for the accommodation of the "Annex" will be sufficient for some years to come. It stands on Garden street, almost directly opposite the Washington elm, and was once the residence of Edward Everett, and later of Judge Fay. It has been remodeled, extended, and put in proper condition, to be used for lecture rooms, library, etc. Both the exterior and the interior still bear the marks of a dwelling house. This is rather an attractive feature, for it gives it a homelike air. The founders intended that it should be something of a home for the girls. There are no dormitories connected with the building. The girls live in private families, but the cozy library, with its easy chairs, the pleasant parlors and conversation rooms, add much to the homelike element toward which Mrs. Agassiz is the large contributor.

Every Wednesday afternoon from four to six she gives a tea in the parlors of the "Annex" to which the students and their friends, the professors and their wives, are invited. This is a privilege greatly prized, especially by the girls who are far from home. If, at the close of a day of hard work—and there are many such at the "Annex"—they cannot sit with their own mothers around the family hearth, they can do the next best thing, go into the "Annex" parlors, where there is always a cheerful, open fire, a profusion of flowers, and where every Wednesday they will be sure of the kindest possible greeting from the sweet-faced woman at the tea table, who represents the great scientist in the American heart.

Being a Western woman I do not believe in Annexes for women. I have found it somewhat difficult to adapt myself to my environment. But here in Cambridge, where is stored the wisdom of ages, an Annex is the best we can have, while we hope and pray for fullness of opportunity some not far-off day.

COLUMBIAN CRUMBS.

BY B. V. CUSHMAN, M. D.

There was a great day at the Children's Building. In fact every day there is "great." The building itself is just what we dreamed about when we were little, and coveted "a really truly play-house." The beautiful white walls are daintily decorated with baby blue. The roof garden has seats, awnings and a wall of coarse, but strong wire netting, extending all around and reaching higher than the aspirations of the nimblest boy. But the exterior is eclipsed by the scenes on the ground floor. In the center of the large court, surrounded by an oak railing is the gymnasium where at any hour from morning till night, are boys and girls, wresting strength from Indian clubs, dumb-bells and numerous appliances. The railing as constantly supports on the outside a group of admiring, interested spectators. There are a few regular classes having the apparatus at regular hours, but much of the day everything is free to visitors and a teacher is on guard all the time to see that no child takes too violent exercise.

A class of boys was on the floor—or in mid-air—as I entered. They were hieing over the backs of the leather "horses," swinging in rings, climbing poles and perching upon horizontal bars. In one corner a handsome, flushed little fellow was pleading with his father to "stay all day" while the rest of the family went sight-seeing; taking in all the fun I began to covet it for girls, too, when a rustling and parting of the crowd made way for a troup of forty misses in Turkish costume. In a trice one was sitting upon a horizontal bar six feet from the floor, another was swinging in the rings and several were proving themselves equal to their brothers in leaping. Last came a class of girls and boys. This was the finest of the three classes. Why shouldn't it be?

Over to the right some large windows open into the court and ever since we came in people have been jostling one another to get to those windows. That is the "exhibit" of the Fitch Crèche of Buffalo, N. Y. For twenty-five cents a baby may be checked, just like any other troublesome but valuable bundle. When called for he is forthcoming "warranted undisturbed." It was a good day for babies yesterday. In the morning they had a merry time. A row of cunning little bassinets, with snowy draperies and fresh ribbons line the wall. In these a dozen babies were studying the anatomy of the human foot.

Half as many more were in the swings—little armchair arrangements, suspended from the ceiling by strong straps, terminating in spiral springs. The luckiest little chap had a string of spools tied to one of the straps at just the right height for boxing. All the patent "gifts to babies" put together don't compare with a string of spools, as every mother knows. There's more in it that a baby can get out without overtaxing himself. Right across from him a roly-poly boy is trying with both hands, both feet and his mouth to enjoy a bunch of bright red balls hung over his head. They look pretty enough, they might do for a girl, but when he leads out straight from the shoulder with his right foot and hits them squarely, they fail to yield that delightful rackety-clackety-cluck of the string of spools. He looks disappointed and covetous.

Over between the windows in the nursery is a large basket swing, suspended in a standard. It is woven in coarse meshes of parti-colored cord, passing around a square frame. Four babies in this have just organized a vocal quartette. Three of the occupants were having a nap, when the fourth changed his mind, and woke the others—result, a sudden squall, calling the nurses together in a hurry. The center of the floor is closed in by a railing, and carpeted with cushions. There a cross-eyed, but happy, little girl takes first lessons in walking, both hands clutching the rail.

The next room is for children from two to six years of age. A row of iron cribs, painted white and trimmed with brass, are ranged against the walls, and a number of rosy sleepers are making good use of them. Toys of all sorts lie about the floor. One energetic little executioner has just decapitated a bisque doll, and is vigorously applying his club to the severed head, while a dear, motherly little girl rocks tenderly a sweet blonde dolly in pink dress. Those over three years old spend half the day in kindergarten.

Nurses accompany the exhibit from Buffalo, but the children are provided by the general public, and while it was expected to care for but fifty, there have been as many as sixty-eight some days. The register shows the occupation of the fathers of these children, and glancing over it I saw: "Lawyer, physician, farmer, merchant, minister, mechanic," and other occupations—enough to satisfy me that literally "everybody" has the baby checked. Ladies on the grounds have told me "it is the greatest comfort ever thought of."

Up stairs I peeped through a window and saw several women talking very earnestly to some bright-eyed, eager-faced little people who paid closer attention than I am accustomed to receive from small folk. I determined to know more of them. I found they are from the Home for training deaf children under school age, located in Philadelphia. A teacher pointing to a little girl's tartan, said with much labial expression, "plaid." She repeated it several times, the children imitating her until their enunciation was unmistakable. I asked about the principles underlying the system of teaching language to children deaf from birth, and she assured me that it is solely patience. "It is done," she said, "by saying words over and over and over and over and over." Another room is occupied with a slöjd class. Here the madness of mud-pie making is reduced to method, as incipient sculptors, wood-carvers and stone-cutters mold the plastic clay.

Most interesting of all is the kitchen-garden, conducted by the originator, Miss Emily Huntington. We take seats against the wall, the piano begins to play, a door opens, and lo, twenty little girls from ten to thirteen years of age come filing in, a delegation from Fairyland! They are clad in snowy Greenaway aprons and wear tiny white caps. Marching to the music they pass a table where stands a pile of trays. Each little miss takes one and they march round and round the room, singi g and suiting movements to the words:

"We're little waiter girls,
We pass the tray like this,
We pass the tray like that—
We always try to hold it very flat."

Memories of cream deposited in my lap, and coffee spilled on my best gown, make me appreciative of this drill, or "game," as children and teachers say. Sweeping, bed-making, table-setting, receiving guests and many other accomplishments necessary to the home-maker are taught in the same fascinating way. I am delighted to find that the wayfarer by my side is a teacher in a mission kitchen-garden of this city. She tells me it is perfectly practical. She has been teaching it four years, "the children are crazy to come," and they practice at home what they learn in the garden.

I muse. I feel that my fingers are upon the right end of the thread that shall unravel the whole tangled skein of social troubles. The trained domestic will revolutionize society—when she comes. Girls equipped for domestic service, without prejudice, but looking upon it as play rather than as drudgery, will relieve the congested avenues of labor. Being independently self-supporting they will be less susceptible to temptation. Miss Huntington assures me that classes are as easily formed, and as largely attended among the children of wealth, as in the tenement-house districts, although originated for the latter. What an enchanted spot will be the household of any one of these trained home-makers. Perhaps the largest gain will come from the happy associations. Who of us is not conscious of life-long distaste for certain simple tasks because in childhood we were set to them when we wanted to play? Now the genius of teaching bends itself to make the lesson wear the guise of a game. The nineteenth is woman's century. All signs show that the twentieth is to be the children's century.

When you come to the Fair be sure to spend a morning and an afternoon with the children. Speaking of coming to the Fair, let me whisper to you, dear reader: Wear your old shoes. It is a mark of high-breeding and good sense in the White City.

ABOUT TOWN.

Strangers very generally agree with Mr. Chauncy M. Depew that the most interesting and pleasing feature of the Fair is the crowd, "orderly, good-natured, intelligent." A gallant reporter commenting upon the great New Yorker's observations attributes all this politeness and good behavior to the ubiquitous American girl. Certainly she is everywhere, and everywhere proves fully equal to taking care of herself. She is the envy and despair of the generation just preceding. There are places where we do not care to go without gentleman escort, but she in her tailor dress, shirt and four-in-hand gets there independent of escort or chaperon. She is staunch as a Puritan, too.

Willard Hall is becoming an educational as well as an agitational center. Mr. Woolley was a magnet drawing large audiences from the International congresses at the noon hour. After him came Dr. C. A. Dorman, of New Haven, in a lecture illustrated by oil paintings and cases from his own practice. It was a remarkably clear and taking presentation of scientific truth in terms crisp and understandable, correcting certain grave errors, professional and popular. When the doctors, in any considerable number, get after old King Alcohol, he will have to abdicate.

A good many visitors find their way into the missions Sunday night but not enough to fill the seats left vacant since the Fair is open.

Silk umbrellas have—most of them—disappeared, and blue cotton ones are taking their places.

HILLSBORO CRUSADE SKETCHES.

X.

BY ELIZA J. THOMPSON.

When the seventh of February, the day, by previous appointment, for the "all-day mass-meeting" came around a heavy snow covered the ground, and still descended in noiseless flakes of purity and beauty. About nine o'clock a. m. the friends from various parts of the county could be seen, all covered white as the cause they represented, making their way to the old Presbyterian church, where our committee of reception, and also a committee of the brethren, on horses, met them; the former conducted the visitors into the morning meeting, and the latter the horses and sleighs to the comfortable quarters provided. A little later the New Vienna delegation came in a huge sled, all seated, robed, and drawn by horses, such as only the humane Friends indulge in.

When those dear, brave, good women, with their Friendly bonnets and modest mien, came walking into that consecrated church, with their minister, Rev. D. Hill, and their conquered foe, Van Pelt, the whole audience with one accord arose and joined heartily in singing, "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow!" A most interesting service followed, of song, prayer and testimony, without flagging, until the hour for lunch—hot coffee and plenty of everything good, thanks to the efficient committee of ladies whose names I find recorded in the minutes as follows: Mesdames M. T. Nelson, Judge Evans, J. M. Boyd, John Jolly, Judge Mathews, James Patterson, Thomas Miller, Miss Maria Stewart, Miss Lizzie Kerby, Miss Rachel Counard.

At half-past one o'clock the procession formed and marched to Music Hall, the women two and two, the men following. The order of the procession was for the Hillsboro workers each one to choose, as far as possible, a visitor as marching companion. The entire picture was imposing, and awed the most rebellious and critical into silence that was almost oppressive as we marched quietly through a phalanx of wondering eyes.

The meeting at the hall was a rare one. Fine music from the soul! an earnest, sensible address by Rev. D. Hill, followed by the famous ex-saloon keeper, Van Pelt, who, in an humble, feeling manner, to all human appearances gave reason for faith in his changed condition. His contrition seemed heartfelt and his alleged allegiance to the cause he had so grossly persecuted hearty and real. After his talk there was much feeling, and some one started that blessed hymn,

"Jesus paid it all,
All the debt I owe."

Then General McDowell, our right-hand champion on all occasions of a public nature, spoke most effectively, and was followed by Dr. P. H. Wever whose mind seemed to take in the far-reaching results of Van Pelt's surrender, and in facts and figures demonstrated it in a clear and impressive manner. The audience was then dismissed, and after handshakings and benedictions, all returned to their homes, strong in the faith of final victory.

In view of the injunction of Mr. Dunn, it was decided by our association that we would go on with our temperance work in the churches, halls and visitations, in our charity work, children's meetings, distribution of temperance literature, canvassing for signatures to the total abstinence pledge, etc., just as we had been doing, save that Mr. Dunn should be left undisturbed with his lawyers until after court. In the meantime our "counsel" had been secured and we felt at ease, having "done what we could," and resting upon the assurance "if God be for us who can be against us?" No malice or ill-will was indulged in on the part of temperance women as the following resolutions, adopted at an evening meeting, February 20, testify:

"WHEREAS, we, the women of the Hillsboro Temperance Association, are greatly encouraged in our work, God having graciously manifested that He is still leading us on.

"Resolved, That while as a body we continue our work with renewed vigor, strong in faith, the principle of love and charity shall ever govern us.

"Resolved, That while our hearts overflow with gratitude to God that we may be instruments of good in His hands, we, as an association utterly discard any expressions of triumph and exultation, and will at any time steadfastly rebuke any spirit of ridicule or unkindness which may be manifested at any of our meetings."

These resolutions were offered by Mrs. W. Doggett, one of our lovely spirits now in heaven, and were heartily indorsed by the entire society. Mrs. Thompson, as recorded in the minutes, then offered the following resolution, which, after the lapse of nearly twenty years, she reindorses:

"Resolved, That we ladies here present express our thanks for the wise and prudent counsels of the gentlemen and their generous conduct towards us in our temperance work."

Persistent, earnest work had been going on in the way of visitations, prayer, song and persuasions, in connection with the three remaining saloons—Ward, Bales and Uhrig; to all human appearances these men seemed "joined to their idols," and yet we did not feel at liberty to "let them alone." So one icy morning a service was held on the pavement in front of the Uhrig saloon; some of the good, thoughtful ladies of the neighborhood sent door rugs for the comfort of the women in kneeling, and Mrs. Foraker, who was called upon to lead in the first prayer that morning, took one of these little rugs, and placing it upon the top step, kneeled upon it, and with her mouth at the keyhole, proceeded to offer one of her apostolic prayers. When she finished that prayer and descended the steps to join her sisters in song on the pavement some one asked her, in an undertone, why she did it, and added: "It looked so queer."

Her answer was: "When a man locks his door on good women's prayers he is apt to be listening inside to hear what they have to say about it." And sure enough, that prayer was heard; the young man inside was not destitute of that tenderness of conscience begotten by early religious teachings; he had two uncles, ministers in fatherland, but love of money "made easy," and the "national toleration" for what God has pronounced "accursed" caused him to see no harm in it; so he sold, but he was miserable because of the women's prayers, songs and entreaties, and he decided to close his establishment and seek a better way.

There was a feeling of real interest in disposing of the liquors of his saloon so that no one should be harmed by them; therefore we entered into a business contract each choosing a "day's-man" to settle prices and so on. The ladies of the committee determined that the liquor owned by Mr. Uhrig should be bought and burned, as none of our society wished to injure the young man's worldly prospects; his store also underwent a process of invoicing and upon a fixed day the ladies met and purchased all there was for sale. As I was a little late, I found no choice in the trophies, but spying a handsome Cognac bottle I found that it belonged to the partner's wife; in his boyhood days he had been our little neighbor, so I said: "Henry, won't you ask her to sell it to me?" He returned from her room quickly with her consent, and the price affixed; to-day that Cognac bottle, so delicately painted, has a place of honor as a relic of the "Hillsboro Crusade" in the castle of Lady Henry Somerset, in England!

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Professor Huxley at Oxford.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—On the 18th day of May, in the Sheldonian theatre, Oxford, I heard Thomas Huxley, F. R. S., deliver the Romanes lecture of the year. It was given last year by Mr. Gladstone. The historic horse-shoe shaped hall accommodated two thousand persons, but on the platform which would have taken a hundred there were not more than thirty.

We sat there for an hour waiting, Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith and I. One lone woman, looking very lorn, had possessed herself of a seat just by the desk at which the great scientist was to stand. We wondered what this could mean and learned that women attended the lectures no matter what they were, and took occasion to be on hand early to get the best seats. Long before the lecture began three other women joined this one and held the fort—the front row—against all comers. The undergraduates packed the galleries; the dons and their wives filled the parquet.

None of the traditional "carryings-on" marked this academic occasion; the keen, bright-faced, well-dressed, fortunate young fellows behaved themselves like gentlemen; now and then they applauded when some favorite professor entered, but there was no chaffing or laughing. The Vice-Chancellor with his mortar-board cap placed properly at the official angle, and preceded by two and followed by two good-sized dons, was received with suitable applause as he entered and took his place on the high seat at the opposite end of the hall from the lecturer's stand.

A wiry figure of moderate height, alert and graceful, with face almost pallid, long, iron-gray hair, keen, dark eyes, flashing behind their spectacles, masterful nose, and lips decidedly drawn down at the corners, flashed like an oriole in its passage to the platform, for the great scientist was arrayed in his scholastic robe of delicate violet and crimson. He was heartily applauded by the refined, gentle-faced throng, for we noticed how the pursuit of intellectual culture, in the midst of classic atmosphere and ideal surroundings, refines and makes gentle the faces of great scholars, as well as of students and undergraduates. Mrs. Smith whispered to me: "What would have been thought of us ten years ago if we had gone to hear a lecture from Professor Huxley?" "But one should always be willing to hear a candid and courteous statement from those from whom he differs," was my apologetic answer, to which she nodded her quick, characteristic assent.

Professor Huxley read for two hours from a good-sized printed pamphlet, which was already on sale in the book stalls of Oxford. His subject was "Evolution and Ethics" (by the way, they never say ev'olution here, but pronounce the word with e long). He began in a clear, well-modulated voice to tell the story of "Jack and the Beanstalk," saying that the cosmic story is all there—"for what is true of the bean is true of living things in general: the most obvious attitude of the cosmos is its changeability; nought seems to endure, save the flow of energy and the rational idea which breeds it. Self-assertion is the essence of cosmic progress, and seems to be required by the struggle for existence, but as men have passed from anarchy to organization those deeply ingrained, serviceable qualities have become defined. The science of ethics professes to furnish us with a reasoned rule of life, to tell us what is right action and why it is so. Whatever difference may exist among experts there is a general consensus that the ape and tiger methods of the struggle for existence are not to be reconciled with sound ethical principles."

Prof. Huxley then went on to give the theories of the universe that have prevailed in different ages, showing that evolution is one of the oldest of ideas. He gave a concise account of Theosophy, involving the famous

COMBINATION.

Mrs. Rounds' Poetical Prose in Prose Rhyme.

BY GEORGIANA WOOLARD PELTON.

Bent the grass blades to each other,
Whispered each unto his brother,
"Let's combine! Let's combine!"
Then the tiny blades upspringing
Sang these words with voices ringing,
"See the fruits of combination,— Emerald carpet for a nation."

Once the stars said each to other,
Signaling a far-off brother,
"Let's all shine! Let's combine!"
At the word their lamps were lighted,
And Earth's wandering feet were righted.
O, the power of combination
For the world's illumination!

Said the ocean drops all kissing,
"Let's not one of us be missing;
Let's combine! Let's combine!
Not in angry waves high tossing,
Let us grant a swift, smooth crossing
To the ships of many a nation!"
O, the might of combination!

Said some dimes and dollars jingling,
"In the work let us be mingling;
Let's combine! Let's combine!
Burn a hole within each pocket,
Temperance treasury—let us stock it!
Prove the power of combination
For the world's regeneration."

THE PERSONAL TOUCH.

BY MRS. NICO BECH-MEYER.

One sunny, summer morning I went down Madison street with my two little children by the hand. It was just six o'clock. I had with me a ten dollar bill, which I was obliged to have changed before seven o'clock. I called in two drug-stores; no money so early in the morning. I waited till the grocery-stores were opened and called in three. They did not think it likely that I would find change in a grocery-store at that time of the day. Butcher-shops, bakeries, fruit-dealers were tried, all with the same result.

I had all the time known where the change was to be found—in a saloon. If I had been alone I should have gone there without hesitation, so urgent was the case, but my two little ones were looking around in this wide and beautiful world, with freshness of a summer morning in their souls—how could I drag them over such a threshold? I thought to leave them outside; but I knew the little boy was too small to be trusted. At last I resolved to go in with them. The bartender looked rather surprised, but very politely commenced fumbling for the change.

Meanwhile I had time to take in the surroundings. Three men were standing by the bar, each with his drink of whisky before him. One was young, seemingly twenty-two, the other might answer to the age of thirty-five, the third was white-haired. With open mouths, panting with surprise and eyes as big as they could make them, did my children gaze at those three. "What were they doing? Why were they here? That was a queer kind of a breakfast-table!" And out of their eyes shone the thought which always enters first into a child's mind, when, without asking for reasons, he hastens to a conclusion through intuition: "Are those men nice men? Do I like them?"

The young man hastily scanned us, then carelessly drank his whisky. Years of experience had not yet told him on what a road he was traveling. The old man never looked at us. He simply could not. He was dull and blind and dead till that morning drink was down. He clung to the bar and his trembling hand grasped for the glass, which he emptied in one moment.

But the middle-aged man—he looked at the children, he followed the little boy's glance towards the glass—a reddish shade crept over his face, he tried to look at me but could not. His eyes were fascinated by those of the little boy. The other two went out. I counted my money. The third glass was still standing untouched. In the presence of woman and little children the true man awoke, and appetite fled. I hurried the children away, and reflected that this one experience, dangerous as I felt it to be, might save the boy from ever making a second visit to a saloon.

One wet evening I passed Ashland avenue going toward the bridge. Two men had for a while walked in front of me. One was a man below middle size, fair-haired, weather-beaten, with the trot of a tired working-man, and in blue overalls bespattered with mud. His companion was a head taller, wore a heavy overcoat and rubber shoes. He spoke almost noisily and the working-man tried to quiet him. They attracted my attention so much that I hurried till I came within closer hearing.

"Now, why can you not as well go with me? There is plenty of time to take a drink."

"No, sir! I know my wife is waiting," and the small man swung his dinner-pail in a very determined manner.

I could see that wife putting the supper on the table, and the children looking through the windows for their father!

"Oh, come! come on! Just a moment!"

"You had better go home with me and get some grub."

In that moment I was alongside of them. I looked hastily into the face of the smaller man.

"If you have a son, sir, I wish he may be like his father," I said in a clear tone, and then hurried on my way.

They were at that time by the steps leading down to the street below. The tall man was on the first step. He had hold of his companion's dirty coat and tried to drag him down. For a second I gazed with intense interest, then the impulse came: "I will not stand here and watch him! He is to be relied on!"

I turned my head and went on, hearing, as I was a few steps ahead: "You had better come home and get some grub!"

I passed quickly, but behind me somebody ran at full speed shouting: "I am right here with you, lady!"

He wanted to give me assurance that my faith in him was rightly placed, and a bond of human sympathy was established in this encounter on the street for which we were both the better and stronger forever, I hope.

WORDS TO THE WISE.

BY ABBY MORTON DIAZ.

AUNT PHOSIE'S LETTER FROM HER FRIEND.

"Yes, my dears, it came to me from my book lender, as I call Mis' Fuller, and it says here:

"'You are right, Aunt Phosie. We human creations are one, physically, our bodies being made of precisely the same materials; also one in heart and mind, having, as you say, a common sensibility to joy, grief, shame, praise, censure, pity, kindness, harshness. But we must not fail to add that even closer is our "mutual oneness" in and with that spiritual Omnipresence known to us through the Scriptures as the one common Father, the Life of lives, and spoken of in the various ancient writings of the world as "The Universal Soul," "The One Original Life," "Unity," "Good," "Source and Father of All," and enlarged upon by a poet of modern times as that infinitude of creative life which "connects and equals all."

"'It is gratifying to know that the idea of human oneness, with everything that it implies, has been widely recognized and dwelt upon, and in all times, for the universality of its conception, goes to prove its truth. From the ancient Persian writings we have: "All are limbs of one another . . . . produced by the same substance." "It is not life to live for one's self alone." (Grecian.) "Men are born for the sake of men, that they may mutually benefit one another." (Roman.) "To love and to serve all men is to delight in God." (Chinese.) "The whole world is but one family. The love of the perfect man is universal. All within the four seas are his brothers." (Chinese.) "There is no higher duty than to work for the whole world." (Hindu.) "I am a man, and nothing that concerns human beings is indifferent to me." (Roman.) "One should seek for others the happiness one desires for one's self." (Hindu.) "The eternal, universal, unchangeable law of all beings is to seek the good of one another, like children of one Father." (Roman.) "When you labor for others do it with the same zeal as if it were for yourself." (Hindu.) "Do as you would be done by." (Persian.) "Do not that to a neighbor which you would take ill from him." (Pittacus, an ancient writer.)

"'Our own Scriptural confirmations of this truth are too well known to need quotation. The prayer "that they may be one" and such texts as "ye are members one of another," "Let every man seek another's and not his own good," "That which ye would have others do to you, etc.," are familiar to all. Those previously quoted are from a collection of writings similar to them in sentiment and dating back from one hundred and ninety-two years to six hundred and twenty-seven years before the Christian era. Truly God hath not left Himself without a witness.

"'Another saying from the very ancient philosophy is, "You are fit to apprehend that you are not distinct from me, that which I am thou art. Men contemplate distinctions because they are stupefied by ignorance." And a much revered clergyman of our modern times tells us, speaking of the oneness of humanity, "Until man's eyes shall be purged to discern even in the most degraded a ray of Deity the true bond of communion will be wanting between man and man and man and God. . . . . When this truth is a reality in social life it will transform the world.'"

"Yes, surely it will. And why? This is why. It proclaims the value of the human being as a human being. Not merely the respectable, the best people, the wisest, are made in the image of God, but all are equally children and heirs of the Highest. This gives them a value irrespective of possessions, conduct or of any worldly conditions. None of these can affect the divine stamp and superscription, for what is divine is eternal. How it would change the present individual rating were all recognized as being equally of the Divine lineage and were this esteemed, as it is, the highest possible rating. But how distant seems that day of recognition in view of the present classing of people according to their belongings, their mental acquirements, their occupations, dress, kinds of manners and of pronunciation, and considering the general tendency to take comfort in separateness or exclusiveness, that is, in knowing that we have something which everybody cannot have and which gives us superiority—diamonds, for instance, or real lace, mansions or money or wisdom or goodness or gentility; as if it were possible that any conditions could to any degree sever the close connection between us and our kind.

"Separateness? That way danger lies, and general disaster. Oneness, with all this implies, is not only religion, not mere sentiment, nor mere philosophy, it is safety. Suppose Jupiter were to separate himself from his planetary family!

"Yes, truly will there be a transformation scene when the perception of this grand all-the-world truth shall show forth in the conduct of human life as we feel our kinship with every one, the poverty-stricken, the purse-proud, the faulty, the foolish, the wise, the ignorant, the good, the selfish, the disagreeable, the pleasing, the tramp, the fallen woman, the fallen man, and recognize with holy reverence the divine image imprinted equally upon all.

"But the class or caste spirit predominant in this Christian (?) civilization has managed humanity on a kind of layer, or strata, system, and now by rating people according to their positions in its own system it presumes, forsooth, to place its mere human valuation above the divine! Temples of wood and stone are consecrated with human rites and ever after held in sacred reverence, while temples of the living God, habitations of the Most High, are treated with more or less neglect and aversion, even with contempt, and often converted into actual standing ground for the very affluence which builds churches and bestows colleges. . ."

THE INFLUENCE OF A "SCRIPTURE ROLL."

BY M. J. MIDDLETON.

A captain of a collier brig, while talking to a visitor one day, said, pointing to the wall of the cabin, "You see the roll you gave us last voyage, Mr. C.? They're grand things, sir. I fully expected, when we were caught in that awful gale going home last time, that we had seen all our days. The ship was on her beam ends, the coals having shifted, and the boats were smashed to pieces, and night coming on. Going below for a few minutes, my eye rested on the text for the day: 'God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble,'" and he repeated it through.

"Do you know, sir," he said, "it came to me like an angel's voice, and I seemed to feel sure that the Lord would spare us somehow. And when I went on deck again I said: 'Keep a good heart, my lads, God is as good as His word; He will pull us through this trouble if we only trust Him.'"

"After this, we set a handful of canvas, and got her on the other tack, and the wind fairly blew her upright; then we sounded the pump, and there were five feet, six inches of water in the hold. 'We must now pump, lads, for our lives,' I said, 'or she'll sink under us, poor thing; God is good,' and to my astonishment I repeated the whole text to them, but I don't recollect learning it.

"Then little Bill said: 'Let us strike up, "Pull for the shore, sailor," and so they did; they pumped and sang one hymn after another, from five p. m. till eight o'clock next morning, when we sighted a Lowestoft lugger fishing boat. I hoisted the Union down, and he was soon alongside in his boat. This gave my crew fresh heart, and again we went to the pumps, singing Sankey's hymns. This extra help allowed two and two to go below and get a pint of coffee and a bite to eat, and they sorely needed it, sir,—wet through, and chafed raw under the arms with pumping for thirteen hours.

"And while ye're feeding, lads," I said, "keep your eye on the text;" and I believe they did, and got fresh comfort and strength from it. It's a grand thing, sir, to have the Word of God a-staring ye in the face at any time, but especially so in a time like that."

THE LITTLE WEAVER.

Once in an eastern palace wide
A little child sat weaving;
So patiently her task she plied,
The men and women at her side
Flocked round her, almost grieving.

"How is it, little one," they said,
"You work so well and cheerily?"
You never seem to break your thread,
Or snarl, or tangle it, instead
Of working smooth and clearly.

"Our weaving gets so worn and soiled,
Our silk so frayed and broken,
For all we've fretted, wept and toiled,
We know the lovely pattern's spoiled;"
They sighed as words were spoken.

The little child looked in their eyes,
So full of care and trouble;
And pity chased the sweet surprise
That filled her own, as sometimes flies
The rainbow in the bubble.

"I only go and tell the King,"
She said abashed and meekly;
"You know, He said in 'everything,'"
"Why so do we!" they cried; "we bring Him all our troubles weekly!"

She turned her little head aside;
A moment let them wrangle;
"Ah, but," she softly then replied,
"I go and get the knot untied
At the first little tangle!"

O little children—weavers all!
Our broidery we spangle
With many a tear that need not fall,
If on our King we would but call
At the first little tangle!

THE TWO STORES.

BY MRS. C. O. TOWNSEND.

"Mamma! mamma!" called a voice which hushed to a whisper as mamma came out of the bedroom holding up a warning finger.

"Say, mamma, just come out here and see what a nice stand we've made, and we're going to sell apples, and mamma, won't you please make us some lemonade? You know there are lots of people in town for the races and the lemonade'll sell. Say, mamma, can we have it?"

Mrs. Ross stepped to the door. Inside the neat stand three more anxious faces were watching and at once three voices called, "Can we have it, mamma?"

Now Mrs. Ross was quite busy that day, but before long she found time to make the lemonade for the little store which seemed to her a very innocent amusement for her four wide-awake boys.

To the boys it seemed nothing like amusement but very businesslike, indeed, as occasionally the pennies and nickels dropped in the hole cut in the cover of their "money-box."

Harold could print nice back-handed letters and some neat cards stood forth from the apple pile and the lemonade glasses.

APPLES, 2 for 1 cent.	LEMONADE, 5 cents.

Soon Carl came running in calling loudly, "Oh, mamma! Nib Steele came along with his popcorn and we've taken the lot to sell for him. We have two cents and Nib three of every sack." And he darted out again.

Mamma took up the baby whose nap was so suddenly ended, and said to her, "Never mind, baby, you and I must always do all we can to keep the boys contented at home." And the sweet little sister rubbed her sleepy eyes with her fat fists and went out with mamma to the little store to buy some "pop." (This little sister never used compound words.)

They were waited upon with a queer mixture of dignity, smiles and suppressed excitement, but when the baby dropped the nickel in the box a chorus of voices shouted, "There! That makes just thirty cents. Ain't that nice, mamma? Don't you think we better take it and buy candy so to have more things to sell?"

"Of course you may if you like," said mamma, "but I think you will do better to sell just these."

Then Mrs. Ross took baby in the house to eat her "pop." The little store prospered and the small merchants were very happy. At dinner the boys could scarcely take time to eat. When the little clerk came in to his late dinner he proudly announced three more cents —forty-nine in all.

After dinner was over and a few duties done, Mrs. Ross stepped out again to see how fared her little band. To her surprise the boys were sitting—a dejected trio—on the front steps, while one wee curly-headed merchant had taken possession of the deserted store and sat in silent waiting at the little counter.

"Mamma, just look at that! The March boys have got up a stand and their father has put in cigars and now all the men go there."

"Ain't it just too bad?"

"They've got more money 'n we have already. Just one cigar costs five or ten cents."

Mrs. Ross took in the situation at a glance. It was the same old question, only her boys were meeting it sooner than she had anticipated. "Well, boys," said she, "we'll see what can be done. You need not give up just yet."

So she spread a clean, white cloth on the soiled counter, arranged the apples, washed the glasses and made the stand a little more inviting. The storekeepers gathered fresh courage and seated themselves again, to the disappointment of little curly who had sold two apples for one cent during his brief reign.

In about an hour mamma heard merry shouts and laughing and looking out she saw the merchants all drinking lemonade and eating popcorn. They saw her and came running up.

"Say, mamma, the sun got around there and it was just awful hot."

"Yes, and the men have all gone to the races!"

"And, too, mamma, the ice all melted out of the lemonade, so we all agreed to break up and divide our money."

"We've got nineteen cents for each of us three. And we gave Willie five cents and all the apples."

"And I'm goin' to sell 'em when the men come down," said the plucky little man.

"But, mamma," said Arthur, "wasn't it just too bad about that other store starting in with cigars?"

"Boys," said mamma seriously, "would you like to sell cigars?"

"No!" said all the boys together, and Mrs. Ross smiled at the contempt in the tones.

"But, mamma, they do make a lot of money," said Harold, "they've got one dollar and fifty-three cents already."

"Yes, boys, there is plenty of money made selling cigars and tobacco, and more still selling liquor. And some men find it a great temptation, but I had rather you boys would have less money all your lives than to be rich selling tobacco or liquor."

"Well, I guess you needn't be afraid of any of us," said Arthur, and Carl added, emphatically, "No, sir!"

"But there's another point," said mamma. "There are things that we could make that would sell in spite of cigars, and some day we will have another store, but not to-day."

"Oh, what is it?"

"Can't we have it to sell when the men come down?" (Little Willie's face for a moment lost its hopeful expression.)

"No," said mamma, "for this reason; the men who attend these July races are just the kind of men who are best suited with cigars and such things. But some day there will be a different class of people in town, and we will try again."

"All right," said the boys. "We'll do it. Come on down to the sheds!"

Mrs. Ross watched her strong, healthy boys, and her heart was very thankful. Turning to go in, she saw little careful Willie packing up his apples before joining his brothers. He laughed as he saw her, and shaking his curly head, he said; "I'll sell 'em."

And he did—to mamma.

THE LORD'S DAY.

[From the German.]

Speaketh thus the Lord of Heaven,
"In each week the days are seven,
Six of these to thee are granted,
Work to do as may be wanted,
But the seventh belongs to me.
Then will I instruct you duly
How to serve and praise me truly,
How as pure and good to be."
Dearest child, forget it not,
What the Lord of Heaven hath taught!

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Ho, for the green fields, the woods and waters! Vacation times have come again, the schoolhouse doors are closed and the rooms deserted. The routine of school life is gladly exchanged for the freedom of the glorious out-of-door existence. What a delight it is to rest and let the hours slip idly by with no thought or care.

During the first few days after the closing of school it seems as if you could never return and be shut up within its four walls again and subject to its discipline. But this is only for a few days, for soon you begin to find that you really did enjoy the daily "grind" and that there was a great pleasure in the regular round of duties.

You shake your head and say no! Ah, it won't be long before you will agree that the school days were your happiest times.

And another thing, doing nothing will soon become as monotonous as were the long, long hours of school in the early summer when the soft breezes began to blow and the air seemed so stifling within doors. And you'll learn the life lesson which you must take to heart that in earnest, active exercise and doing for others are to be found the only true good times. Yours for a useful vacation.

SOUTH CAROLINA'S STATE DISPENSARY."

At the last election South Carolina provided that voters should express their sentiments at the ballot-box concerning the sale of liquors in the state. The result was against the sale by a ten thousand majority. The legislature was anti-prohibition, but the will of "the constituency" had been too strongly expressed to be ignored, and a radical prohibition bill, which passed the house, was "tinkered" into the "Evans Dispensary Law," which became operative the first day of July.

Under this law the state sells all liquor dispensed by traffic; clubs and hotels have no privilege of sale, and railways are prohibited the transportation of any whisky which does not bear the seal of the state commissioner. The legislature appropriated fifty thousand dollars for the establishment of a large four-story dispensary with the best improved faciilities for bottling and corking, etc., and where fifteen thousand bottles are every day corked and stamped with the government seal. The state chemist analyzes every sample that is bottled, and no goods are put upon the market which he has not indorsed. Many thousand dollars in excess of the appropriation have already been used to store car-loads of whiskies here.

The county dispensary is expected to be the purchaser of these wares. Six counties, already under prohibition, will have no dispensary; sixteen counties probably will have them, and the remaining thirteen are doubtful, with a leaning to prohibition. Towns and cities may have a dispensary on application by a petition of a majority of their property holding voters.

A purchaser at a dispensary must hold a certificate of good character, may buy daily in quantities not less than one-half pint, bottled and sealed, nor more than five gallons. Minors and known drunkards may not purchase under any conditions. The penalties for violation of the law are inflexible and severe.

Four classes of South Carolinians are watching the operation of this law with intense hostility. First, the liquor dealers—who find their occupation gone and their business—well, with Hamlet, "not in it." Second, the regular or old democracy whose salvation depends on putting dynamite under Governor Tillman's dynasty, and whose political instincts must range with the traffic for whose vote "the party" always bids. Third, the small and high-minded class whose gentility, rather more than ethics, is disgusted that their proud state should go into the low-bred liquor business. Fourth, a large and steadily growing, sober-minded citizenship which believes that the state has gone into partnership with the liquor traffic for the revenue of wickedness, and that "a little is better than great revenues without right."

On the other hand are the friends of the measure, represented largely by the reform and regnant wing of the democracy, who claim that the obliteration of the saloon, and the presence of a dispensary only when the will of a majority of free-holders demands it, will fall but little short of prohibition in result; and yet, rather inconsistently, urge that the revenue will enormously reduce taxation—perhaps to the amount of half a million dollars.

It is said saloonists and railroads are making ready to test the constitutionality of the law, but all the enginery of government is enlisted for its enforcement. Thus far its many elements of opposition have combined to make petitioners for dispensaries fewer and slower than the friends of the measure expected, and revenues may prove proportionally disappointing.

Whether the law will act prohibitively and beneficently or will prove a wily scheme of "the ins" to lengthen and strengthen their political stakes remains to be seen. But it cannot be doubted that if the selling of intoxicants is a degrading and dangerous thing in the hands of an individual, the quality of the act does not improve in the hands of the state; and just as the state is more powerful than the individual, by so much does it exceed in danger as a liquor dealer. It is the liquor we want to get rid of, not the dealer. The demonstration that South Carolina must make of the Evans Dispensary Law as a temperance measure is that it rids the state of its whisky. Nothing less will satisfy Prohibitionists.

A LIQUOR PAPER'S VIEW.

We temperance people have always supposed that if there was any class of men thoroughly alive to their own business interests it was the liquor dealers. We are in the habit of alluding to their singleness of purpose as a characteristic which Prohibitionists would do well to emulate. But the Champion, a Chicago liquor paper, thinks that once in seven years at least, the liquor-sellers need "waking-up." In a recent issue that organ of the whisky interest takes occasion to republish a "call to arms" which first appeared in its columns in 1886, deeming it eminently appropriate to the present situation. It considers the retail trade as more than ever menaced by the "un-American crusade against personal liberty." The liquor traffic, it says, "stands or falls with the saloon. If the saloon goes, the distilleries and wholesale houses are doomed likewise, and the annihilation of the entire business is only a question of time."

After picturing the dangerous activity of "prohibition howlers" all over the country, and declaring the Democratic party to be the only safe party for liquor men, the Champion proceeds to point out the way of salvation. First, organize a more perfect system of state and national protective associations. Second, follow the example of Prohibitionists by putting "eloquent, powerful agitators on the stump and in the lecture-room." Third, imitate the methods of these same fanatics in the circulation of literature.

"To see ourselves as others see us" is not always conducive to self-congratulation. But when from the watch-tower of the enemy comes commendation of prohibition methods, when the leaders themselves regard our tactics as worthy of imitation, then indeed we have reason for satisfaction and encouragement.

The Champion very pertinently asks of the liquor interest, "Where are your speakers, your lecturers, your debaters capable of meeting the prohibition missionary crew and of refuting their false assertions?" And we echo, where? Where is the man brave enough to engage in forensic combat with our Prohibition speakers? Where is the man or woman ready to plead the cause of the liquor traffic before an intelligent popular audience? To become champion of the saloon on the public platform is quite a different matter from declaring one's self "Champion of Freedom and Right" from the editorial chair or in a Tammany caucus.

The Prohibition speaker has an immense advantage over the liquor advocate to begin with. It is, as Emerson affirms, the man of conviction who convinces, and our speakers are "powerful and eloquent" and convincing because they are themselves convinced, heart and brain, of the righteousness of their cause. The whisky champion on the other hand, convinced though he may be of the revenues, public and private, to be derived from the liquor traffic, realizes full well that the cause he represents is an unholy one. He knows in his heart that its whole tendency is to subvert the purpose for which man was created, and that the stamp of the adversary is upon the entire business.

The Champion wants the liquor question presented before the people in its "true aspect." So do we. We want the truth concerning alcoholic beverages, from the time when the grain is diverted from its legitimate use and its life-giving properties converted by an invention of the evil one into death-dealing weapons, to the hour when in sparkling, mocking form it lures men to destruction and recruits the ranks of paupers and criminals. We want the whole truth concerning the relation of the drink traffic to social and economic conditions. We want nothing but the truth concerning the liquor question in any of its aspects, physical, moral, financial, political. But ah! the "trade" is too wise—according to the liquor-dealer's idea of wisdom—to give the people that.

In the third point urged by the Champion, the temperance fanatics are held up as shining examples because they contribute liberally to the support of their publications. The distillers and wholesalers, it seems, while patronizing trade journals, are decidedly niggardly in their support of anti-prohibition organs like the Champion. To save themselves from ruin, and their strongholds from being swept to the "bottomless ocean," these special upholders of "personal liberty" must be sustained, and three things are pointed out as necessary to this end: First, subscribe personally for the Champion; second, advertise in the Champion; third, follow the example of "wealthy prohibition cranks" and send fifty or one hundred dollars for copies to be sent to people who can't or won't pay the subscription price themselves. Just how either of these methods is going to benefit the Southwest, the Inn-keeper, and the rest of the anti-prohibition organs we fail to perceive (probably in some subtle manner not to be grasped by the prohibition mind) but the real motive in this "call to arms"—the real cause for editorial solicitude—is here revealed. As one reads to the end one is struck with the ludicrous similarity of style between this article and patent medicine "ads." Two columns of introduction lead ingeniously up to the main point, viz., rally round the Champion.

The complaint often heard from prohibition papers that they do not receive the support they are entitled to, is, we have long thought, hardly a just one. When we consider that the Chicago liquor organ has but seven thousand subscribers, scattered over thirty-two different states, we look with increased pride and respect upon the lengthy subscription lists of our own temperance journals, and realize that our people are responding nobly to the call of duty along this line. The exclusively anti-prohibition papers number only some eight or ten, while we have, it is declared, over three hundred papers now in the field, with a combined circulation of one million five hundred thousand. Think what a power we should be if each subscriber could and would vote the Prohibition ticket!

Much of the present strength of the temperance cause is due to systematic effort in the circulation of literature. And the best feature of this line of work is that every one may lend a hand. Comparatively few persons possess gifts of tongue or pen, but there is not a man, woman or child who cannot aid in circulating the printed words. Seed thus sown is sure to bring forth thirty, sixty, and even a hundred fold. It is no wonder the liquor men recognize in the distribution of literature one of our strongest points of advantage.

ONE PHASE OF THE LABOR QUESTION AS RELATED TO WOMEN.

An article on "Women Workers," by a woman who has been for ten years a forewoman in a manufactory of white goods and clothing in Philadelphia, discusses among other questions, why it is that girls prefer factory work to domestic service. The writer's answer is because factory work "is faithfully, thoroughly, patiently taught; for men as masters have that priceless precision of knowledge which inspires confidence, commands respect, and raises the spirit of hope and emulation in the highest degree. In the factory, the first step taken with raw hands is to show them an exact sample of their work. No knowledge is taken for granted. Every stage of the process is conscientiously taught by practical lessons. Only a woman would expect a rosy-cheeked girl who dug potatoes and ran barefoot in Ireland, to handle her fine china, wash and iron her fine linen, and cook her steak to a turn. . . To women who want such helpers it may be said, 'They will not come to you until you can teach them what you do not know yourselves, the finest of all arts, the art of housewifery.'"

That this is the whole answer we do not believe, but it is a large part of the answer, and, with the exceptions which always obtain in any general statement, it is a strictly truthful representation of those fields of work known as peculiarly woman's. We venture the assertion that no other kind of work in the world is so utterly unsystematized, so haphazard as the various trades which go to make up the conglomerate known under the title of "house-keeping." Take the single item of cooking and how many old housekeepers are competent to teach any one else the modicum of skill which they possess themselves? We know whereof we speak when we say that, especially among the older women, not one in ten can tell precisely the amount of flour, butter, sugar or any other ingredient that she puts into any article of food. Her only way of teaching is to have the would-be learner watch her while she puts the mysterious thing together. Even then, the learner can, at the best, only get a general idea of the process beyond the mere matter of the materials used, and has yet to learn, through a series of discouraging failures, what might be learned in one lesson. In the end, the cooks thus trained are irregular and uncertain in their success, and liable to fail at the most unfortunate times. Women of great acuteness of eye can judge with considerable accuracy when their batter or dough is of the right consistency, but we have yet to see one who does not quite frequently suffer more or less partial failures in the art which she has been practicing constantly for twenty-five years or more. These failures are regarded as inevitable, and the heavy cake or sour bread is attributed to "bad luck." To be sure it may be recognized that too little flour or soda was used, but the idea seems never to be entertained that such failure could be surely avoided by carefully measuring the ingredients, that the same proportion, placed under the same condition, will produce the same results as long as this universe continues under the reign of law. On the contrary, many such housekeepers scoff at such methods as a needless waste of time and betokening inexperience. The result is that men with their "priceless precision of knowledge," and their accurate methods have stepped into our own field and supplanted us. The best cooks of the greatest hotels are not women but men.

We regard this most unfortunate condition of woman's work as a piece, if not largely a result of, the absurd but generally prevailing notion that woman's way of attaining results is utterly different from man's. Women reach the conclusions by "intuition" which men reach by reason; what more natural, therefore, than that woman should produce her results by this same occult faculty and that the work which in the past has been supposed to be her own peculiar domain should be subject to strange mysterious laws entirely different from those governing the rest of the universe. Hence, instead of the commonsense view that certain ingredients mixed together in precisely the same proportions and the same thoroughness and subjected to precisely similar conditions of heat must produce inevitably the same result, no matter by whom compounded, we have the aged superstition that certain persons possess the art of preparing certain articles of food with a skill which no one else can hope to approximate. But, whatever may be the origin of these mistaken notions, the evil itself is what must be remedied. This can be done by placing the various departments of housekeeping on the same scientific basis that other kinds of work are placed. The modern movements to teach all kinds of housework in this scientific way is one of the most important of the many new features of our civilization. It is one necessary step toward making modern housekeeping something else than the intolerable burden it is rapidly becoming.

GENERAL PROGRAM OF THE WORLD'S CONGRESSES OF 1893.

So many of our readers are inquiring in regard to the World's Congresses, their arrangement and dates, that we gladly supply the following information for the balance of the season, advising our readers to clip the paragraph and keep it for reference.

For the first time a voice has sounded from the depths of Germany, and it is the voice of women in politics. We could hardly believe our eyes when we read in the London papers, on June 16th, that in the city of Berlin, where the Social Democrats had won decisive victories, "the women and children were pressed into the service, and the most arduous efforts were made to secure every possible vote for the true and unsullied People's party, as the Socialists term themselves." May this prove to be but the upspringing of a new dawn in that great land of thought and poetry, and now, at last, of progress!

Pledge.—"I hereby solemnly promise, God helping me, to abstain from all distilled, fermented and malt liquor, including Wine and Cider, and to employ all proper means to discourage the use of and traffic in the same."

Q.—Can a body of women be a W. C. T. U. without having signed a W. C. T. U. constitution?

A.—No.

Q.—Should a delegate sent by a body of women, calling themselves a W. C. T. U., but none of whom have signed a constitution, be recognized by the state and have a seat in its convention?

A.—The state union to which the delegates are sent must decide this.

Q.—Is it unconstitutional for one woman to hold the offices of recording secretary and of corresponding secretary at the same time?

A.—No, not unless the constitution of the society expressly prohibits it.

Caroline B. Buell.

Q.—Is not the "boycott" retaliatory, and is it a suitable weapon for white-ribboners who object to an open Fair Sundays?

A.—The attitude of those who advise non-attendance while the Fair is open on Sabbath, is not one of retaliation, and should not be called a boycott. Their object is not to injure the Fair, the best interests of which they hope to promote. My personal belief is, that before October, the Directory will—partly in consequence of diminished attendance and interest, be glad to close on Sunday. But, however this may result, it is to many of us a matter of principle to have nothing to do with an organization that so defiantly and flagrantly ignores the public conscience and wishes, breaks the laws of God and man, and educates the rising generation in contempt for commercial honor and honesty. As a partial offset, I should be glad to have our youth see that the best classes of our people prefer to deny themselves rather than seem to uphold and help such an enterprise. That many Christian people think such views extreme, is undoubted; let us each be fully persuaded in our own mind, and whichever course we take, let us do what we believe will best honor our Master.

One of England's foremost temperance leaders uses often this expression, "That's a good teaching phrase." Temperance workers may well ask themselves whether their speeches would naturally call out this compliment from the expert in the cause.

Prof. Graham Bell says there is no "theoretical reason" why electricity may not be made useful in sight as it already has in sound, and indicates that one of the possibilities of the future is that vision may be indefinitely extended by means of the same wonderful power which now enables us to converse across a continent.

The terrible earthquake in Lisbon occurred when the poet Goethe was but a little fellow, and when he heard the mourning and lamentation of those about him in view of a calamity so great, he said to his mother, looking up into her face with those wonderful eyes that seemed to see further into the blue of Heaven than any other eyes of his generation: "Perhaps God sees that no mortal accident can injure an immortal soul." Years later the poet Schiller said: "Death cannot be an evil for it is universal."

The following lines quoted by Mrs. Elizabeth W. Andrew at one of the great social purity meetings in London will be of special interest as they fit so well her recent brave mission, and also the stay-at-home "missions" of thousands of white-ribboners:

"Had Moses failed to go, had God
Granted his prayer, there would have been
For him no leadership to win;
No pillared fire; no magic rod;
No wonders in the land of Zin;
No smiting of the sea; no tears
Ecstatic shed on Sinai's steep;
No Nebo, with a God to keep His burial; only forty years
Of desert, watching with his sheep."

Theosophy declares that man has seven planes of existence, of which three pertain to him as a person (that is, while he lives in a mask—the word persona meaning mask). These are the body, the astral body, and vitality. But he has four planes that pertain to him as an individual, an entity; they are the emotional nature, the mortal mind, the spiritual mind, the spirit. He climbs at last the highest rung, i. e. pure spirit, but remains an individual still. The philosophy of Hegel is largely the basis of theosophy.

In his recent Oxford lecture, Professor Huxley declared that self-assertion is the essence of the cosmic process. I imagine that whatever might be controverted in the address, this declaration will be accepted by all observers of the human race, especially in the political arena.

One of our leading philanthropic women related the following, in an address in which she was enforcing the mistake of women who make their own personality so prominent as to interfere with the success of their work. "When I was a little girl," she said, "my mother explained to me how to sweep, and then set me to do it, and stood over me to see that I did it right. Pretty soon she said, 'You are standing right in front of your broom, so that you are all the time in your own way. Keep yourself behind your work, and stand out of the way of your broom.' Women must dismiss egotism, and learn not to get in their own way."

The story that Beecher liked best, and used to relate in his own inimitable way, was the following: "The minister had preached his sermon, warm and urgent, and concluded by asking everybody in the audience who would like to go to heaven to stand up. All did so except a man who was somewhat under the influence of liquor, and seemed to be slightly dozing. A woman resuming her seat after the demonstration of the desire to reach the better country, jostled this man, just as the minister was saying, 'All who wish to go to hell, stand up,' whereupon the drinking man arose, looked at the parson and said dubiously, 'Seems to me you and I are in a hopeless minority!' This had, it is needless to say, a bad effect on the morals of the assembly.

THE OLD MAGAZINE PROBLEM.

BY MATE PALMER.

What do you do with your old magazines and papers? Stack them away in the attic if you are so fortunate as to possess one, or if you live in a flat have you three or four shelves entirely around the store-room filled to the ceiling, and some more tucked away in the basement? They are the hoarded accumulation of your years of housekeeping, the dread of house-cleaning season, and, if perchance you are one of those migratory individuals who live in a rented home, the terror of moving time, when they must all be carefully packed, dusted, and a new place set apart for them. Of course you value them. Why don't you have a grand clearing out and get rid of them? Some you kept because there was an article you especially liked. To save your life you could not even tell what it was about now. Others you preserved because you did not have time to look at them at all when they came. No, and you never will. In the multiplicity of new magazines you won't go back to the old ones. In the meantime there is a constant demand for something to read in the various charitable and reformatory institutions. What you might easily contribute would, perchance, help to cheer sad hearts and lighten many gloomy hours. Then there are many of your acquaintances who are not flooded with reading matter. Sort your magazines over, you know which will suit or be suitable for certain persons, and when you give them, stipulate that after perusal they shall be passed along to some other hungry mind. Thus only will your shelves assume a less overworked appearance, and the magazines and papers complete the mission for which they were created.

While you are about it, you might go through the numerous bundles and packages you have lain away so carefully from time to time, until every bag, chest and spare nook fairly groans with the accumulation. You have no idea what you will unearth; big rolls of calico, like gowns long since forgotten; give them to some old woman who still finds an avenue for her industry in the ever gorgeous patchwork quilt. Scraps of silk and velvet in abundance; gladden some young girl's heart with them, whose deft fingers will fashion them into something pretty and useful. And there are a lot of worsteds and some canvas left since the time you used to embroider impossible woolen dogs on pink backgrounds. You will be surprised to find how many really useful things are there, too; articles you have had to buy again and again, because you had forgotten you had them. Now you can utilize them, and the things you don't want, give away. You will be delighted to see how it will multiply space, no small item with the World's Fair pending, and all your friends to be made comfortable.

Chicago,

OHIO.

JOTTINGS.

The young women of northeastern Ohio held their fourth annual Y conference at Akron recently, and it was pronounced a success in every particular. The attendance was large, the program as carried out a real inspiration. The reports from the various unions were encouraging. Miss Frances H. Ensign, the cultured state superintendent of the Y Branch, presided handsomely. The address of welcome and the response were excellent, the latter is said to have been specially impressive because of the youth and earnestness of the speaker. Addresses on "Our Paper," "Personal Worth as a Y," "Wherefore a Y?" "How the Y Society Looks to a W," and "Physical Education," were very instructive and pleasing. The decorations were unusually fine, the flowers used were the generous gift of Mr. Lewis Miller of Chautauqua fame. The music was excellent, a Demorest medal contest and a model Y meeting were attractive features.

Massillon Y's recently held a series of gospel temperance meetings at which 600 persons signed the pledge.

Delaware county's semi-annual convention was held at Africa June 1. Pulpit and walls were tastefully decorated with flowers and white ribbon mottoes. Mrs. R. J. Trego, county president, presided with fine executive ability. All the officers were present, all unions but three represented. A gold medal Demorest contest constituted the evening program, and the eight contestants, grouped on the platform, each wearing a silver medal, formed an impressive picture. It was a source of sincere regret to this county union that Greenwood Lake could not be secured by them for Fourth of July exercises similar to those so successfully held there last year, thus preëmpting this day for true patriotism instead of the program becoming so common on that day. Not being able to secure the Lake for the Fourth, their annual temperance picnic will be held there in August.

W. C. T. U. day on the program of the Lakeside Assembly will occur July 28, and will be anticipated with great pleasure by white-ribboners who can arrange to attend, since Mrs. Laura Ormiston Chant and Mrs. Carrie Lane Chapman will be our speakers for that day.

Defiance county convention held at Hicksville in June was a notable one. Mrs. Farnsworth, the county president, presided, and as she has the great gift of enthusing every one with the work, the meeting was a very enjoyable one. The ministers of the town attended the entire session. One of them asked for the collection and two of them gathered it up, receiving almost twelve dollars. The decorations were beautiful—white and red lilies, geraniums, begonias, etc., were in abundance, and vases of white flowers surrounded the altar. The walls were hung with many banners; white and yellow bunting used as drapery spoke silently for temperance and suffrage. Flags were on all sides, and the picture of Abraham Lincoln as well as Miss Willard's spoke the patriotic sentiments of the union.

The eleventh district held one of its most profitable and enjoyable annual conventions at Athens. The enthusiasm was contagious. The advance in favor of equal franchise for all was marked. It was a firm conviction that the truth, "It is not good for man to be alone," should be applied to politics, or state making, as well as to home making. The thought was impressed that it is now the duty of every intelligent, patriotic woman to prepare herself to exercise the rights of citizenship, which will speedily be hers. "The Local Union," "Its Organization" and "Successful and Vigorous Work," received special attention.

The welcome was voiced by Miss Kate Cranz, professor of modern languages in the Ohio University; response by Miss Ethlyn Allender. Social purity was presented by Miss Ida Robbins in a powerful address, handled with rare tact and delicacy. "The Model Union," "Franchise," "Non-Alcoholics in Medicine," "Good Literature and Plenty of It," "Dress Reform," "Scientific Temperance Instruction," "Flower Mission," "The W. C. T. U. at Summer Gatherings," "Physical Education," etc., were all presented and discussed, also opportunity given for questions.

Nelsonville had added forty names to her roll in six months; Jackson Y excelled in the amount and variety of work done; Athens union for funds raised, having paid one hundred dollars to the Temple in three months. The resident ministers gave words of counsel and cheer, favoring equal ecclesiastical, political and industrial rights for men and women.

The evening of the 12th the Athens union gave a reception to visitors and delegates at the elegant home of Mrs. Wickham. The cordiality of the hostesses, the beauty of the floral decorations, the excellence of the simple refreshments served, made it a marked evening in convention memories. Mrs. Helen S. Burns, of Athens, was reëlected president of the district.

The third district held its annual convention at New London, June 15th. As no convention had been held for two years, the work presented unusual difficulties, but with help from above and the wisdom of the workers a profitable convention was held. An efficient corps of officers were elected, with Mrs. H. W. Townsend, of New London, as president.

The Temperance Hospital has long deeply interested many of our thoughtful workers, and at the last National our state president pledged Ohio to furnish a room. With her accustomed perseverance she went to work and has now raised $100 for this purpose. Many comforts and conveniences have been secured by Mrs. Monroe's thoughtful planning, in addition to this money, for furniture, such as handsome, soft morocco bound copies of the Bible, the Methodist hymnal and the Psalter, the Testament and Psalms; a dainty cushion for the dressing case, a handsome sofa pillow, a beautiful table cover, a number of handsome fancy articles, etc. All Ohio women going to Chicago will greatly enjoy visiting Ohio's room in the hospital, and mingled with their feeling of state pride will be one of warm personal gratitude to our state president for her untiring energy and successful effort.

The spring convention of the Miami county union was held at Pleasant Hill, Mrs. Louise Fee Hedges, the president, in the chair. Three ministers and several other gentlemen were present at all the meetings. At the noon hour delegates and visitors partook of an elaborate repast, prepared by the Pleasant Hill union.

After the devotional exercises of the afternoon meeting, Mrs. Shuman, of Covington, gave a parliamentary drill. The president gave an able address. Reports from unions were all encouraging. The following excellent papers were read and discussed: "The Possibilities of Personal Work," "The Training of the Young," "Social Purity," "The Diamond Cure." Mrs. Stillwell gave an encouraging report as superintendent of the Bureau of Exchange. The executive committee met at 1:45, and appointed superintendents of scientific temperance instruction, of jail, fair and press work, of the Bureau of Exchange, Sabbath observance, the Y Branch and literature, which were afterward confirmed by the convention. Mrs. S. C. Harbaugh, of Piqua, made an earnest appeal for THE UNION SIGNAL and Messenger. Excellent music was rendered by the choir throughout the convention. The session was declared by many the best county meeting ever held by the union. A beautiful tribute in the form of resolutions was paid the memory of their coworker, Mrs. Juliet B. Riley, mother of Mrs. Monroe, president of the state union.

The twenty-fourth district held its eighth annual convention in the Presbyterian church of Lockland, June 8 and 9. Sixteen of the twenty-three unions of the district were represented by delegates and three others sent reports. Every union reported steady interest, unswerving faith in future success of the cause, and earnest zeal. Work is systematically pushed in the departments of flower mission, Sabbath observance, hygiene, physical culture, jail and prison work. Six new unions have been organized during the year and the department of heredity added. Mrs. Bethel gave an interesting and instructive parliamentary drill, and also the address of the first evening, subject, "The Ballot for Woman." The latter made many friends for the cause of equal rights. Mrs. Monroe, the beloved state president, was present and gave a fine presentation of our organization in its several departments, which conveyed much information to those who knew little of our work, and to the workers comfort, joy and inspiration to go forward. Papers on Sabbath observance and equal suffrage were followed by lively discussions participated in by many delegates and two ministers. The meeting was a success as regards the women of the district and the community of Lockland.

Clinton county union met in convention at New Burlington and a profitable time was had. Miss Townsend, the president, presided. Mrs. L. C. Bethel, state parliamentarian, who had made a tour of the local unions of the county, gave an instructive parliamentary drill. Each union and each county superintendent reported encouragingly. A deeply impressive memorial service was held in memory of promoted sister workers, Mrs. Lavina Rhonemus of Reesville, and Miss Lizzie Patterson of Clarksville, county superintendent of flower mission work. An earnest friend of the cause, Jacob Green, was also remembered in the service, at which many spoke briefly. Excellent papers were read and discussed, and much business dispatched. The evening address on "The Ballot for Woman" was given by Mrs. Lillian Cole Bethel.

"Think truly, and thy thoughts
Shall the world's famine feed;
Speak truly, and each word of thine
Shall be a fruitful seed;
Live truly, and thy life shall be
A great and noble creed."

In many places in the state our president has been lecturing and organizing. New organizations and many new members are the result wherever she has been, besides the temperance seed that has been sown and will bring a rich harvest "by and by."

Flower mission day was observed in many places. Kansas City W. C. T. U. distributed over seven hundred bouquets and Scripture cards. The jail, industrial home, children's home, five hospitals, besides many private homes were remembered. At the noon meeting of the U. P. R. R. two hundred employés were delighted that they, too, were not to be forgotten. Thus many throughout the nation may be won to our ranks and finally into the fold of Christ.

Fayette maintains a free reading room which is kept open every night except Sunday and Wednesday nights. This union furnished the lunch for the banquet which was given by the Central and Howard Payne Alumni Association. This netted the union a neat little sum. Headquarters are kept as they have been for a long time, and the union keeps steadily at work. Mrs. Hannah Bond has been out endeavoring to work up the W. C. T. U. interests in her district.

The south side Y of St. Louis is only three months old yet it has a membership of thirty-one with twelve honoraries to help the work along. Their first meeting in each month is devoted to Bible study, with the superintendent of evangelistic work in charge. At their second meeting a study of the W. C. T. U. work is the topic, while the third is a parliamentary meeting and the fourth is a business meeting. If there occurs five meetings in the month the last is made interesting and attractive by a literary program. A public or social meeting is held once each month. These are well advertised and consequently well attended. The Christian Endeavor, through the influence of this union, appointed a temperance committee and thus the work goes "on and on." Much literature is distributed by these Y's girls and the superintendents are doing their work systematically.

The tenth district held their seventh district convention at Winfield and was well attended. Mrs. Hoffman gave two of her own characteristic lectures which stirred up the minds of the people as they never were before. She gave a talk on "a model W. C. T. U. meeting" before the convention, after which a lively discussion followed. An organization of ten members was perfected, this being the first temperance organization in Winfield. The old officers were reëlected and before this convention closed Mrs. Millie M. Lewis, district president, was presented with a volume of "Glimpses of Fifty Years" as a slight token of appreciation of her earnest work.

Our state superintendent of Y work, Miss Carter, visited Trenton and was very favorably received. About twenty of the local Y's met with her at the home of Mrs. Ringe and received valuable instruction along this line of work.

The fourth district has been blessed with much work and many workers. Miss Carter has lectured to large, delighted audiences in Gentry and Daviess counties. She addressed the students of the Stanberry normal school by invitation of the college president, who is an ardent friend of the W. C. T. U. Lectures with telling results by Mrs. Hoffman, two college presidents and Rev. Brumbaugh have been given, while Mrs. Sue De Haven has been making chalk-talks in various parts of the district, much to the delight of the children. The president of this district has sent out large numbers of circular letters, urging the women in the country to organize.

The Gallatin union is in a prosperous condition. It was organized by our state president not long ago. Miss Carter's lectures here were greatly enjoyed and appreciated.

Mrs. S. M. I. Henry held twelve meetings in Carthage. One lecture, before the Y. M. C. A., on Sunday afternoon, was especially uplifting. Appreciative audiences greeted her during her stay, and great good, we trust, will result. Workers throughout the nation will rejoice to know that Mrs. Henry is again able to be in the field. In this place three Demorest medal contests have been held within the past two months, one for the gold and two for the silver medals. Mrs. Hoffman delivered a lecture in the M. E. church, to a large and cultured audience. On flower-mission day a memorial service was held in honor of our departed Jennie Casseday, after which twenty-six of the workers visited the county poor farm, carrying messages from the word of God to these unfortunates. Who knoweth but that the spirit of dear Miss Casseday was hovering near on this day?

Excellent work is being done in the purity department. The Springfield industrial home has sheltered forty-seven inmates and have expended $278.59 during the year. In the fifth and twenty-second districts the presidents have held county conventions and schools of methods, while many of the districts are arranging to hold their district conventions before the coming state convention, which meets at Sedalia in September.

Miss Lillian Wood has just closed a month's engagement in the twenty-fourth district. She revived the work at Willard, Greenfield and Everton, and many places were enlightened on the work of the W. C. T. U. In all twenty six meetings were held and one hundred and seventy new members were gained, with new subscribers for the Missouri Home Guard and for THE UNION SIGNAL. Immense audiences attentively listened to her and were favorably impressed with Miss Wood and the work of the W. C. T. U. She visited many homes in the interest of the work and gave instruction to the women regarding our various departments.

State superintendent of evangelistic work, Mrs. Rebecca Hall, gave a week's Bible readings at Humansville, which were very uplifting and instructive. Her terms are so reasonable that every union in the state could afford to have her. At Bolivar a very instructive contest took place during the commencement exercises at the Baptist college. The W. C. T. U. offered a gold medal for the best original oration, they giving the contestants their subjects. Temperance was thus indelibly stamped on the minds of the contestants as well as on the minds of the large audience that listened to those excellent orations.

Humansville has been energetically at work to the end that they might not have a distillery located near their town. A remonstrance was circulated against it which was signed by over four hundred and fifty of the best citizens, and presented to the man who proposed building the distillery. The citizens then endeavored to buy the land, but as yet nothing has seemed to prove successful, and the distillery may be built.

PENNSYLVANIA CLIPPINGS.

The excessively hot weather seems to have had a dampening effect on the ardor of reporters, consequently we have not such a lengthy report to bring this month.

The following item will no doubt cheer those who are inclined to be a little faint-hearted: "There has been quite a decrease in the number of saloons this year in Blair county. Last year there were fifty-nine hotel and six brewery licenses granted. This year only thirty-nine hotel and four breweries were granted. The remonstrances gotten up by the different unions in the county had much to do with the decrease in licenses. In one place three men, stewards in a prominent church, acted as vouchers for a saloon-keeper and that license was granted. I would like to become acquainted with the pastor of that church and ask him to read the rules of the church a little more closely.

Dr. Anna Shaw has lectured in Altoona and Tyrone to large audiences, pleasing all.

Clarion county is still active. Rimersburg union has very pleasant headquarters. The two unions united in getting a box of soap thus securing the desk which was given to headquarters, making quite a nice accession. They also have the use of an organ, free.

The Temperance Alliance and Woman's Christian Temperance Union worked harmoniously together against the granting of licenses in vain but they have their reward, as one proprietor is now serving forty days in the county jail besides paying a fine of two hundred dollars for selling to minors and on election days. The sentence was as light as the judge who granted the license could make it.

Miss Blanche Hosey, one of our enterprising teachers, closed her school at Elm Grove in a way that other teachers may well imitate. She devoted her spare time to training a class for a Demorest contest which was a great success. Miss Ida Hosey, the teacher and contestants gave the proceeds to the Rimersburg union and the ladies very greatly appreciate their generous and graceful act.

Lawrence county held its semi-annual convention at Plain Grove. Mrs. Trego was present and lectured in the evening. She spent three weeks in this county, speaking twice a day, most of the time. She did good work by way of increasing the membership. New union was organized at Coal Center with sixty members. This county has also been favored with the presence of Miss Crawford, state Y organizer, and the Y's decided to take up Loyal Temperance Legion work and appointed Miss Lulu Boyles superintendent. A pleasant episode at the convention was the greeting sent by the oldest member in the county, Mrs. Martha J. Houck, which was in the form of a poem. This county rejoices in the fact that the number of licenses have been cut down two-thirds. The ladies say unanimously that the publication of the names of the signers to petitions has a telling effect in reducing the number of signatures. A library has been established in the county jail. The Demorest contest work was taken up and Mrs. Cox appointed superintendent.

Rev. Van Bennett lectured at Fredonia, Mercer county, in Institute Hall, on the subject, "Our Boys." The well-known Stevenson male quartette was present, by invitation, and sang a number of selections from the Silver Lake song book. The accompanist of the quartette is our efficient county superintendent of social purity, Mrs. J. W. Stevenson, who was formerly state superintendent of literature, and is well known to white-ribboners.

Miss Adda Burch, county superintendent of contest work, held the second grand gold contest this year at Sharon, June 16. The Greenville high school ladies' quartette furnished most excellent music, and Prof. A. C. Lindsey added to the interest of the occasion by several readings. Eight young ladies participated. The medal was awarded to Maude Kennedy, Grove City; second honor, Jennie Heasly, Sharon. Another grand gold contest is now being arranged for, as is also a gold medal contest at Jamestown, July 8. The judges at the grand gold medal contest were Professor Lindsey, Rev. W. H. Bunce and Rev. W. A. Baker.

Bucks county held its seventeenth semi-annual convention at Doylestown. The treasurer's report showed receipts of $668-.61, expenditures, $617.61. Balance fifty-one dollars. The corresponding secretary read a lengthy report of work done by the various unions. Thirty-one essays had been received by the committee in the county contest, the winners in which were as follows: Bertha Muschert, Morrisville; S. Arthur Wallen, Penn's Manor; Myra Mitchell, Langhorne. Mrs. Anna Hanmer, state president, made a fine address and in the evening a gold medal contest was held, at which nine young ladies participated. The medal was awarded to Miss Elizabeth Twinney, Yardley. Mrs. M. S. Wheeler, National evangelist, was present and gave a Bible reading.

Yardley union had Rev. Anna Shaw to lecture for them.

Makefield union held its eighth anniversary at the home of Abdon Longshore. One hundred were present. Mrs. Balderston gave a history of the W. C. T. U. Mrs. Holcomb, county president, was present and gave an interesting talk.

Crawford county held its semi-annual convention at Spartansburg. A handsome gavel was presented to the county. The gold medal contest in the evening was largely attended, Miss Farrelly, of Spartansburg, being the winner. The annual convention will be held at Atlantic, where the first grand gold contest will be held.

July 7th was W. C. T. U. day at Mount Gretna. A midsummer conference was held in the morning in charge of Mrs. Hanmer. Mrs. Helen Gougar lectured in the afternon.

Mrs. Ella M. Boole has been secured for William Grove August 31. Arrangements for the coming state convention are now being made.

Mrs. A. P. Hamilton, state superintendent of literature, is taking a brief vacation and expects to visit the World's Fair.

Miss Celia Hann won the gold medal at the contest held at Charleston June 14.

Twelve new unions have been added to our list since our last report, so "let us still be up and doing" and aim for the highest success possible.

Yours for temperance,
ADDA BURCH,
State Reporter, Greenville.

WESTERN WASHINGTON.

The president of Whatcom county, Mrs. E. C. Graves, writes that when she came to take her annual survey she could see unmistakable signs of progress.

"Through heat and cold, and shower and sun,
Still onward cheerily driving!
There's life alone in duty done,
And rest alone in striving."

As the toilers of this county look back upon the path they climbed, they find reason for rejoicing over the height reached, the strength gained by their toil, and they take fresh courage for another mount up the hill of difficulty leading to success. The atmosphere grows clearer as they ascend. The more steep the ascent the sooner is the summit reached.

They held two county conventions during the year. One in August at Lynden, the other at Whatcom, May 16 and 17. They are lengthening their cords and strengthening their stakes by adopting new departments of work and electing officers who are here to-day and will do something, for Mrs. Graves says: "If we are going to do our part in the great plan of lifting humanity heavenward we must have consecrated, valiant-hearted, do-the-best-you-can Christian women to fill the offices. "A full delegation was present at the last convention, it being the annual. Able papers were read and discussed. "Physical Culture," by Mrs. Flora Judson, was replete with practical sugges-

Sympa— Bah! A woman doesn't deserve any sympathy, when the knowing better is so easy and the doing better is so cheap. Think of inhaling the steam and odors from a tub of dirty clothing, perhaps from the sick room, perhaps much soiled from honest labor. Think of the weak lungs, and throat, the germs of disease, etc., etc. It's all so unnecessary and so ineffective. The clothes are not as clean (surely not as pure) as they ought to be, when the work is done. Boil your clothes in Pearline and water —directions on each package —every grocer has it.

A lady asked him: "How do you like babies?" He replied: "Boiled, madam." This bachelor sarcasm perhaps arose from the idea of some fond parents that fine clothes make a fine baby; they don't. It is the little fellow inside of the clothes, who has only one tooth and a spectacular smile, dimpling off at the ends of his toes. Pretty dress completes the charm—as it does with everything. tions and closed with an illustration of the two methods of training the body, the total abstaining and the stimulant methods. A picture of our chieftain, Frances E. Willard, illustrated the first, and a poor, besotted wreck of a man the second method. Mrs. J. W. Hilton read a very able paper on suffrage. A score of years ago such a paper read before a W. C. T. U. convention in the East would have had the effect of a bombshell. They have adopted the suffrage department in county work with Mrs. Hilton as superintendent. "The Necessity of a Keen Edge," a paper on narcotics, by Mrs. H. F. Brid, was excellent, giving evidence of thought and research. It was voted to have it published. Aside from routine work each union has done some one thing that stands prominent.

NOTES.

Blaine union has only eight active members, keeps a column in one of their papers filled with temperance matter, including the World's Petition. One of the members adopted a motherless babe, and another found a home for a motherless girl in one of the best families of the city, thus saving her from the snares set for the youth of to-day.

The members of Fairhaven union are on the lookout for women who are strangers in the city and in search of employment. They have felt repaid for the effort by the mutual satisfaction of employer and employé.

The Bay union holds joint meetings once a month alternating with the unions in order of location. The subject of each meeting is given at the previous one, giving the members a month's time to prepare for it. Several departments of work have been taken up for instruction and discussion as to best methods of prosecuting the same.

Lynden union is the only union in the county that has been so fortunate as to re- n an L. T. L. Each locality has an abundance of material, but no one will take the responsibility of teaching. Flora E. Judson, press superintendent, in order to get space in the Lynden paper for temperance items, has learned to set type, and does not fail to have her allotted space filled each week. The union offered a prize to the person who would write the best temperance story, founded on facts and containing a certain number of words. Each story was published in the temperance column.

Whatcom union, through its superintendent of social purity, Mrs. Garrettson, wife of a Presbyterian missionary, who has removed with her husband to Ellensburg, was instrumental in closing a very pernicious Sunday beer garden and public dance, held within the corporate limits of the city.

Sehome union presented a petition to mayor and council, asking for the enforcement of gambling laws. They readily closed the petty gambling in fruit stands, but the old offenders were allowed to proceed by paying an occasional fine. Good work has been done by the energetic superintendent of work among lumbermen in sending out literature to lumber camps. From one camp came hearty thanks for literature, and that the efforts to instruct and entertain them had been appreciated. At another camp word was returned that the men had not visited the saloon for a week, as they had been entertained by the good reading sent them, and were very grateful. Sehome union has sent out literature to the amount of twenty-five dollars. Good reading matter has also been distributed in the mills of Whatcom.

Sumas union under the invincible leadership of their president, Mrs. J. L. Fry, has, under the most adverse circumstances, kept their union alive and active, laughed at impossibilities and to-day can boast of a home owned conjointly with the I. O. G. T., and can say they owe no debt except one of gratitude to our Heavenly Father. They are doing all they can to educate their citizens to the plane where they will not think a saloon is a necessity in a community to make business lively. Mrs. Bowen has her home at Sumas, and has been very helpful to them in their work. The presence and helpful words of several pastors of churches at the convention, cheered those who had borne the heat and burden of the warfare. Mrs. Beaver and Mrs. Bowen received thanks for their timely help. Mrs. Bowen conducted a very impressive memorial service for our promoted leaders, Mary Allen West and Jennie Casseday.

NORTH DAKOTA.

LOCAL UNIONS AWAKE.

Cooperstown union lives and moves. Occasional union temperance meetings are held in which the ministers give hearty assistance. The permit has been taken away from one drug store which was defying the law. The Y's are active and growing.

Casselton W's held their semi-monthly meetings without interruption. They also observe all red-letter and other special days. They have distributed 10,000 leaflets in favor of the prohibition law. A word contest social recently held brought in $13 to the treasury. For persistent, steady-giving effort the Casselton union is in the front rank.

Under the leadership of Miss Maud Meloy of Sanborn Y's, there has been instituted contest work in the public schools of Barnes county which will be sure to bring good results. Pupils under fifteen years of age are allowed to write on "The Physical, Mental and Moral Effects of Narcotics." The essays are adjudged and the best one from each school sent to an examining committee—who award to the best essayist a book and to the school he or she represents a banner given by the Barnes county W. C. T. U.

Grafton W's are as usual up and doing, a recent musical and literary entertainment netting financially about eighteen dollars and resulting in a great many signers to the World's Petition.

The L. T. L., under their direction numbers about eighty and is very enthusiastic and profitable. Edgeley union held a recitation contest. First prize, a gold piece, was won by Miss Jessie Britton, the second, a gold pen by Miss Anna Smith, and Miss Clara Pierce won an Oxford Testament as third. Temperance songs and addresses and a generous collection encouraged the W's to feel that the evening had been profitably spent.

Do not think because there have been no reports in THE UNION SIGNAL that it is because the unions are not at work and the women in North Dakota praying, laboring and hoping. They are all alive and active, we are sure, but they do not send THE SIGNAL reporter any news, and she cannot tell what she does not hear. County conventions are now being held, and doubtless North Dakota will be more fully heard from.

We all are filled with sorrow for the burdens our president has been called to bear—the affliction to herself of an eye trouble, that is, however, much bettered; the severe illness of her mother, and the destruction of her father's place of business by the recent fire in Fargo. She bears up with calm patience, saying, "The Lord will show her the way and His will."

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL NOTES.

Among the many friends from abroad that have visited the hospital the past week were Miss Sturgess, of Mansfield, Ohio, and Mrs. Eliza Doolittle, of Great Bend, Penn.

Mrs. J. E. Cleaves, late of Helena, Montana, has been secured as superintendent of the training school for nurses. Mrs. Cleaves comes thoroughly prepared for her work, having had much experience in hospitals and training schools, and understands the "things we need" in our work. Her instruction to the nurses will be thorough.

Dr. Estelle Paulline, who has been the house physician at the hospital the past two months, leaves to take a similar position in one of the hospitals at Springfield, Ill. Dr. Paulline has been faithful and earnest in her work while with us, and many regrets have been expressed by physicians, patients and nurses at her departure. A prior engagement prevented her remaining with us for a longer time.

Through the influence of Dr. Sarah Hackett Stevenson, Dr. Frank Morrell, a graduate of the Woman's Medical College in the class of 1891, has been secured as house physician for the coming year. As we say goodbye to Dr. Paulline we welcome Dr. Morrell.

The hospital is growing and now comes the question of how to arrange for a diet kitchen. This is one of the necessary departments of a hospital, as every nurse should understand how to prepare food for patients. The way for opening such a kitchen does not appear clear just now, but we feel sure it will when the need has become more fully understood. The nurse should understand the preparation of dietary foods as much as the bandaging a broken limb.

Dr. Bayard Holmes has had a very serious case of laparotomy at the hospital this week. At present writing the patient is doing well. Dr. Sandberg also has had a case of laparotomy—ovarian hematoma and pyosalynx.

Any one desiring cans and jelly glasses to fill can get the same by applying to Mrs. Hornby.

The following was received by the matron during the month of August, 1892. All money received is given to the treasurer, and appears in her report.

Dalton City, Ill., W. C. T. U., 1 doz. spring chickens; Mrs. Dubridge, Morrison, Ill., 2 table cloths, 5 towels; Cherokee, Kan., W. C. T. U., 5 sheets, 16 towels, 4 pair pillow cases; Mrs. Wm. Burden, Evanston, Ill., cut flowers; Unknown, 6 glasses jelly, ½ bu. dried fruit, 6 cans fruit, old cotton; Unknown, box cut flowers; Unknown, old linen, cotton and papers; Sharon, Wis., W. C. T. U., cut flowers; Woodstock, Ill., W's, cut flowers; Hennepin, Ill., W. C. T. U., 8 cans fruit, 18 glasses jelly, 2 towels, old linen and cotton; Camden, Del., L. T. L's, 1 child's quilt; Hisco, Ill., W's, 19 qts. fruit, 16 glasses jelly, 1 pk. apples, old clothing and papers, 1 pair slippers, 1 pin cushion; Unknown, 12 cans fruit, 12 glasses jelly, 4 cans pickles, old linen and cotton; Chebbone, Ill., W's, 1 blanket, 1 bedspread, 2 doz. towels, 1 doz. napkins, 2 doz. wash cloths, 5 lbs. cotton batting, 1 pair sheets, 1 pair cases, 3 chemise, 1 gown, 1 wrapper, 2 child's dresses, old linen and cotton; unknown, 12 glasses jelly, old cotton; Healy, Ill., W's, 3 boxes and 2 baskets cut flowers; Dundee, Ill., 6 glasses jelly, old cotton.

A CANADIAN LEADER.

DEAR WHITE-RIBBONERS:—Our beloved Mrs. Letitia Youmans, of Canada, pioneer and leader of our white-ribbon forces in that country, was, as you know, smitten by inflammatory rheumatism five years ago next August. From that time she has been totally unable to do anything whatever for her own support, and by the advice and invitation of the W. C. T. U. of the province of Ontario, she has dictated to friends, who have written out, the story of her life and work, also the remarkable lectures, entitled, "Haman's License" and "Nehemiah Building the Walls," which she had delivered to immense audiences throughout the United States and Canada. This book is the record of eighteen years of one of the most efficient temperance advocates of the century, and full of suggestions for those who are now in the field. The price of the book is one dollar, and postal money orders should be sent to Mrs. Youmans, 19 Metcalf street, Toronto, Canada.

It is my earnest hope that many will send for the book, not only on account of its value to themselves, but because its sale is the only dependence of the author to meet current needs and to accumulate a fund for her advancing years. We know full well that those engaged in the liquor traffic stand by each other, and surely we, who profess a higher code of ethics and religion, must not fail each other in time of need; therefore, I make this earnest appeal, confident that it will not fail to arouse the kind sympathy and friendly action of my comrades in the holy war. FRANCES E. WILLARD.

London, July 26, 1893.

THE LAST APPEAL.

Although I have several times called attention through THE UNION SIGNAL to Miss Gordon's plans for the Columbian Exposition, and have been, for the past two years, constantly pressing their claims by circular letters and by word of mouth, yet I feel constrained, in view of existing circumstances, to make one more plea for the Willard fountain. The response to the call for autograph cards left little to be desired. The response to the call for articles for the sale table was very far short of what it should have been. I offer special congratulations to those superintendents who did not fail to use this unique opportunity for cultivating in the children the foreign missionary spirit. Although the time for sending in cards and salable articles has passed, there still remain several weeks of opportunity to work for the fountain. Many have done grandly, but there is need that we all do yet more. In order that Miss Gordon may be relieved of all financial burden, we must have placed in her hands by September 1, the entire cost of the fountain. Wherever the plan of securing the medal by collecting a dollar is presented to the children, they seem eager to try. This will make good vacation work, and the leaders should see that all children desiring them are provided with the necessary blanks which can be procured free of charge by addressing Miss Anna A. Gordon, Evanston, Illinois. Will not each leader not only thus set her children at work, but be herself responsible for at least one dollar, which she may secure from adult friends? Please note in May Advance Guard the program specially prepared for entertainments for the benefit of the fountain. Realizing what a blessing this fountain is to be through the years to the thirsty multitude, and what a benediction to the children will be the thought that they were the donors, shall we not do our utmost? Yours for all earnest endeavor,

HELEN G. RICE,

theory of a "mind cure." He inveighed against Pope's putting of the stoic doctrine that "whatever is is right"; he insisted on the existence of evil, and declared that pain and sorrow knock more loudly at our doors than pleasure and happiness. He spoke severely of the optimists, and is evidently more inclined to the pessimistic view. He does not think that the theory of the survival of the fittest has a place in the realm of ethics. That which is fittest to its environment may be in an environment which is in itself not fit to be, but the influence of the cosmic process on the evolution of society, is the greatest in the proportion that society is itself in its infancy. Social progress means the checking of the cosmic process at every step and the substitution for it of another which may be called the ethical process, the end of which is not the survival of those who may happen to be the fittest in respect to the whole of the conditions which exist, but of those who ethically are best. Evolution in the material world is therefore opposed to ethics, and Prof. Huxley declared with many ingenious illustrations that the ethical progress of society depends, not on impeding the cosmic process of evolution, still less in running away from it, but in combating it. It seems an audacious proposal thus to put a microcosm against the macrocosm and to set man to subdue nature to his higher ends; but experience teaches that such an enterprise may meet with a certain measure of success.

He said in closing, "I see no limit of the extent to which intelligence and skill may modify the conditions of existence, and much may be done to change the nature of man himself; the intelligence which has converted the wolf into the faithful guardian of the flock ought to be able to do something toward curbing the instincts of savagery in civilized men. So far we all strive in one faith toward one hope.

"It may be that the gulf shall wash us down;
It may be we shall touch the Happy Isles."

Professor Huxley had the good sense to make no allusion to Christianity, to which he is supposed to be opposed, but to draw his illustrations and analogies from the Oriental from the Brahmin, the Buddhist and the Greek. His tone, though sad, had in it an under note of hopefulness beyond what most utterances of his had led us to expect. His theme involved natural religion and he is becoming, to say the least, an agnostic; for it is true of sincere men that as the head bends toward the earth with its freightage of years the eye is lifted in the search for "Happy Isles."

PETITION OF THE WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION FOR THE PROTECTION OF THE HOME.

Addressed to the Governments of the World.

Honored Rulers, Representatives and Brothers:

We, your Petitioners, although belonging to the physically weaker sex, are strong of heart to love our homes, our native land, and the world's family of nations.

We know that clear brains and pure hearts make honest lives and happy homes, and that by these the nations prosper, and the time is brought nearer when the world shall be at peace.

We know that indulgence in Alcohol and Opium, and in other vices which disgrace our social life, makes misery for all the world, and most of all for us and for our children.

We know that stimulants and opiates are sold under legal guarantees which make the Governments partners in the traffic, by accepting as revenue a portion of the profits, and we know with shame that they are often forced by treaty upon populations, either ignorant or unwilling.

We know that the law might do much, now left undone, to raise the moral tone of society and render vice difficult.

We have no power to prevent these great iniquities beneath which the whole world groans, but you have power to redeem the honor of the nations from an indefensible complicity.

We therefore come to you with the united voices of representative women of every land, beseeching you to raise the standard of the law to that of Christian morals, to strip away the safeguards and sanctions of the state from the drink traffic and the opium trade, and to protect our homes by the total prohibition of these curses of civilization throughout all the territory over which your Government extends.

NAMES. | RESIDENCES.

Will not everybody who loves the great cause of home protection, send to Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, Ravenna, O., for the regular form, and circulate it to the best of her ability, mailing the names to Miss Alice E. Briggs, Evanston, Ill.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

And, behold, men brought in a bed a man which was taken with a palsy; and they sought means to bring him in, and to lay him before him. And when he saw their faith, he said unto him, Man, thy sins are forgiven thee.—Luke 5:18, 20.

The following from the pen of one of our ablest National organizers, Mrs. Lucy H. Washington, Port Jervis, N. Y., is so helpful for unions desirous of a partnership in the Temple, that we are glad to give it space in this column: "'What do you think of the Temple?' I was recently asked by a W. C. T. U. woman. 'In what respect?' I asked. 'Will it prove a success?' 'Success! it has proved a success, and stands in magnificent proportions in testimony thereof.' 'But will it ever be actually owned by the W. C. T. U.?' 'It is owned by her (W. C. T. U.) now by all the rights of maternity. It was conceived by her spirit and is the materialization of her hope, trust and faith. It will be owned by her legally and financially when she shall have paid for the tenement, the body in which this spirit having national life dwells, and that depends upon us, her members.' The above conversation occurred on a train when in response to a telegram I was on my way to Pine Bush, as I supposed for an evening address. Upon arriving I was greeted in this manner: 'We are so glad you could come. We have our Temple meeting to-night. We have a program arranged with music, recitations and dialogues, and we want you to speak for the Temple. Afterwards we will open the mite-boxes and count our money; supper is to be served at twenty-five cents, and from the mite-boxes and the supper we expect to realize $100.' This was a village union, one noted for doing things. A pleasant residence was thronged, children, youth and adults had a part in a very entertaining program. A framed picture of the Temple served as an object lesson, giving foundation and points for a Temple talk. It was delightful to see the expression of satisfaction beaming upon the faces of the children as they gazed upon the picture of the Temple which their gathered pennies were helping to make a success. Pastors of all the churches in the vicinity were present and gave words of approval and encouragement. Sentiment for the Temple and all it represents was at a premium, and funds for it materializing the sentiment aggregated $100. Temple success meetings everywhere. Why not?"

The following resolution was passed at the late convention of the Hennepin county, Minn., W. C. T. U.: "That we pledge our sympathy and coöperation to Mrs. Carse in her Temple work and express our confidence in her integrity and financial management, and show our sympathy by pledging one hundred dollars for the Temple."

Mrs. Bradish, the chairman of the resolution committee writes: "The resolution passed unanimously and with great enthusiasm, most of the hundred dollars being pledged on the spot."

I have lately received scores of resolutions of sympathy and confidence from state, county and local unions, and they have greatly comforted and strengthened me, but if they had contained a clause like the last one in the above resolution my joy would have been full.

We are glad to announce that the New Alexandria, Pa., W. C. T. U. has completed its $100 pledge. A white-ribboner from Pennsylvania visiting the Temple brought the cheering news that Scotdale W. C. T. U. and Westmoreland county, Pa., W. C. T. U. were each at work raising $100.

A two-cent stamp sent to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the Temple, Chicago, will secure a mite-box. Remember, any one placing in the box $2.50 from May 1, 1893, to May 1, 1894, will receive the lovely Columbian souvenir made of aluminum, with a cut of the Temple on one side and on the reverse the face of Miss Willard and the founder of the Temple, with suitable inscriptions. All money orders should be made out in the name of the treasurer, William D. Preston, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara Johnson, the Temple, Chicago, Ill.

Our Library Table.

LETTERS TO DOROTHY, by Edith E. Metcalf, is a little gem of testimony concerning practical Christian work. The booklet contains actual letters from "Edith" to "Dorothy," written in Moody's Bible Institute, Chicago, the writer being a student in the institute. Before entering there she was an art student. In reference to the study of the Bible she says in one letter: "Indeed, all I found in all the books, when at one time the intellectual nature called for nutriment and I read fiercely in a reference library, I find again, or the root of it, in this one Book. 'Of making many books there is no end,' but the Maker of this Book put all in one. Of reading many, I for the time have made an end. Oh, the simplicity of it—the one Book and all in it! My little shrivelled soul expands. It had hungered long for its own food. I wonder why our girls, who wish to be systematically educated and take college courses to develop the brain, training in Delsarte for the physical, and perhaps special lessons to strengthen some native talent, should plan so little for the systematic education of the soul-powers."

Fleming H. Revell Company, Chicago, publishers.

THE VITAL QUESTION OF TO-DAY, a talk to mothers and teachers by Miss Frances Tomlinson, Council Bluffs, Iowa. Its theme is motherhood and the rights of children. Written out of a child-loving heart and out of wisdom gathered in the school-room as a teacher of children, it contains theories not vague but charged with life.

JULY MAGAZINES.

THE PANSY for July develops many strong points in its two leading serials by Mrs. G. R. Alden (Pansy) and Margaret Sidney, the latter being Columbian year sketches. Shorter stories and articles likewise set forth the purpose of this standard publication, which is to furnish the best reading to be had for the young folks and the family. The "American Literature Paper" concerns itself this month with the poets John Greenleaf Whittier and Oliver Wendell Holmes—names that will touch a responsive chord in the heart of every reader.

D. Lothrop Company, publishers, Boston.

The first thing that confronts the reader of McCLURE'S MAGAZINE for July is the latest portrait of the ever young and ever charming autocrat, Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes. On the next page one begins an afternoon with Oliver Wendell Holmes in the company of Edward Everett Hale. Such an afternoon! It isn't every day that it is our privilege to listen to the conversation of two such masters of wit, wisdom and eloquence. The article is beautifully illustrated, with drawings of Dr. Holmes' birthplace in Cambridge; the house where he studied medicine in Paris; his Beacon street residence in Boston; his summer place at Beverly Farms; Dr. Holmes occupying his favorite seat at Beverly; a bay window in the poet's study, overlooking the Charles river; "Dorothy Q's" house in Quincy, Mass.; and a fine portrait of the irresistible "Dorothy Q" herself. Thousands will be glad to see a portrait of this famous gentlewoman of the last century. The article is packed with illustrations, one of the best of which is that of Dr. Hale and Dr. Holmes in the latter's study. Also there is one of the best—if not the very best—Ballads of the Sea that Rudyard Kipling ever wrote. It is a poem that insists upon being read again and again. Its refrain is as haunting and thought-compelling as the refrain of Mr. Kipling's other metrical masterpiece, "Danny Deever."

S. S. McClure, Limited, publisher, 743 Broadway, New York City.

The CALIFORNIAN ILLUSTRATED for July appears in a cover artistically decorated with California poppies, whose "satin vesture richer is than looms of Orient weave for raiment of her kings." This is the floral emblem of the state and has also been adopted as the flower of the California Y. W. C. T. U. It cannot be denied that the "Golden State" owes a large vote of thanks to the editor of the CALIFORNIAN, Charles Frederick Holder, for the rare exposition given monthly by strong articles and fine illustrations to her best products, whether they be natural or cultivated or the inanimate creations of man. Laura Bride Powers has an article of historical value in this number, entitled "The Missions of California," and John R. Grayson writes with unusual interest upon "The Farmer in California," while "The Californian Montadura," by M. C. Frederick, will attract those who are interested in horses and horsemanship. The poems in this issue contributed by Ina D. Coolbrith, Genevieve L. Brown, Joaquin Miller, John Vance Cheney and H. Van Allen Ferguson, are without exception, poems of unusual merit.

Sterilizing Baby's Milk?
How many mothers there are who would use a Sterilizer if they but understood its utility.
"It is probably not too much to say," writes Walter Mendelson, M. D., of New York, in Babyhood, "that the process known as Sterilizing milk has done more towards lessening infant mortality and illness than any other invention of the past fifty years. It is simple and inexpensive; anyone can use it."

Publisher's Notes.

WHAT MEANS THIS STONE?

A most beautiful booklet with cover having these words entwined with delicately tinted apple-blossoms, has just been issued.

The illustrations of the poem written by Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap on the laying of the corner-stone of the Temple, which were designed by Stella B. Robens and Mary R. Bennett, and printed at the Fine Art Works in Germany lend an added beauty to the words, bringing out more vividly the prophetic vision expressed in the lines,

"We give thee to thy mission sweet,
With lavish wealth of love complete,
Nor count the sum.
Who knows but on the altar place
May shine the glory of His face
When Jesus comes!"

Visitors will find it very desirable to take home as a souvenir of the Temple. Mailed to any address, nicely boxed, for 60c.

MRS. HELEN CAMPBELL'S LATEST STORY,

"SOME PASSAGES IN THE PRACTICE OF DR. MARTHA SCARBOROUGH," like all of this author's writings, is written with a purpose. It is a story which teaches plain common sense in food and daily living as of greater value in the preservation of health and the prolongation of life, than the use of drugs and medicines. Mrs. Campbell, although she has an earnest purpose in this book, has produced no dry, didactic essay, but a story full of juice, and which, apart from the lesson it teaches, is attractive and interesting. "WHAT SHALL WE DO FOR OUR LITTLE SISTERS?"—Bible.

Help them out of their lives of shame. How? By purchasing a copy of Mr. Charles A. Crittenton's charming booklet, especially describing the Holy Land. It also contains a sketch of Florence Crittenton Missions by Charlton Edholm, superintendent of press of the World's W. C. T. U.

Around the World with Jesus,

As is well known by white-ribboners, Mr. Crittenton, the famous evangelist, already largely supports eight Florence Crittenton Missions for the rescue of erring girls, and at the Denver Convention pledged $5,000 to the W. C. T. U. for founding five more missions under their auspices. These are now being established, and every cent realized from the sale of "AROUND THE WORLD WITH JESUS" will be given to the Florence Crittenton Missions, and every one whose heart throbs for our erring girls may aid the grand work for their redemption by circulating this little souvenir. It contains beautiful pictures of Mr. Crittenton, Miss Willard, Lady Henry Somerset and Mother Prindle, Matron of New York Mission, all white-ribboners, and it cannot fail to interest all. Price only 35 cents. Send orders to Signal Notes.

A Chinese Christian Endeavor Society has been organized in Chicago.

John B. Gough was the nearest approach to a Puritan theatre, says C. D. Warner.

Ninety million dollars are paid annually to the employes of the United States government.

Signing with the cross was first used by Christians to distinguish themselves from the Pagans.

Almost the sole hereditary trade in the United States is said to be that of the deep-water pilot.

In Australia, the Salvation Army turned thirty-four thousand dollars into the treasury as the result of Self-denial Week.

The number of persons placed under restraint because of alcoholic insanity in France has increased twenty-five per cent in the past three years.

Of the one thousand nine hundred and sixty-one quarterly reviews now published in the United Kingdom, four hundred and fifty-six are of a religious nature.

There are three hundred and eleven thousand blind persons in Europe, seventy-five per cent of whom would have kept their sight if properly treated, says an expert.

A unique idea is that of the Boston Y. M. C. A. which provides lists of clergymen who remain in the city during the summer, for the use of families or persons who need the services of a clergyman.

There is an overplus of more than five thousand men in the church membership of Japan. A better day is dawning for Japanese women, for six women's Bible training classes now exist, with a membership of one hundred and eighty-three.

Johnstown, Pa., which was so recently swept away by floods, has a larger population to-day and a wealth of buildings such as it never had before. Several wards of the city that were occupied by saloons are now without any and temperance sentiment is increasing constantly.

A contrast is that of two churches—in one the pastor is paid three thousand five hundred dollars salary and the amount given to missions is one hundred and thirty-two dollars, while in the other the pastor receives seven hundred dollars and the mission fund five hundred. How hardly shall they that have riches inherit the kingdom.

"We do know that we may receive purification from one another, that the tenderness and love and patience of one man act in a marvelous way upon another. We do not set ourselves deliberately to follow examples. The example gets the mastery over us; there is life in the men who exhibit them which awakens life in us."—F. D. Maurice.

The church missionaries connected with Christ Church, London, have tickets given them to distribute among the mothers in the vicinity. These read: "By presenting this ticket to the ladies in charge at Lower Hawkstone Hall at 6:15 on any Sunday evening, your baby or child up to three years old will be taken care of, so that you may attend service with your husband." Practical Christianity, that.

The pariahs of India constitute one tenth of the entire population. Their condition is pitiable, but a few months ago the government began to make some improvements in the educational line. Many of the school inspectors are Brahmins and Hindus, who consider it pollution to enter a pariah village, and they throw impediments in the way of the missionaries and private efforts to educate them. Special day and night schools are to be opened for them.

It is a curious and pathetic fact that in the village of Leatherhead, twenty miles from London, John Wesley (when nearly eighty-eight years old) preached his last sermon, riding in a hackney coach over rough roads, and finding less than twenty people assembled to hear him. More than one hundred years have passed, and there has not been a Methodist church in that village; during the long interval Leatherhead has slept on among the Surrey hills undisturbed and unblessed by the forces which have been educating and saving rural England. London Methodists have earnestly become aroused, and they are now building a church as a memorial of John Wesley in this strange, apathetic community.

Crying Babies.

Some people do not love them. They should use the Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk, a perfect infant food. A million American babies have been raised to man and womanhood on the Eagle brand. Grocers and Druggists.

A WORD TO THE WISE.
CERTAIN ADVERTISEMENTS FROM TRADE RIVALS,
who fear the phenomenal success of
Van Houten's Cocoa
in America, contain innuendoes against it, and appeal to the authority of Dr. SYDNEY RINGER, Professor of Medicine at University College, London. Author of the Standard "Handbook of Therapeutics."
This eminent physician ACTUALLY writes as follows:—
"From the careful analyses of Professor Attfield and others, I am satisfied that Messrs. Van Houten's Cocoa is in no way injurious to health, and that it is decidedly more nutritious than other Cocoas.—It is certainly "Pure" and highly digestible.
The quotations in certain advertisements from my book on Therapeutics are quite misleading and cannot possibly apply to Van Houten's Cocoa."
The false reflection on Van Houten's Cocoa is thus effectually repelled and the very authority cited to injure it, has thereby been prompted to give it a very handsome testimonial.

CALIFORNIA.

The fame of the climate of California draws to that charming state new friends every year, particularly from sections where long, severe winters, followed by trying spring seasons, work such disastrous results among the weak and debilitated.

The great improvements in passenger train service, higher degrees of comfort in the cars, and shorter time required on the trip, combined with the cheapness of the excursion tickets now being sold to California and back by the Santa Fé Route make the journey agreeable and, one can almost say, economical. The many delightful resorts now established in California afford every comfort and luxury desired by the fastidious, and present unique attractions.

The Hotel del Coronado at San Diego, the Raymond at Pasadena, the Redondo at Redondo Beach and the hotels at Santa Barbara, Monterey, Riverside, Los Angeles and many other points, have grown as famous as any on the Atlantic Coast—and a fact that should not be forgotten is that they are resorts all the year around, although the greatest number of people from the East are in California between the months of November and May.

Write to John J. Byrne, Asst. Passenger Traffic Manager, 723 Monadnock Block, Chicago, Ill., if you are interested in California, and he will send you some reading matter.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Hot weather and electrical rain storms have been the order of the week.

The Viking ship, manned by Norsemen, was tendered a warm reception at the World's Fair last week.

A majority of sixteen out of three hundred and eighty-six votes carried the army bill through the German Reichstag.

Revolutionists in Brazil, with whom that government is coping, have crippled the South American trade with other countries.

Investigation by a coroner's jury of the Jackson Park, Chicago, fire was begun Friday. A large fund has been raised for the sufferers.

The third annual convention of the Baptist Young People's Union met at Indianapolis, July 13 to 16, three thousand delegates in attendance.

July 14, the anniversary of the storming of the Bastile, was celebrated in France, and by French residents in America, with the usual ceremonies.

Trouble between the French and Siamese has been precipitated by the firing of shots from French men of war, on the Paknam forts near Bangkok.

The Youths' Congress, consisting of representative young people of highest standing in schools and colleges, commenced at Memorial Art Palace, Chicago, last Monday.

It is reported from Rome that one hundred and twenty out of the four hundred and twenty members of the Italian senate are implicated in the recent bank scandals.

The Home-rule Bill is being hurried through the British House of Commons committee by the government to hasten its presentation to the House of Lords, where its defeat is prophesied.

Circulars have just been received in this country, announcing the international exhibition to be held in Antwerp, Belgium, from May to November of next year, under royal patronage.

By order of the council of administration people will no longer be permitted to go upon the roofs of the World's Fair buildings, and a trained force of athletes, a Pompier rescue corps, will be established.

The comet, which has been holding the attention of astronomers recently, suddenly developed a long tail of luminous light, July 15, which was taken by many for a brilliant display of aurora borealis.

Colorado's silver convention closed at Denver last week, its sentiment being unanimously in favor of bimetallism. Utah silver men gathered at Salt Lake City and sent an appeal to Congress for the repeal of the Sherman silver law and the substitution of one restoring to silver its former value.

The eighth annual meeting of religious workers among deaf mutes was held at Chicago last week, also the third annual convention of the American Association to promote the teaching of speech to the deaf, of which Dr. A. Graham Bell, of telephone fame, is president.

THE grandmother of Mrs. Claxton, the distinguished Englishwoman who was a member of the Woman's Congresses, was an intimate friend of Susannah Wesley. The Claxtons cherish among their heirlooms beautiful laces and china and pearls once owned by this venerated founder of Methodism—she had as much to do with it as anybody! At City Roads Chapel meeting, some months ago, Mrs. Claxton presented Miss Willard with some of Mrs. Wesley's laces and a cup. When Miss Willard received these she kissed them, as any reverent woman would have done, and will place them among the treasures of our Temple when she returns in October, for the inspection of all the 'saints.'"

MUCH to her disappointment as well as ours, Mrs. Ingalls is again unable, because of sickness in her family, to write the Responsive Reading on opium. She promises it at the earliest opportunity. Its place will be supplied in August by one on the World's temperance congresses, as reported by Mrs. Charlton Edholm, superintendent of press work for the World's W. C. T. U.

FRIENDS of the progress of women should bestir themselves in view of the fact that the Japanese government is now closing the schools it had established for the higher education of girls. Missionaries think this is largely due to the fact that polygamy is sanctioned by the government, which fears that if the Japanese women become at all educated and emancipated they will rebel against a custom so degrading to themselves and their children.

THE Women's Christian Associations of Philadelphia are the authors of a bit of applied Christianity in the shape of a cardboard folder entitled "Traveler's Directory of Women's Christian Associations," containing the addresses of seventy-three W. C. A. headquarters, indicating which of these are boarding homes. These addresses cover the principal cities of the states and Canada, with those of London, Liverpool and Paris. These folders—and they only cost at the rate of one dollar per hundred—may be the means of making many an otherwise difficult, or even heart-breaking journey, brighter and safer, because of the definite knowledge of a Christian roof under which rest and refreshment may be had. Other Christian organizations please take note!

"I HAVE just rounded my one hundred thousandth mile of travel," proudly (and justly so) exclaimed our "second round-the-world missionary," Miss Jessie A. Ackermann, in THE UNION SIGNAL office last Friday morning. Five years ago next November, in our old quarters at 161 La Salle St., she bade good-by to the three editors of THE UNION SIGNAL, preparatory to her long world journey; she returns to find a beautiful Temple, but misses the faces of the two senior editors, Miss West and Miss Ames, and feels that the five years have brought as many experiences to us in the home land as to her in the Orient. Without knowing her plans in full, we regard it safe to state that she will remain in the locality of Chicago until after the World's W. C. T. U. convention in October.

KNOWING that the latest news from Miss Willard is ever welcomed by the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL we gladly share with them a portion of her last letter: "This is the Fourth of July. It is being spent in great quietness by me in Lady Henry's country home, while she is in London for the day. I confess there has never been a Fourth of July in which my patriotic elation has been so tempered as to-day by a feeling of shame that in the mighty Exposition in the city of which I am so fond and proud, two things have conspired to tarnish, as it seems to me, our national honor. First, that we should have accepted from Congress a grant of money on condition that the Fair was to be closed on Sunday and then should have deliberately set at work to open it for purposes of gain; second, that in defiance of the local ordinance against the sale of intoxicating drink and the state law against such sale on fair and exposition grounds we have licensed it to a practically unlimited degree for purposes of gain. The almighty dollar never cast a heavier shadow on the republic than to-day, and the threatening financial aspect of affairs is a significant commentary on the corporate lawlessness and individual greed that have led to speculations of which no patriot can think without the deepest disappointment. We leave to-morrow for Switzerland, hoping that three months of 'upper air' and immunity from public duties may fit us for the battle once more."

THE tenth annual report of the Children's Home Society of Chicago is full of good things to rejoice the hearts of those who are concerned for hapless little ones, homeless and friendless through no fault of their own. Over three hundred of these have been placed in homes during the past year. The society has a record of two thousand nine hundred and ninety homes for children in ten years. Supposing less than half of these are retained in the homes and grow up to be good citizens, what a dread "might have been" on the side of sin and sorrow has been blessedly changed to positive good!

THE program at Willard Hall during the past week was a particularly fine one. Among the speakers was A. G. Wolfenbarger, of Nebraska, who gave a rousing address upon the never threadbare theme, "What are we going to do with the Liquor Traffic?" calling into use a startling array of statistics, against which arguments must be silent. Rev. John McNeill, who is associated with Rev. D. L. Moody and a grand body of Christian workers in evangelistic work in this city, spoke on the practical subject of true helpfulness—arraigning in stern, yet kindly terms, the spiritual selfishness that is content to sit and be "fed and fed and fed" Sabbath after Sabbath without one effort to pass on to others a single crumb of the Bread of Life. Dr. Anna Shaw, whose name is familiar to our readers, delivered a plea for Woman's Suffrage, employing keen, bright weapons of wit and satire, to the amusement and to the conviction of her hearers. On Saturday, as a crown to the labor of the week, Robert J. Burdette, "poet, preacher and philanthropist," addressed a large audience in his own inimitable fashion. Most forcefully he showed from the Word that not only are evil things doomed, because, according to the law of God, every tree bringing forth evil fruit is hewn down and cast into the fire, but every tree that is fruitless shall likewise be removed from its place. The saloon has within itself the law of inevitable destruction, because it is only evil, but that men and women may not fall under the punishment awarded to the barren fig tree, they must resist it and fight it to the death.

CHICAGO'S best citizens as well as those of the entire country are rejoicing. The great Columbian Exposition is to have closed gates on Sunday for the rest of the season! This was decided by a vote of the Directors on July 14. Sunday, the 16th, was made an exception, because it had already been voted "Heroes' Day," a practical memorial to the fourteen brave firemen who perished in the terrible fire on the grounds July 10, and whose families receive the entire gate receipts of that day, about twenty-five thousand dollars. Without this commendable appropriation (which we wish might have been on a week day) as a special attraction, it is doubtful if more than a handful of people would have attended, as the "Sunday Fair" has grown steadily unpopular from the first. Hereafter a majority of the sixteen thousand workmen employed on the grounds will have their rightful day of rest, which they sadly need, as their continuous exertions have left them in an exhausted state. The secular press does not need to urge the religious press and pulpit to make good their promises to speak a good word for this matchless Exposition. All supporters of the American Sabbath will feel the keenest responsibility now to uphold this last and wisest act of the Directors, and not waste effort in expatiating on their previous mistakes. Chicago has made abundant preparations to entertain the world this summer. The Fair is now entirely completed. Railroads are reducing rates. Let every one who can possibly afford it begin to plan at once to attend this greatest of all educational exhibits and not only lay up in their memory house a choice stock for future years, but help to demonstrate the strength of Christian sentiment in this God-fearing country, by doubling and trebling the gate receipts.

THEODORA.*

BY ADA C. BOWLES.

Theodora, every place
That the garments of thy grace
Touch in passing, merely
Feels a sweep of lifting wings,
Wakes itself to higher things,
Holds its life more dearly.

Theodora, in thy name
Lives the holy altar-flame;
Rising pure and tender,
Of the love by Love ordained,
By no lustful passion stained,
Life's creative splendor.

Theodora, yet shall earth
Learn the holiness of birth
That is in thy naming,
Learn the sacred motherhood,
Holding high the future's good,
And the present shaming.

MRS. MANNERING'S "WHY?"

III.

BY FAYE HUNTINGTON.

(Concluded.)

Meantime, other sorrows had come to that home. Horace Mannering, strong and vigorous and earnest-hearted, had promised to be such a son as a mother could lean upon and be proud of, and more than this the promise seemed likely to be fulfilled. And well might it be questioned, where was the danger lurking for him? With her limited knowledge of the wiliness of the enemy, was it any wonder that for this boy of hers Mrs. Mannering had no fears? Early in the winter following Helen's marriage Horace took a violent cold which in spite of all remedies developed alarming symptoms. He kept on with his college work, his strength failing as the weeks went by. Dr. Holmes advised a rest from study, but the young man said he had not time—he must finish the year's work, and he consulted another physician who prescribed stimulants, saying:

"Mannering, I fully sympathize with you in your desire to graduate with your class, and I am confident that if you follow my orders I can pull you through."

Horace Mannering was graduated with high honor, but with a habit of a constant resort to alcoholic stimulants fastened upon him which strengthened with passing months. In the fall he entered a law school, but came back to Rushville to spend the Christmas holidays.

"Nobody can tell how it happened." That was what they said of a startling affair which occurred during this vacation. All that the panic-stricken group could tell was that there was an accident in going down the toboggan slide, and Horace Mannering was thrown some distance and carried home insensible, while his companion, Lilian Elbridge, received slight injuries. Horace had been counted as a most skillful pilot and the cause of the accident was a mystery. The young man regained consciousness after a time, and for a few weeks seemed likely to rally from the shock, then failed gradually, and, lingering a few months, he died. Once when alone with his mother he said:

"Mother, I have never told how it happened, and I doubt if any one knows, but I think you ought to know. I was not myself that night; I had taken too much brandy—my head was swimming and my hand unnerved so that I could not guide the sled. I said no one knows, but I think Lilian must have known—poor girl, I think the Lord meant to save her from becoming a drunkard's wife! It is all right that my poor, miserable life should be sacrificed to save others. Mother, I want you to promise me that Howard shall be taught all there is to be learned about the danger of even tasting strong drink. I wish you would send him and Grace to the temperance school. I heard one of the temperance women urging you to do it last fall, and I laughed at the idea; but I see things differently now. I have ruined my own life, cut it off early by my own folly. No, my dear mother, you must not blame yourself. You did not know that I especially needed to be taught the lessons which I have learned by this bitter experience. But, mother, promise me that you will consecrate your life to the work of educating the young and removing temptation from their pathway. Alcohol is a blighting curse. Yet we thought we were so safe, so secure. Poor Helen! I fear she will come back to you with a broken heart; I saw enough when I was there last spring to make it easy to prophesy that! Be very tender with her—and, oh, see to it that Howard and Grace are warned and fortified."

It was only a few months after Horace's death that Helen came home. Do you wonder that Mrs. Mannering felt that her cup of sorrow was full to the brim? But the end was not yet! Helen had roused a little from her listlessness and had begun to take a little interest in things around her, helping the children with their lessons and rendering slight services in the household, when one day her husband walked in upon her as she sat alone in the library. He had been indulging in a prolonged period of dissipation and was wild and haggard in countenance and shabby in dress as he suddenly appeared to her.

"Helen, will you go back with me? It is the last time I shall ask you." The question was abrupt and almost fierce. With her face like marble in its whiteness and with trembling form and quivering nerves she said:

"Oh, George, I cannot! I cannot! I wish you would not ask it!"

Without another word he turned from her and went out from her presence. Two days later he was found dead in his own room at home—with a bullet in his brain by his own hand! Another victim, yet only one of thousands upon thousands! And who was to blame? Do you think that sorrowing young woman, scarcely beyond her girlhood, sitting in the silence of widowhood, reproaching herself for her careless indifference to the subject of temperance, ought to bear the responsibility of this young man's ruin? Whose fault was it that the city in which he lived was full of pitfalls? Let the responsibility rest where it belongs, upon a government, which, for a consideration, permits the traffic in human souls.

Until the people of this nation are convinced of "the iniquity of the legal toleration of the liquor traffic" this work will go on, and still people will be saying, "Oh, if his wife had been a different woman he might not have fallen!" We protest—while in our hearts we wish that the wives and the mothers of this land were all that they ought to be, all that they might be, while we would that they were stronger, wiser and less conservative upon questions of reform and more set against iniquity—yet we ask: Is it fair that men, voters and law-makers should legalize that which ruins body and soul and then ask the wives and the mothers to hold their husbands and their sons back from destruction? It is a heavy burden which these same law-makers are laying upon the hearts of the women of America in that they ask us, by personal influence, education and persuasion, to save a nation from drunkenness, while they do their utmost to counteract our efforts. But the fact remains that, whether fairly or not, a heavy responsibility does rest upon us, and we may not throw it off.

As for Mrs. Mannering, at last she saw her mistake. She had found the answer to the question she had so often asked; now she knew why she ought to belong to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. The blight had touched her home, tenderly sheltered though it had been. The promise wrung from her in the hour of her despair, when, as she listened for the death-knell of her dearest hope she had solemnly pledged herself to the cause she held sacred, and the Rushville union has to-day no more tireless worker than Mrs. Mannering. She no longer thinks or cares whether or not the union is mixed up with politics; if that comes in the line of the work as it presents itself, she is ready for it. To her the need of immediate and concerted action is so imperative that she has no time to waste over disputes or criticisms as to methods. The education of the young and the removal of temptation from the path of the weak are such immediate and imperative needs that her activities are all enlisted, her soul seems on fire with zeal and enthusiasm; and yet, her devotion to her home, her interest in missions are not in the least lessened.

Helen naturally slipped into the work of the Y's. Though she was not yet twenty-four years old she seemed to have lived a century! She said: "If I count by years I belong with the Y's; but if I count by the weariness of my heart I am an old, old woman."

It was a long time before she regained her physical and mental poise, before she could rise above her despair, and, putting the past behind her, look with patience, if not with hope, toward the future.

It is four years since all this was lived. What a blessed thing it is that healing and peace may come with the passing years. Rest and tranquillity once more settled down upon the Mannering home. Especially did the mother feel that the lives of the younger children must not be shadowed and blighted by the sorrows which had come to the household, and she made a great effort to keep the home bright. However there is a noticeable difference in the atmosphere there. The papers and the books and the table talk show a marked change. Howard and Grace already stand by the mother's side, pledged heart and hand to the temperance cause.

And Helen? Well, from early childhood there had been a strong intimacy between the Elbridge young people and the Mannerings. When Helen first went to school, it was John Elbridge's sled upon which she rode; the first money John ever earned went to buy a birthday gift for Helen; the first valentine he ever sent was to her; always, everywhere his first thought was of Helen. She never half suspected the place she held in his heart, and when he came home from college to find her won by another, he covered the hurt and went on his way doing his work in the world. He could not remember the time when his mother was not active in temperance work. She was a white-ribboner from the beginning and she always wore the simple badge realizing that it had a mission. In the early days of the movement she could not guess how the crusade fire was to spread all over the world, but even then the white ribbon stood for a principle which she had espoused, and as John Elbridge grew from boyhood to manhood to him the white ribbon was a part of his mother.

Who can tell what had been the influence of this symbol of temperance and purity upon the life and character of this young man? What wonder that he became a leader in the temperance ranks, or that he was moved to the study of law that he might fight the saloon from a legal standpoint? And now wherever in the long conflict the battle waxes fiercest John Elbridge may be found at the front striking vigorous, telling blows for the cause of prohibition. The other day he came to Helen saying in his simple, straightforward fashion:

"Helen, will you link your life to mine that we may fight this battle together?" And so hand in hand they go out to labor for God and humanity.

THE MODERN JOHNSON.

A Chat with Dr. Murray of Oxford.

BY FLORENCE BALGARNIE.

Dr. Murray is beginning to pay the penalty of fame, fc his Scriptorium at Oxford is gradually becoming a center not only for the English litterateur, but also for our transatlantic cousins, who are evincing even greater eagerness than ourselves in the production of the mammoth dictionary, which is to our age of book enterprise what Johnson's very modest production was to his. On visiting the learned Doctor the other day I found him on the eve of issuing a fresh volume, but although the work has now been in course of production something like twenty years, the letters E and D are only just reached.

"And how did you come to take up this enormous piece of work?" I ventured to ask Dr. Murray, as he kindly conducted me over the iron building which stands in the garden at the back of his house in Oxford and which is generally known as the Scriptorium.

"On coming to London from Scotland some twenty years ago I was gradually drawn into closer connection with the Philological Society, with which I had always been a warm sympathizer, and just at the time when the idea was being discussed of bringing out a colossal dictionary, which should give not only the meaning and derivation of every word, but trace its history back through all the centuries. Although in 1857 the Philological Society had taken the matter in hand, and thousands in different parts of the country had begun reading in order to collect material, there seemed no one willing and able to devote sufficient time to focus the work. Arrangements with the American and English publishers had fallen through, and the matter had practically to be reorganized. At length contracts were made with the Oxford press, which agreed to publish it on the lines of certain specimen words which were prepared for them."

"Then how did you set about organizing such a huge piece of business?"

"I was then second master at Mill Hill school near London, but when I resolved to devote myself to the work of the Philological Society I withdrew myself partially from official duties and put myself in correspondence with literary people all over the country. There was very little difficulty in securing readers and soon the result of their work began to come in in large quantities. Any person reading a given book, whether it be Chaucer, Tennyson, Huxley, or Hooker, would select the leading words on each page, jotting them down on slips of paper together with their context, and the date in which the word was used in that given sense. This was fairly simple work which many were willing to undertake, and during the three years which were devoted to this collecting of the material one thousand three hundred readers, five hundred of whom were in the United States, were in correspondence with me."

"And what was the result of this work?"

"I received something like four and a half millions of words, and for a time I imagined that I could store them in my house, but they soon overleaped all bounds. Two or three girls were kept hard at work pigeon-holing them there as they arrived; but subsequently this was felt to be a very hazardous method of procedure and another plan was adopted," said Dr. Murray, pointing to the admirably arranged shelves which line the walls of his Scriptorium. "We are now able under various letters to place every word as it comes in; but subsequently they are referred to a second body of more properly qualified classifiers who weed out all that is not absolutely necessary, so that in the end I hope to make use of something like one million words. Then, as each volume is completed, I send all the slips of paper away to be stored among the archives of the Clarendon press, so that future generations who may penetrate to the vaults will have no such difficulties to overcome, as have the modern manuscript hunters."

"But you are hardly yet at the beginning of the alphabet, Dr. Murray; do you expect that any mortal man can live to see its completion?"

"We hope that the dictionary will be entirely completed by the end of the century; but realizing more each day the extraordinary magnitude of the work, I have now coadjutors in London. Mr. Bradley is engaged on the letters E, F, G, while I have C and D in hand. Further, it is obvious that the latter letters of the alphabet will not be nearly so serious an undertaking, for I have discovered, that next to S, C is the letter containing the largest number of words, and in fact, the words beginning with X, Y, Z, J, K, V, O, Q and N could all be swallowed up in the words which commence with the one letter C, so that really we may congratulate ourselves that although still only at the first few letters of the alphabet we have really got through nearly a quarter of the work."

"You are able to make greater progress in Oxford, I presume?"

"Since coming here in 1885 every aid has been given to me by the University. Ten assistants are always at work about eight to ten hours a day; but I make a final supervision of everything. My daily work comprises answering some thirty letters which reach me by the morning mail from men and women, volunteer workers who ask for advice on certain points. Then I have my proofs and revises to go through, and I always expect to succeed in hunting out about thirty or forty words a day. I find that eminent men and women in every branch of science and art are most willing to help me, and amongst my correspondents have been such people as Tennyson, George Eliot, Lewes, Stephen, Lowell, Lubbock, Huxley, and many literary men in the United States, such as Lowell and Whittier, where an interest in the development of the language is even greater than in this country where usage is the only fixed standard which people accept without question."

"In what department of literature do you find the greatest number of curious words?"

"Amongst scientific men undoubtedly Darwin and Huxley have introduced the greatest number in their discourse and theory on natural objects. Mr. Gladstone, too, is not infrequently a coiner of words, and considerable discussion has been caused by his use of antrophuism in his discourse of the nature of the Greek gods. The usual word applied in this sense, in his opinion, involving too much of the idea of human passion to make it applicable to deities. Time alone, however, can determine the worth of a word and the chance of its being incorporated into the language; and strange enough some words crop up in modern books apparently quite original, but which I ultimately discover to be of ancient usage. This, of course, may be accounted for by accident or design, or perhaps by the peculiar chain of thought which seems to link one century to another. For instance, in Lewis Carroll's 'Through the Looking Glass,' the word 'chortle' is used in describing Humpty Dumpty, meaning a kind of inarticulate chuckle. This word has been the subject of much discussion, but I have traced it back and found it was in use many centuries ago, meaning a kind of noise of joy."

"Then what do you think of Mr. Stead's latest word, 'throughth,' for example?"

"Mr. Stead may use it quite originally in connection with what he is pleased to call his Fourth Dimension, but it reminds me forcibly of a book written by Fairfax centuries ago, entitled 'On Bulk and Salvage' in which the words 'unthroughth' or 'fairsomeness' of body implied a kind of impenetrability. This is certainly a most prolific age for words; probably no century has witnessed so many creations. The seventeenth century was also extremely prolific, but this far outdistances it."

"What do you prophecy for the future?"

"As the pendulum swings I imagine the next century will be one of quiescence in which words will be filtered down, and the valuable ones will become finally incorporated in the language. After stress and storm usually comes a period of repose, and I should imagine the twentieth century will be to the nineteenth century what the eighteenth was to the seventeenth."

"How far back then have you gone in the study of English words?"

"The earliest book," said Dr. Murray, producing a bulky volume, "is the Epinal Glossary which dates from the year 700. The first attempt was made to classify the language, and the explanatory word was usually written in small characters over the word to be explained. Here," taking up another book, "is the second stage in which the words are placed in parallel columns and then comes the third stage in which words are placed in alphabetical order and in this way the modern dictionary was developed.

"Johnson compiled his dictionary with the idea that at his time the language had become fixed, and nothing need be superadded. But things have progressed since then, and what was then deemed perfection has become completely overturned; in fact, the French Revolution, the rise of modern natural science, philanthropy, and theology have introduced so many new ideas, that more words are coined now in a week than in previous decades. I have a natural facility for language," said the Doctor, in answer to a question, "but the language which above all others is of service to me is German, for there are more works, even on the subject of English etymology, written in that tongue than there are in the English language itself."

JAPANESE OPINION OF OCCIDENTAL CIVILIZATION.

BY LAFCADIO HEARN.

Condensed for THE UNION SIGNAL from the Atlantic Monthly.

One striking fact is hopeful, that the Japanese admiration for Western material superiority is by no means extended to Western morals. Oriental thinkers do not commit the serious blunder of confounding mechanical with ethical progress, nor have they failed to perceive the moral weaknesses of our boasted civilization. One Japanese writer has expressed his judgment of things Occidental after a fashion that deserves to be noticed by a larger circle of readers than that for which it was originally written:

"'Order or disorder in a nation does not depend upon something that falls from the sky or rises from the earth.' It is determined by the disposition of the people. The pivot on which the public disposition turns toward order or disorder is the point where public and private motives separate. If the people be influenced chiefly by public considerations, order is assured; if by private, disorder is inevitable.

"Public considerations are those that prompt the proper observance of duties; their prevalence signifies peace and prosperity in the case alike of families, communities and nations. Private considerations are those suggested by selfish motives; when they prevail, disturbance and disorder are unavoidable. To regard our family affairs with all the interest due to our family and our national affairs with all the interest due to our nation—this is to fitly discharge our duty and to be guided by public considerations. On the other hand, to regard the affairs of the nation as if they were our own family affairs—this is to be influenced by private motives and to stray from the path of duty.

"Selfishness is born in every man; to indulge it freely is to become a beast. Therefore, it is that sages preach the principles of duty and propriety, justice and morality, providing restraints for private aims and encouragements for public spirit. . . . . What we know of Western civilization is that it struggled on through long centuries in a confused condition, and finally attained a state of some order; but then even this order, not being based upon such principles as those of the natural and immutable distinctions between sovereign and subject, parent and child, with all their corresponding rights and duties, is liable to constant change, according to the growth of human ambitions and human aims. Admirably suited to persons whose actions are controlled by selfish ambition, the adoption of this system in Japan is naturally sought by a certain class of politicians. From a superficial point of view, the Occidental form of society is very attractive, inasmuch as, being the outcome of a free development of human desires from ancient times, it represents the very extreme of luxury and extravagance.

"Briefly speaking, the state of things obtaining in the west is based upon the free play of human selfishness, and can only be reached by giving full sway to that quality. Social disturbances are little heeded in the Occident; yet they are at once the evidences and the factors of the present evil state of things.

"Yet there is nothing in human society that does not owe its existence to labor. Now, to satisfy the desires of one luxurious man, the toil of a thousand is needed. Surely it is monstrous that those who owe to labor the pleasures suggested by their civilization should forget what they owe to the laborer, and treat him as if he were not a fellow-being. But civilization according to the interpretation of the Occident, serves only to satisfy men of large desires. It is of no benefit to the masses, but is simply a system under which ambitions compete to accomplish their aims. . . That the Occidental system is gravely disturbing to the order and peace of a country is seen by men who have eyes, and heard by men who have ears.

"The future of Japan, under such a system, fills us with anxiety. A system based on the principle that ethics and religion are made to serve human ambition, naturally accords with the wishes of selfish individuals; and such theories as those embodied in the modern formula of liberty and equality annihilate the established relations of society, and outrage decorum and propriety. . . Absolute equality and absolute liberty being unattainable, the limits prescribed by right and duty are supposed to be set. But as each person seeks to have as much right, and to be burdened with as little duty as possible, the results are endless disputes and legal contentions.

"The principles of liberty and equality may succeed in changing the organization of nations, in overthrowing the lawful distinctions of social rank, in reducing all men to one nominal level, but they can never accomplish the equal distribution of wealth and property. Consider America. . . . . It is plain that if the mutual rights of men and their status are made to depend on degrees of wealth, the majority of the people being without wealth, must fail to establish their rights; whereas the minority who are wealthy will assert their rights, and, under society's sanction, will exact oppressive duties from the poor, neglecting the dictates of humanity and benevolence. The adoption of these principles of liberty and equality in Japan would vitiate the good and peaceful customs of our country, render the general disposition of the people harsh and unfeeling, and prove finally a source of calamity to the masses."

Yet it appears inevitable that her approaching transformation must be coincident with a moral decline. Forced into the vast industrial competition of nations whose civilizations were never based on altruism, she must eventually develop those qualities of which the comparative absence made all the wonderful charm of her life. The national character must continue to harden as it has begun to harden already.

But it should never be forgotten that old Japan was quite as much in advance of the nineteenth century morally, as she was behind it materially. She had made morality instinctive, after having made it rational. She had realized, though within restricted limits, several among those social conditions which our ablest thinkers regard as the happiest and the highest. Throughout all the grades of her complex society she had cultivated both the comprehension and the practice of public and private duties after a manner for which it were vain to seek any Western parallel. It will be her duty to keep in view Herbert Spencer's seemingly paradoxical statements:

"The highest individuation must be joined with the greatest mutual dependence."

"The law of progress is at once toward complete separateness and complete union."

HILLSBORO CRUSADE SKETCHES.

XI.

BY ELIZA J. THOMPSON.

The Highland News, one of the leading journals of our town, edited by Mr. J. L. Boardman, a champion for temperance and a loyal friend of the woman's movement, on March 10, 1873, had the following:

The record of the day is not complete without some mention of the outdoor mass-meeting held on the public square about four o'clock in the afternoon.

Mr. Uhrig having yielded to the entreaties of the ladies, closed his saloon and surrendered his liquors, it was determined that the whisky should be burned. A large concourse of people assembled to witness the ceremony.

The ladies of the association came in procession from the church and formed a circle around the three barrels, being marshaled by Mr. Jacob Sayler, who at their request had charge of the proceedings.

After a prayer by Rev. S. D. Clayton, the heads of the barrels were broken in by Mrs. Eliza J. Thompson, Mrs. General McDowell and Mrs. H. S. Foraker, and the liquor set on fire. The scene was one of solemn joy, never to be forgotten by those who participated in it.

As the words of prayer were borne heavenward on the wings of the evening air, tears of thankfulness flowed from many eyes, and in the hush which followed the fervent "Amen," voices all tremulous with emotion joined in the grand old "John Brown" chorus.

Even the boys forgot their usual shout and whistle, and the dear familiar hymns, that have cheered and helped us all along the weary way, seemed the fittest expression of our joy. When all was over, the ladies and gentlemen of the association returned to the church to unite in a song and prayer of solemn thanksgiving to God, being more than ever convinced that He who began the work has continued it, and will in His own good time and way complete it. MRS. DEAN K. FENNER, Sec'y.

About the beginning of April, 1874, the morning meetings were resumed, and by special invitation from the "powers that be," they were held alternate weeks in the Presbyterian and Methodist churches. It must not be forgotten, that in addition to the injunction case which had been tried at the February term of court, Mr. Dunn had also brought suit against the Crusaders for alleged trespass, and asked ten thousand dollars damages. This suit was not to come on for some months, owing to the fact that the parties were not ready for trial. Meantime, the women decided not to "trespass" upon the Palace drug store, as there was plenty to do in other directions, and they had no desire, even in appearance, to defy the law. But from an article taken from the Highland News about that time, it would seem that our temperance gentlemen were not so minded, for they were busy in the line of legal suasion. In order to give the situation as it was regarded in this region in 1874 this clipping will be useful:

MR. DUNN IN TROUBLE AGAIN—HE IS BOUND OVER ON EIGHT ADDITIONAL CHARGES OF ILLEGAL LIQUOR-SELLING.

Since our last issue, the temperance men have been making things rather uncomfortable for Mr. Dunn, of injunction notoriety, and have pretty effectually stripped him of the borrowed plumage he has hitherto been allowed to wear, as a seller of liquor only in strict accordance with the law. He has been arrested and bound over to court on eight distinct charges of illegal selling.

All these cases but two are for selling liquor to be drunk on the premises, and the proof against him is clear in every case. The other two cases are for selling liquor to minors, and in these also the evidence is strong and direct.

This is all there is in the cry of "persecution" which is being raised by his friends and sympathizers.

The only remaining saloons were the two we first visited, kept by John Bales and Robert Ward, and they were still visited with songs, prayers and earnest entreaties until it really seemed a question as to how long they could resist and how long the Crusaders could patiently endure!

These men were very different in their temperaments. Bales had one song, which he never failed to sing: "Just as soon as the druggists all sign the pledge and quit selling contrary to law, then I will quit, and join in with the temperance people, heart and soul."

Poor Ward always agreed that liquor selling was a "bad business," and protested that whenever he could sell his house he would "quit the business entirely." But when one of our wealthy citizens (to gratify his noble Crusade wife) offered him his price for the property, cash down, with a view, we have always believed, of handing it over to her for Crusade headquarters, the infatuated Ephraim proved his devotion to his idol by asking $500 more for his house! Thus the sale was lost, and the death-dealing business was continued. The Crusaders are yet renting, but prayers and songs still ascend to the God of Jacob for victory in His name.

Quite a new line of activity opened up about this time for temperance workers. The constitutional convention had at last finished its labors and Ohio was required to consider the new constitution. In consequence of the great pressure brought upon the members of this convention by the temperance movement they saw plainly that in order to meet the question fairly they would have to submit to the people a choice as to which of two clauses should be inserted in the constitution—one favoring the system of license to sell intoxicating liquors, the other opposed to license. 'Tis true the women had no vote on the subject, but they would be the greatest sufferers should the state license this terrible traffic. So when meetings were appointed throughout the county in school-houses and churches, the Crusaders accepted the many calls that were made upon them, and in little groups of three, four or six, sought quietly the rural gatherings, where from full hearts (and many times bitter experiences) they reasoned with their neighbors of "righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come," and, from the kindly letters received and published, one might well suppose the novel work of the women during those days of toil and danger was not in vain. As a tribute to the author of the following letter, we feel that it should be published in our "Crusade Sketches." In his little town, Belfast, Highland county, Mr. Isaac Hottinger, a sensible farmer, had stood like a granite statue against taunts, ridicule, and sarcasm, voting the only Prohibition ticket for so many years that he naturally hailed the new movement with enthusiasm.

BELFAST, March 21, 1874.

EDITOR NEWS:—To-day, after religious service was ended in the M. E. church, Isaac Hottinger moved that we extend our hearty congratulations and sympathies to the noble women of Hillsboro for their zealous labors to suppress intemperance. Rev. Mr. Ambrose called for a vote of the house, and I believe it was carried unanimously, and Isaac Hottinger was appointed a committee to report the same to the women of Hillsboro, through the columns of the News.

So far as I have heard our people express their minds they are on the side of the women in this temperance movement. It is the foundation principle of this government that a majority shall rule. Now if we were to ask every voter in our nation, "Are you in favor of the sale and use of liquor for a beverage?" two-thirds would say No. Then why are things in such a deplorable condition? The answer is obvious. We are too busy trying to make money, and more anxious for political party victories than we are for the cause of temperance.

There is one thing certain to my mind. If the women had a vote, they would "right-about-face" the liquor business in short meter.

God grant that the temperance ball that was started in Hillsboro may roll on until it shall break down the reign of King Alcohol, and bind him in chains so strong that he will never again be set free to ravage and destroy our homes.

Yours, for temperance,
ISAAC HOTTINGER.

During the time that intervened between the early days of the Crusade, and the work involving law and great caution in every particular, our good, sensible women of Hillsboro held frequent meetings for consultation and earnest prayer, and it is a fact worthy of note that they always separated with a feeling of encouraged and brightened faith, and a renewed determination to persevere in the work, ever following the guidance of their divine Leader, fully recognizing that this "battle is the Lord's" and He "saveth not with sword and spear," but as the vaunting Philistine was given into the hands of the chosen of God, through a smooth stone in the hand of the beardless shepherd boy, so will the God of Israel give the giant evil of this land into the hands of His faithful people—some way, somehow, if faithful to His commands.

CHEESE.

IV.

BY MRS. SARA C. BULL.

Regarding the food value and proper cookery of cheese Mathew Williams gives the fuller information. His recipes have proved most appetizing and satisfactory as regards their digestibility. The essential points as taken from his interesting chapter seem to be the following:

We may conclude generally that one pound of average cheese contains as much nutriment as three pounds of the average material of the carcass of an ox or sheep, as prepared for sale by the butcher. Can the cheese food be assimilated or converted into the human substance as easily as one may the flesh food? Certainly not if the cheese be eaten raw, but it may if suitably cooked. A Swiss or Scandinavian mountaineer can, and does, digest raw cheese as a staple article of food, and proves its nutritious value by the result; but those of sedentary habits cannot do the like. I advocate the use of bicarbonate of potash in the cookery of cheese for two reasons: First, it effects a better solution of the casein by neutralizing the free lactic acid that inevitably exists in milk supplied to towns, and any free acid that may remain in the cheese. At a farm-house, where the milk is just drawn from the cow, it is unnecessary for this purpose, as such new milk is slightly alkaline.

My second reason is physiological and of greater weight. Salts of potash are necessary constituents of human food. They exist in all kinds of wholesome vegetables and fruits and in the juices of fresh meat, but they are wanting in cheese, having on account of their great solubility been left behind in the whey. This absence of potash seems to me to be the one serious objection to the free use of a cheese diet. The Swiss peasant escapes the mischief by his abundant salads, which eaten raw contain all their potash salts. . . . . I am satisfied that cheese can never take the place in an economic dietary, otherwise justified by its nutritious composition, unless this deficiency of potash is somehow supplied. My device of using it with milk as a solvent supplies it in a suitable and natural manner. The milk is not necessary though preferable. I find that a solution of cheese may be made in water by simply grating or thinly slicing the cheese and adding it to about its own bulk of water in which the bicarbonate of potash is dissolved. The proportion of bicarbonate which I theoretically estimate as demanded for supplying the deficiency of potash, is at the rate of about one-fourth of an ounce to the pound of cheese; and I find that it will bear this quantity without the flavor of the potash being detected.

Generally speaking, the newer and milder the cheese, the more soluble. Some that I have tried leaves a stubbornly insoluble residuum which is detestably tough. I found the same cheese to be unusually indigestible when eaten with bread in the ordinary raw state, and have reason to believe it is what I have called "bosch cheese," cheese made from the waste fat of oxen and sheep and worked with a little milk (when improperly made and dishonestly sold for genuine cheese objectionable).

Thin soups are more nutritious and appetizing in cold weather if grated cheese like Parmesan be added. A stew of rice and the giblets of fowls served with Parmesan as with many varieties of paste, macaroni and vermicelli are wholesome. In all these the Italian method is to sprinkle the cheese over and stir into the soup, etc., while it is hot. The cheese being finely divided, is fused at once, and thus delicately cooked. This is quite different from the macaroni cheese commonly prepared by depositing macaroni in a deep dish, then covering it with a stratum of grated cheese and placing this in an oven or before a fire until the cheese is desiccated, browned and converted into a heavy, caseous form of carbon that would induce chronic dyspepsia in the stomach of a wild boar if he fed upon it for a week. In all preparations of Italian pastes, risottos purées, etc., the cheese is intimately mixed throughout, and softened and diffused thereby in the manner above described. By letting good American cheese dry it may be grated as well as the Parmesan—a cheese less rich in cream and more expensive.

For those whose work is muscular and who work in the open air (not sedentary brain workers, for over nutrition is but a few degrees worse than partial starvation) the cheese porridge is recommended—ordinary oatmeal porridge to which grated cheese or some of the cheese solution above described is added, either while in the cooking pot or after it is taken out, and yet as hot as possible. It should be sprinkled gradually and well stirred in. Another kind is made by adding cheese to baked potatoes—the potatoes to be taken out of their skins and well mashed while the grated cheese is sprinkled and intermingled. A little milk may be added or not, according to taste and convenience. This is better, being less nutritious for sedentary people than the oatmeal (the boiled potato would not do as well, having lost its salts in the cookery).

Boiled rice, sago, tapioca and corn stirabout may be combined and made more nutritious by the addition of grated cheese. Peas and beans should not be used with cheese. White fish with bread crumbs, grated cheese and catsup, served as scalloped fish, is good and wholesome. The potash salts may be supplied by a liberal second course of fruit or salad.

Stewed tripe is the most easily digested of all solid animal food. A solution of cheese, mixed with the liquor of the stew, or grated cheese sprinkled over makes a very nutritious dish. When a cheese dish is served it should be made the principal one of the meal, not a side dish. A mixture of cheese and eggs, the cheese grated and beaten in the egg, as in making omelettes, with a small addition of new milk, may be placed in a little pan, like a flower-pot saucer, cooked gently, and served as it comes from the fire and eaten from the dish in which it is cooked. The cheese is in a pasty condition, and partly dissolved in the milk; good for a meal before stiff mountain climbing or hard out-of-door work.

One more recipe will sufficiently explain the method of cookery and suggest varieties that may be added to the common mixed diet when the proteid principle of food is desired in one of the most economical and convenient forms:

One-fourth of a pound of grated cheese, 1 gill of milk, with enough bicarbonate of potash to cover a silver five cent piece, 1 teaspoonful of flour of mustard, 1 salt spoon of pepper, 2 tablespoons butter, 2 tablespoons baked flour, ½ cup bread crumbs. Heat until potash and cheese are dissolved in milk. Beat three eggs and add them to the solution of cheese, stirring the whole, and add bread crumbs. Butter a shallow pan (olive oil best) and heat, then pour the mixture into it and bake in a moderate oven until it stiffens, and serve in dish that it is baked in. We conclude with this interesting note from Mrs. Abel:

"Dr. Rubner, a pupil of Voit, found that he could not consume much cheese alone, but when he took milk with it he could easily use one half pound daily, and only when he used over a pound daily was it less completely digested than meat. Prof. König says that in the amounts in which it is generally taken, one quarter to one half pound daily, it is as well digested as meat or eggs. The extensive use of it abroad would seem to be some guarantee for the digestibility of the foreign varieties, at least." The remarks of Mr. Williams help us to understand why this is so.

TEMPERANCE WORK IN SWITZERLAND.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—In a strange city one of my greatest delights is to lose myself. So, not long ago, when I found myself for the first time in Geneva, Switzerland, I purposely left my guide book at home and started out at random. Geneva is not a large city, but its streets have a trick of dodging into a doorway now and then and transforming themselves into covered flights of steps, for all the world like somebody's private staircase, a habit which is more bewildering to a stranger than even the most complicated turns and the most magnificent distances.

It was after making my way through one of these passages that, very much mystified, I came out suddenly into a small place at the foot of three great towers of St. Pierre, the peculiar and fascinating cathedral of Geneva. No exit was visible. I hazarded a turn to the right, and found myself between the prison and the cathedral, face to face with a simple, last century building, which I should not have looked at a second time had it not been for a placard on the façade. Croix Bleue were the words I read. I realized that I had stumbled on the headquarters of the greatest temperance society of the European Continent.

When one has the name of THE UNION SIGNAL to conjure with he is always sure to be welcomed among the temperance people of Europe. To them, working in narrow places, hampered by the settled habits and standards of the country, without popular sympathy, without the stimulus of numbers, the history of the W. C. T. U., the mammoth proportions it has attained, the circulation of its organ, the printing it does, and—perhaps, above all such is the power of material success—the picture of its magnificent new home, the Temple, are fascinating as Arabian night tales. The United States seems to them, with its vast organizations for uplifting people, like a country already gained for morality, temperance and spirituality.

The Croix Bleue was no exception in the matter of cordiality. M. Ph. Chatelain, of the executive commission, and M. Mercier, the secretary of the Geneva section, received me and showed me about the headquarters. The Blue Cross is housed more modestly than the W. C. T. U. A front office for business, a small hall for the weekly meetings of the executive commission and for the gatherings of the Geneva section, with a second room connecting by double doors for use in case of overflow, the whole seating, perhaps, one hundred and fifty persons. Such is the headquarters; the furniture is plain; the decorations the simplest, but there is a look of service about the place, of convenience and adaptability which are the best of recommendations.

Of course I asked news of the society. "The Croix Bleue," said M. Chatelain, "has now some ten thousand members, and it never was in a more healthful condition. Our work is primarily to persuade drinking men to temperate habits, and we have about three thousand five hundred who are faithful to their vow of total abstinence. A feature of our work which pleases us particularly is the public attitude toward us. A few months ago we held a convention of the society here in Geneva, and we tried the rather hazardous experiment of having a temperance procession. Nobody was more astonished than we were to see the public taking a genuine interest in our procession instead of annoying us as we had anticipated. We crossed the city, banners flying and fanfares playing, without a single unpleasant 'attention' on the part of the spectators. At the banquet there were representatives present from the cantonal, municipal and ecclesiastical authorities, and several of them drank toasts to our future in cold water, probably for the first time in their lives.

"It is not only the public which shows us respect. It is the press and the government. There is a growing conviction among the best classes of Switzerland that intemperance must be stopped, and every organization which works in that direction is respectfully listened to."

"And are there any new temperance movements on foot at present?" I asked.

"Yes, here in Geneva a suggestive movement has begun among certain young men of the university who are trying to form a league advocating total abstinence. There are in the Swiss universities at least three eminent professors who advocate total abstinence, Prof. Forel Burghölzli, of Zurich, Professor Bunge, of Bâle, and Prof. Oettli, of Berne, and it is they who have awakened the interest which is crystallizing here among the Geneva students."

"And in the Blue Cross you are working always on the original lines?"

"Absolutely, though with us every outside temperance agency receives sympathy and, if possible, aid. For example, we are occupying ourselves now in stimulating the interest which has begun to be shown on the subject of temperance instruction in the schools. In 1892 the Grand Counsel of Vaud decided that there ought to be some instruction given in the public schools on the subject of the dangers to health and public morality caused by the use of alcoholic drinks, and especially strong liquors.' The difficulty in the way of carrying out such a project was that there was no practical text book existing to guide the teachers in giving such lessons. To supply this need the Blue Cross offered a prize of five hundred francs for a 'manual of temperance for the use of teachers.' The result is that there now exists an admirable text book. The department of public instruction of the canton of Geneva has already ordered three hundred copies for the teachers of the canton, and has also begun to occupy itself with the subject of wall charts showing the pathological results of alcohol on the organs."

"But it is very slow work, is it not?"

"Yes, but if even one life is saved"—

I felt rebuked. With such an end in view and with a courage to believe that the results, though small from a worldly standpoint, are nevertheless vast from the spiritual standpoints, the Blue Cross becomes impressive and powerful, and when I left the little office, charged with good wishes and good will for THE UNION SIGNAL and the W. C. T. U., I carried away a profound conviction of the dignity and spirituality of the work done so modestly and simply.

I was still puzzling over its secret as I walked away, when I found myself in the narrow street where it is said Calvin once lived and before the house which tradition calls his. Over the portal I read an answer to my questioning: Dominus est propugnaculum meum.

MRS. WELLS PROTESTS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I have just received my UNION SIGNAL of June 22, and was surprised to see under the heading, "Condition of the W. C. T. U. Work in Tennessee Before and After the Passage of the Suffrage Resolution," the very remarkable statement that "at the recent session of the Georgia state convention of the W. C. T. U. Mrs. M. L. Wells, of Tennessee, made the statement that the Tennessee W. C. T. U. had been ruined by suffrage."

I think I am safe in saying that I never mentioned the W. C. T. U. of Tennessee in the Georgia state convention. I certainly never said "the work was ruined" by anything. I do not believe the W. C. T. U. can be ruined. I do believe its usefulness may be crippled by hasty or unwise legislation, but ruined, never; it will accomplish the work for which it was born.

There were peculiar conditions surrounding the meeting of the W. C. T. U. at Macon, Ga. I did advise, in a very few words, consideration and caution, believing the time was not yet, but it did not enter into my thought to mention any state. If I spoke of Tennessee at all it must have been privately and in response to a question put to me direct, which I do not remember; but if such a thing did occur I certainly answered as I most truly believe.

The question of woman's suffrage is growing in the South; and I should not in the least be surprised if full suffrage were granted south of Mason and Dixon's line before it is in the North. If it comes, however, it will come through the men of the South who are much more in favor of it than the women. The W. C. T. U. must be the educator of the women; hence my belief that it is better for the few not to force the question until the hour is ripe.

I think I have not been going about over this nation for fifteen years, however, without my opinion upon this and kindred questions being fully known. And I have been surprised and troubled that in states having favorable legislation our workers have not made more of their opportunity. Again I would like to repeat that the statement, said to be copied from the Woman's Column, is untrue. As to any statement made by me in convention, in Georgia or any other state, I have no time or inclination to go into an argument as to the article of which it is the basis.

To the W. C. T. U. I am most loyal because I believe it to have more of the elements of true patriotism, good politics and heartfelt Christianity than any organization the world has ever known. And I believe what it has devised that ought to come about will come, and cannot be hastened by untimely controversy or undue nervousness.

POLICE MATRONS A SUCCESS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I read in a morning paper a few days ago the following paragraph: "A well dressed woman of middle age, with two little tots, pretty as waxen dolls, wandered into a saloon at eleven o'clock last night." No sadder sight can be in this world than the picture here presented, and a police matron gave me the sequel of the story so briefly told. The mother, somewhat demented from intoxication and tired and lonely from waiting for the return of a dissipated, reckless husband, started out in the warm, sultry evening to take a walk. She and the babies were hungry as they had eaten but little since morning. They passed a fruit stand on their way and helped themselves from the fruit vender's store. While in the saloon they were arrested by the police and taken to a station and placed in the care of a wise and benevolent police matron.

It was her pleasure as well as her duty to take such wanderers to her heart and supply them with a good warm supper; whereupon the weary mother fell asleep sitting in her chair! The babies, aged respectively two and three and a half years, felt no burden of care, no sense of obligation, and having eaten to their satisfaction, began to romp around, roll over the floor and became very hilarious. The motherly matron looked on with womanly admiration at their agility.

She called them to a halt, and combed out the flaxen curls, bathed the round, fat limbs and got them ready for sleep. She placed them in a little bed, prepared for wayfarers, knelt beside them, and oh, what a heart-wail went up to her and their heavenly Father for His loving care and Holy Spirit to watch and guide them!

The weary mother still slept in her chair; but when refreshed by sleep and strengthened by food, she came to herself sufficiently to know her surroundings, she told the matron her story. The judge before whom she was brought was a husband and father and gave a just and wise decision of her case, and the matron stood by her protégé until she was safely housed in a home. Every day at noon-tide hour, this W. C. T. U. matron bears before the throne of grace this new-found friend, and the mother rejoices that evil has been turned into good; that hope and courage have taken root in her heart and brought a new light in her eye and a strength of purpose in her heart that leads to purer thinking and better living.

Police matrons are proving themselves a necessity to the police force of all large cities. The question has been asked, "Is it not difficult to get the right kind of women to fill the matronship?" It is certainly imperative that none but the women of unimpeachable character should hold such an office; and in order to obviate such a condition of affairs, an "associated committee of women on police matrons," composed of women of good standing and residents in the city in which such appointments are made, has been formed in many of the cities. The names of applicants are inspected by this committee before appointments are made.

Mayor Smith, of Philadelphia, said that he was convinced that every police station where women had been employed as matrons had been greatly improved in outward appearance as well as in morals. The prison-life surroundings that existed under the old iron cage system, was metamorphosed into clean-painted cells, varnished floors and plenty of ventilation.

Matrons in the larger cities are ready for service day and night as well. Part of the duty is the searching of female prisoners, and this can be done with delicacy and consideration for the offender, in such a way as to call out the better nature.

The educational test is the ability to read, write legibly, and work simple problems in the elementary branches of arithmetic, but the higher educational test is the possession of such moral power as will strengthen the weak, good judgment and tact, energy, patience and perseverance. One good point in the law is that a matron be appointed for life. She may be dismissed from service only after charges have been made and an investigation held by proper authorities.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

And they came to him and awoke him, saying, Master, Master, we perish. Then he arose and rebuked the wind and the raging of the water; and they ceased, and there was a calm. And he said unto them, Where is your faith?—Luke 8:23, 24.

A beautiful letter has been received, enclosing $5, from Mrs. Charlotte M. Lawson, Allerton, Prince Edward Island. Although living across the border, in her far-away Canadian home, she is full of interest for the Temple. She writes: "My two little girls, Lottie and Minnie, have most cheerfully helped out of their little to fill the mite-box, and we shall now, D. V., proceed unitedly to fill it again, for we do long to see the Temple wholly in the hands of the white-ribboners." This money comes not from the plethoric purse of a rich woman, but from the slender savings of a Methodist minister's wife. Let some of our well-to-do white-ribboners who have as yet not given one cent to the Temple contrast their own selfish indifference with this noble woman's generosity, and may it be the means of teaching them their duty.

Miss Amy Leonard, Raynham, Mass., sends $100 for tablet in memory of Mrs. Olivie Leonard Foster. The Rhode Island W. C. T. U. sends $40.80 toward the Mrs. J. K. Barney tablet; $10 has been received for Rev. Florence Kollock's tablet; $3.65 comes from the Atlantic City Ward union for the Mrs. R. H. Jones tablet.

The history of the littles representing generally the widow's mite portion, which has been sent toward the "House Beautiful," would make a story, if written, over which the angels in heaven would rejoice. The following gifts belong to this class: From Bushnell, Fla., comes $3.65, from Mrs. Lucy W. Bigelow; she says: "It has been saved by littles, every nickel representing thanks or self-denial for nearly a year. . . Please give the name of Warren I. Bigelow instead of mine." Mrs. I. A. Chapple, Chagrin Falls, O., writes: "I am an old woman, but a lover of temperance and now an admirer of your work. I have had a mite-box but have not been able to go far to collect in the winter. I have added a little to make it $5." Lizzie Bockes, Morrill, Kan., sends $5.05. She writes: "Would you be willing to indorse the above amount to my credit, towards raising one hundred dollars, if I can? If I fail, I will have the satisfaction of knowing that I did what I could. I think every white-ribboner ought to have her money as well as her prayer in the Temple. I made the inclosed sum by taking care of a baby and making lace and selling it." There would be no Temple indebtedness in a year if all white-ribboners were animated with the lofty aim of this noble woman. Mrs. Mary R. Gause, Westmoreland, Kan., sends $3.65; she says: "Little Jessie, aged seven, has helped me," and adds, "It has required considerable self-denial to send even so little, but we were so anxious to help a little."

From a Methodist parsonage comes $3.65 with a beautiful letter from the pastor, Rev. M. P. Wilkin, Sullivan, Ill. Such gifts from such a source mean self-denial. "Enclosed please find $1," writes Mrs. M. A. Richardson, Burch, So. Dakota. "Twenty-five cents of it was given by others, the remainder by myself and six children. We want to help a little in the good work." Mrs. Susan Armstrong, Lebanon, Conn., sends $3.65. She says: "I have a large family of children. I have saved and worked to get this small amount, knowing that 'faith without works is dead.'" In next week's "Items" we will tell how the children earn the littles.

From the Youngstown, O., W. C. T. U. comes $20 on its pledge; $14 has been received from the Peabody, Mass., W. C. T. U.; $17 from the Perry, N. Y., W. C. T. U. on their pledges. The South Perintow, N. Y., W. C. T. U. sends $13.33 and pledges $100. Corunna, Mich., W. C. T. U. sends $15, being the second installment on $100. Marshall county, Kas., W. C. T. U., sends $16.60 payment on $100. The East Shelby, N. Y., union has sent $13.65 hoping to do more and may yet attain the hundred dollar notch. Mrs. Edith Gibbs sends $24.11 for the Ossian, Ia., W. C. T. U. She writes: "The union has only a few members. We have worked hard, but are so glad now to send this; we love the cause the more we try to work for it." This plucky little union no doubt will yet have its name engraved in Willard Hall. We also expect the Y. W. C. T. U. of Exeter, Neb., will attain to the roll of honor in the Willard corridors. If its hard working president, Mrs. McKinnon can accomplish it, it will be done. This union has sent $14.10; five dollars of the money is on a Veteran Band which contains five names. Another brave little union of seven members at Guthrie Center, Ia., sends $8.82. The Frances E. Willard union, Southwest Harbor, Me., sends $18.25 on pledge. Both of the two last named unions send the money from the self-denial fund of individual members. This is the kind that brings with it a blessing. Would that we might have more such giving.

A two-cent stamp sent to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago, will secure a mite-box. Remember, any one placing in the box $2.50 from May 1, 1893, to May 1, 1894, will receive the lovely Columbian souvenir made of aluminum with a cut of the Temple on one side and on the reverse the face of Miss Willard and the founder of the Temple, with suitable inscriptions. All money orders should be made out in the name of the treasurer, William D. Preston, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

THOUGHTS FOR YOUR BIRTHDAY.

BY WARNER WILLIS FRIES.

How the birthdays come as the seasons fly!
How the birthdays pass as the years roll by!
How each changing year in its onward flight,
Bears us through earth's night towards heaven's light!
When birthdays come do the mothers not know,
Who passed from our sight in the long ago?
Do they, whose love is the truest of earth,
Forget in heaven the days of our birth?

Do the fathers not know, whose feet have pressed
The path that leads to the courts of the blest,
The birthdays of children who still must roam
On the rugged road that shall lead them home?
Are the brothers and sisters gone before,
To a brighter life on a fairer shore,
Not allowed to bring us, in unknown ways,
Choice gifts of good thoughts during our birthdays?

There are blessed children, too pure to stay
Here on earth in its tenements of clay;
If they come not to lessen our despair,
Count they not our birthdays in mansions fair?
If guardian angels our steps attend,
From our earth-life's dawn to its journey's end,
Must they not rejoice over each birthday,
And each year's advance on the upward way?

There are wives and sweethearts mourning to-day,
For husbands and lovers called away;
Do those husbands and lovers never know
How the birthdays pass of loved ones below?
There are wives and sweethearts in realms of bliss;
Husbands and lovers! can no birthday kiss,
From lips as pure as an angel's prayer,
Be wafted to you from "just over there"?

Oh! let us be glad when our birthdays come;
Why should those be sad who are nearing home?
May not our beloved who have passed away
Hold a jubilee over each birthday?
And who can prove that they never come back,
Gift-laden with love, down the shining track
That leads from the heights which we long to gain,
To bring us their birthday greetings again?

THAT SELF-DENIAL DOLLAR.

BY NETTIE C. HALL, M. D.

It was a revelation. A few days ago our chieftain sent orders all along the line something like this: "Get the dollar the best way you can, every woman for herself."

I suppose time will never reveal the mental anxiety resultant upon that call. Friday evening the gathering of the clans overflowed a hospitable home, and not all were women and children, by any means.

After devotional exercise came the recital of deeds of heroism, self-sacrifice (and sometimes some other body sacrificed) and stick-to-a-tive-ness unparalleled in history, for these particular dollars were to be earned in some unusual way. Our vice-president encouraged the timid ones by her own story of denial in tea and coffee, dessert for dinner and cake for supper, which she acknowledged meant something. She finished with a day and a half of sewing, and we all knew she always hired a seamstress.

Mrs. West, who is a daily wage-earner, was much worried about how to make a dollar in an unusual way, so donated the one which she received in response to a summons before the grand jury. She told of her bewilderment and nervousness as she plodded to the courthouse in answer to that summons, entirely ignorant of its import, accompanied by her little boy, who cried bitterly when he was put out into the hall and the key turned that locked his mother in the jury-room—the only woman there. There she jumped at conclusions, and made haste to make confession to those jurymen how she had been accessory and abetter of her sister-in-law in cornering a certain prominent man of the town for the purpose of giving him a sound thrashing for selling intoxicants to that same brother-in-law. Firmly believing it was for this misdemeanor that she was summoned, Mrs. West waxed eloquent over the wrongs inflicted by the liquor traffic, and surpassed all of her previous platform efforts, especially as her interested audience seemed anxious to catch every word. You can imagine her dismay when the foreman said: "That is all news to us; tell us all about it," she mentally noting that curiosity was not peculiarly a feminine characteristic.

In fewer words she gave her testimony in regard to the real cause of her appearance there—another whisky case. While telling us about her strange encounter she decided to give a silver dollar and keep the county warrant that she received for her appearance as a witness—keep it as a relic of barbarism, a memento of the days when the law compelled a woman to stand helpless, while the key was turned that locked her in where the jury was composed entirely of men, and denied woman the right to sit in trial of her own sex. She gave also another dollar earned through a dare to secure a subscriber for a democratic paper, and made fifteen cents by asking a gentleman why his wife had refused to buy some of Mrs. Jackson's pie, especially when Mrs. Jackson bought some of his wife's candy. The answer developed a wonderful growth of generosity on the part of the latter from buying one pie and eating it all herself, to purchasing seven huge, delicious, lemon pies for the seminary.

Another member brought the tear of sympathy as she pathetically told of building the fire on Sunday morning, receiving twenty-five cents therefor, besides earning eighty-six cents by sewing and peddling candy from house to house. Master Traxler turned over fifteen cents for doing chores, while little Twinkle Arnold paid in a shining half dollar earned by reading a book through. Another dollar, a free-will offering, came from grandmother.

All hearts throbbed in sympathy as our minister's wife related her experience in milking the cow for the meagre pittance of twenty-five cents per week. A sweet wife had attempted to convince her husband that her cooking was "as good as mother's," and her hens helped her out on her dollar.

Mrs. Law had made a practical test of economy and saved her dollar; another collected a dollar from her husband on an old board bill he owed her, and still another gained well earned money by her pen. Small daily sacrifices distilled like the dew into another pocket-book. A little girl sold ocean sand. An honorary father earned his dollar by teaching the boys to clean their feet, while his wife went in search of sewing, and feared heart failure before the end—put a collar on a student's dress, ten cents; commission on making night robes for a professor in the college, ten cents (prospective); sewing on buttons and cleaning spots from his best coat (also prospective), result two dollars. A young lady patched her old sleeves instead of getting new ones. Mrs. Drake went without dinner when traveling, teased two of our state officers into giving her a donation, sold boutonnièrres, sewed buttons on the girl's shoes, patched trousers, etc. A little urchin became infected and blacked his father's shoes. A good mother and her daughter went into partnership and auctioned off historical specimens from groves and homes of authors, and shells from the seashore, to the amount of five dollars. But Mrs. Cox carried off the honors when she counted out five dollars and twenty-five cents, feelingly describing the parting between herself and a much-prized rooster which had laid down his life for the cause, and graced the table of one of our editors at his birthday feast; of her heroic struggles in peddling her lemon pies which finally went off in job lots.

As the brave little woman sat down, all covered with glory, and the rest of us in a flutter of excitement, her husband solemnly arose and startled the audience, especially the purchasers of the pies, by the assertion that the dollar that he gave was earned by hard, legitimate, honest labor, and not as in his wife's case, by selling a fifteen cent pie for twenty-five cents. Later developments revealed the fact that he had peddled some pies for his wife and had not received his pay.

A good time, a better acquaintance with one another, a renewed interest in our cause, and thirty-six dollars was the result of the experience meeting of the Pioneer W. C. T. U., Wessington Springs, South Dakota.

HOW PURITY OF WOMEN IS ENFORCED IN THE EAST.

[From a lecture in London by Dr. Kate Bushnell.]

When I went to China as a missionary I had the idea that but few women in that great empire were obliged to go through the torture that results in little feet. There are three hundred and fifty million inhabitants of that country of which one-half are women and girls, and I found to my horror that bound feet were the rule rather than the exception. Think what that means! All these millions of poor creatures compelled to hobble on feet that cannot bear them up! Their main subject of talk is generally after the following order: "Oh, how my feet ache! How tired I have been to-day. The pain has been greater than usual!"

The largeness of the sum that a man pays for his wife depends upon the smallness of her feet. It occurred to me to ask a Chinese man why they permitted women to undergo this misery; I asked him, "Why not have small feet yourselves?" the same answer is invariably given: "I want a virtuous wife and if she had not small feet she could gad about and I should not know where she was; she must be a keeper at home, she must be chaste!"

This is the measure of the public sentiment that says women must lead pure lives. It is sufficiently strong to mangle out of all human form or recognition the feet of these women, and the compression begins when they are only two or three years old.

We go to India and we find the women shut up; many of them have never seen a field, a flower, hardly a star. I asked the men of India why they do not let their wives go about. I said: "You enjoy doing so, why may not she?" And they answered just as the Chinese men did, "I am obliged to seclude my wife, I believe in chastity for women." You can measure the force of public opinion that says women must be chaste by the fifty millions of prisoners who have done no wrong to any one and yet by the invisible bars of this unchanging public sentiment are shut away from the bright world. That is not a weak sentiment that will hold fifty million adults in the position of life-long prisoners. But notwithstanding all this painstaking, misery, and captivity, the two nations of which I have spoken are most impure in thought, word and deed, and the world knows it well, for one-half the world cannot purify the other half; you cannot build up with one hand and tear down with the other.

Churches and ministers are telling us that women must be pure; well may we answer: "What thank have ye? What do ye more than others?" Other nations do as much as that, but no method which confines itself to one half the race will ever work out the salvation of the whole. Binding the feet and shutting the women into prisons are methods that set at nought the first principles of human rights. God is no respecter of persons. These nations declare that women must be pure, and yet it is a natural law that if men are not pure then women are destroyed, and children too. The man who is given up to his appetites is a slave in one sense, but a woman in two, because she is the man's slave as well as her own.

We owe it to pure men to make one standard for men and women; in every land the cause of woman turns upon that of man. If these things are true of the natives, what are we to say of English military men in India who, coming from the homes of the United Kingdom, say their prayers in church on Sunday, and then go out and provide by law for the legal zed supply of native women for the use of British soldiers. Surely Sodom and Gomorrah have been outdone in baseness by men who would sit in the purest homes talking on terms of equality with the best women, and considering themselves undoubted Christian gentlemen.

THE HABIT OF HAPPINESS.

BY ELIZABETH CUMINGS.

"Happiness is a habit," says Chateaubriand, and says Emerson, "Every spirit builds its own house, and beyond its house a world, and beyond its world a heaven."

Oddly enough one of the most delightful women I know is one who has endured bitter griefs, chagrins and burdens. A drunken husband was her first portion, and for twenty years she lived in daily dread of him. It is not necessary to particularize further. Save but once, and then but in brief explanation for an important change in the family, when sorrow had come upon her child, did she ever speak of her burdens to me. I know no one more deeply interested in the world, in all that it holds most precious, than she who all her life has been, save at rare intervals, deprived of most that the world holds dear. To meet her is to gain courage and inspiration, but she never went to college, and is not, I hesitate to say it, even a church member. I do not mean to indicate that she is not a religious woman. She is most profoundly religious, but use has not taught her that appearance of resignation which is sometimes the cover of something quite the opposite.

I might go on giving examples to prove that the brightest, and as we have happiness in this world, the happiest spirits I know, have been most tried, but this one is enough.

"When I get all out of sorts and think every one is having a good time but myself, I know that it is time for me to go out and rub up against some one," said a dear friend who had struggled against all sorts of odds to gain an art education.

We cannot all of us have great gifts, nor even good sized talents. Most of us must scrub through the world with average powers, or powers below the average, but the least of us can cultivate the habit of happiness. There are no mean things in this world if only we get at them in the right light. Cookery is chemistry. Washing dishes, scouring pans, washing and ironing garments and scrubbing floors are but labors in hygiene, germ destroying and purifying, as well as art work in a homely field. She who can afford exquisite cleanliness can afford an exquisite luxury, though she has not butter on her bread and her best gown is calico.

And the great troubles that cut to the heart may drain the heart of every sordid feeling and so uplift the spirit that the sufferer becomes Christlike and even as our Lord after His crucifixion. The two journeying to Emmaus did not know Him, but they "constrained Him to abide with them," and as He vanished they knew Him, and "that their hearts had burned within them as He talked with them by the way."

Dear friends, we may miss riches and fame and beauty, and relations that we might be proud of and could love, and ten to one we will miss opportunity to do the sort of work for which we are best fitted, but if we miss happiness, we have no one to blame but ourselves. If we have a miserable grumbly time of it, if "our house, our world, our heaven," are black, or that shade of brown which Ruskin hates, alas, our fingers put it on. Even the new version does not say, "The kingdom of Heaven is an environment," and the higher criticism does not offer any such balm to the unfortunate and unappreciated. "The kingdom of Heaven is within us," or for us it is nowhere.

A SUGGESTION.

She had lingered long by the window pane
And watched, with her childish, impatient eyes,
The countless drops of the falling rain
And the leaden, relentless skies.

At length, when the dreary day was done,
She told her thoughts in the twilight gray;
"You know there's a bureau in Washington
Where the weather is stored away.

"And when it's so stormy and cold and wet,
I wonder what they are thinking about
Not to open some other drawer and get
A different weather out!"

THREE "FRESH AIRS."

BY ELIZABETH E. BACKUP.

"This will be the first trip to the country of the three little waifs whom we shall send you this year. They live in the North End of the city near an ancient burying ground, which they imagine to be just like the country, all but the graves. Two of the children are brother and sister and the second boy lives in the same house. The latter, Tim, is something of a terror, but Kathie is a wise little thing and I think she will keep him in order."

The above is a quotation from a letter which reached a pleasant farmhouse among the Vermont hills late one evening in July. Gentle little Mrs. Baldwin read the letter with a troubled face.

"What is the matter, mother?" said her husband, "you don't look as pleased as usual. I thought you would be real tickled."

"We've always had girls, you know, father, and I fear these boys will be hard to manage. We want to do good, but we are elderly people and we can't afford to have our house turned upside down."

"Don't worry, dear," said Mr. Baldwin, soothingly, "the boys may prove to be quite lamblike, and if they need to be trained, why just call upon Roxy," and Mr. Baldwin nodded good-naturedly in the direction of a tall spinster who was listening with an air of grim disapproval.

"It's mighty foolish business folkses puttin' themselves to so much trouble for a set of little ragamuffins," said Roxy, "and you've no call for to do it."

"Softly, softly, Roxy," said Mr. Baldwin, "you forget about the inasmuch verse—'Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me.' You'll be just as glad as anybody to do for the children, Roxy, when once they're here."

As they knelt in prayer that night Mr. Baldwin asked that a special blessing might rest upon the three little ones so soon to form a portion of their household, and then he prayed for the poor and the distressed the world over, and that the hearts of the Lord's people might be enlarged that they might gladly engage in sweet and gracious ministries in His name. Roxy's face looked almost gentle as she hurried into the kitchen after the prayer. When the children arrived they received a most cordial welcome, although Roxy looked at the boys so sharply that they were evidently quite awed.

"It's best to be up and comin' with them in the first place," Roxy had remarked to Mrs. Baldwin.

Kathie, a brown-faced little maiden of ten, whose eyes seemed to have more than their proportionate share of the thin face, won all hearts at once.

"Now, she's a child as is a child," said Roxy, approvingly; "looks as if she hadn't eaten a square meal in a month, though," she added, compassionately.

Whether the supper which the children indulged in that night could be appropriately styled either square or round it is certain that Roxy plied the youngsters with food as if their stomachs were made of India rubber, until good Mrs. Baldwin in alarm privately begged her to desist.

"I thought I'd fill them up for once," said Roxy.

"But you don't want to make the poor little things sick," replied Mrs. Baldwin.

When Tim and Johnny were ushered into the large and airy room over the "setting-room," their amazement was tempered with awe.

"Fine, ain't it?" said Tim. "Makes me feel sort of lonesome though, it's so big."

"I want to sleep with Kathie," said five-year-old Johnny, with a forlorn whine.

"Poh, be a little man!" said Roxy. "Kathie is to be close by in the little hall bedroom, and the doors can be left open between."

The boys inspected Kathie's room and Kathie in turn inspected theirs, and soon the tired children were snugly tucked away in bed.

"Kathie, yer there?" called Johnny two or three times before he went to sleep.

"Right here, dear," Kathie's sweet voice replied.

"I say, Kath," said Tim, in sleepy tones, "if they pass 'round any more grub 'fore mornin' just wake me up."

Roxy, who was hovering near, laughed softly.

"A few boys like Tim would be enough to create a famine," she told herself.

It was late when Roxy washed the milk-pails that night.

"I was afraid the children would be homesick, so I stayed up-stairs awhile," she said to Mrs. Baldwin, apologetically.

"Roxy broods over those despised 'ragamuffins' like a hen over her chickens," was Mr. Baldwin's amused comment.

"Roxy's bark is always worse than her bite," Mrs. Baldwin replied.

The morning light brought a pleasant air of excitement to the little household. Tim had ventured forth alone, and came in to breakfast ravenous and bursting with a desire to announce several important discoveries.

"Say, Kath," he said, "where do folks get milk?"

"From cows," said Kathie, meekly.

"Poh, who told you?" inquired the disappointed Tim. "I never knew afore that milk had anything to do with cows."

Tim's unfeigned astonishment over the process of milking had quite convulsed Mr. Baldwin's hired man.

Kathie seemed to possess a sense of the fitness of things deplorably lacking in the two boys, and her gentle efforts to restrain them were appreciated by the older members of the household. Tim especially was irrepressible. His favorite formula for calling attention to his needs was: "I say, Missis, give me"—specifying some article of food, heedless of Kathie's oft-repeated whispers suggesting the propriety of using the word "please."

"Look here, youngster," said Roxy one day, her patience quite exhausted, "is this the way you behave at home? Where's your manners?"

"D'yer s'pose I sets at a table to home when I eats?" asked Tim, scornfully. "Ruther guess not. I just takes my bread an' 'lasses an' goes out an' sets on the curbstone."

"Poor little heathen!" said Roxy to Mrs. Baldwin. "How can we expect first-class table manners from a boy who has been accustomed to making a table of the street curbstone."

"Kathie puzzles me more than Tim," said Mrs. Baldwin. "That child always behaves with the utmost decorum."

"She takes to polite ways as naturally as a duck takes to the water," said Roxy. "Which only shows that good manners ain't altogether a mere outside veneer, but depend upon somethin' inside of a body."

The fortnight passed all too quickly to the happy children. Kathie's face grew round and rosy, and she made friends with every living creature on the place. Gyp, the big dog, followed her about with loverlike devotion, and Peter and Jack, the feline members of the household, showed their affection by rubbing against her and purring whenever she appeared.

"I wish Johnny and I could stay always," said Kathie, as she hid her face in Gyp's shaggy coat the day of her departure.

"I wish you could," said Mrs. Baldwin, with unconscious emphasis. "Would your folks let us keep you?"

"Mother couldn't spare me," said Kathie earnestly. "You see I have ter dress Bob an' take 'im to the nursery every mornin', an' I have ter help Johnny, he goes to kindergarten, you know, an' I washes dishes an' does lots of things 'fore school time. Mother says she don't know what she'd do 'thout me."

"No wonder," said Mrs. Baldwin.

When Mr. Baldwin drove away with the children, Kathie threw kisses to Mrs. Baldwin and Roxy until a turn in the road hid them from her sight. A few days later Mrs. Baldwin received a note from Kathie written in a cramped, child's hand.

"When I Kneals to pray," wrote Kathie, "I never forgets you or Rocksy or Mr. Baldwin, and I am trying to be a Good, Obedient Child just as you telled me. I cried just a little bit in the Cars, but I gess it warn't naughty. Nobody saw me cept God; the boys were lookin out the winder. I sends my best love to Rocksy and Mr. Baldwin and you, and to Jip and Peter and Jack and to Everybody Else, and I thank you all fur your kindness to me and Johnny and Tim. I kiss my Hand to you. KATHIE."

"Bless her dear little heart!" said Mrs. Baldwin, with tears in her eyes.

"I'll own up," said Roxy, "you did a lovely thing when you took them children. That Kathie more'n made up for all the trouble of them pesky boys."

"If possible we'll have the same children another summer," said Mr. Baldwin, "and we have the comfort of knowing that Kathie will be a sort of guardian angel to Johnny and Tim without having the slightest idea that she is acting in so important a capacity."—The Congregationalist.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—As you sit in hammocks or in outdoor porches this summer weather, you find yourselves little inclined to think, I know. But in spite of that I am going to ask you one or two puzzling questions, and hope that many a hand will go up and many a letter will come to Aunt Jane bearing an answer.

In England, you know, they celebrate the 24th day of May as a national holiday because it is—what? In America we celebrate the Fourth of July—how many can tell me why? And in France, the great day of the year is July 14, because—?

How many, I wonder, can tell me what is the most important day of the year to the white-ribbon army? I shall expect to receive a host of answers to this last question.

Ever yours,

Aunt Jane

NEPHEWS AND NIECES.

I am seven years old. My grandma reads the Cozy Corner to me and I think it very nice. I wish something would happen to the brewery and distillery in our city,—wheels break, or something, for I don't think they ought to make beer or liquor of any kind.

Upper Alton, Ill. WARREN H. LEVERETT.

We want the machinery in all such "factories" to turn to better uses, and we are all working to that end, Warren.

Last autumn we moved away from the town where we lived about forty miles. It was a very small place, but nevertheless we had a Band of Hope and a Christian Endeavor society. I am a member of both. About three weeks ago I went down there to visit, and went to the Christian Endeavor meeting. They have about eighty members. Hoping to join your Cozy Corner,

RAY L. HUBBARD.

Christian Endeavorers—who are "solid for temperance", you know—are welcome always in the Cozy Corner.

I will try to write to the Cozy Corner, for I have never written to it before. I am a little girl ten years old. I like to read Cozy Corner letters. Papa says that if he goes to the World's Fair he will take a bottle along and fetch me a drink of water from the Willard fountain. I enclose a dime for the fountain fund. MATTIE E. YEO.

Lexington, Neb.

I trust the fountain will be ready and running when your papa comes, Mattie, but the delays about it seem to be endless and unavoidable.

Mamma reads the Cozy Corner letters to me. I like them and I thought I would write too. I belong to the L. T. L. and like it. I am going to Chicago this summer, and want to see the Willard fountain and the Temple and Fair. LUCIA MAY CARTER.

CO-OPERATION OF THE RELIGIOUS PRESS WITH WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE WORK.

Coöperation has a pleasant sound, for it signifies harmony of mind as well as unity of action. The tower of Babel did not commemorate more diversity of tongues than does the World's Columbian Exposition diversity of forces in unity of action. Individual effort may strengthen the doer but not the deed. One hundred people working alone to the same end will accomplish less than ten people working jointly to that end.

The value of coöperation consists not only in securing the desired end more quickly, but in securing that harmonious union of minds which alone renders intelligent coöperation possible. The natural tendency of the multiplication of societies, departments and agencies is to exaggerate the importance of each in the minds of its adherents. This is very well up to a certain point; then with the experience gained as specialists, if the correlated interests would unite and work jointly towards a common end, what forceful results would accrue!

As long as there are so many angles of vision and such varying temperaments, there will be friction unless the supremacy of the object to be obtained is made dominant. Then the ways and means will sink beneath the principle to be secured. When there is a fire to be put out, there is not apt to be much discussion as to the means used; each one contributes his most valuable extinguisher.

Have the religious press and woman's temperance work common interests? If so, how can they coöperate to extinguish the fire fiend of drink?

As the medium of expressing current Christian and philanthropic thought, the religious press is unique and peerless. It is the only common channel for the purely devotional and ennobling, hence, it is to an extent the common property of all Christians. True philanthropy finds here its natural home, and as one of the best organized and most wide-reaching philanthropies, woman's temperance work asks for coöperation from the religious press.

Woman's work for temperance in organized form is now approaching the end of its second decade. The spontaneous and God-inspired Crusade, which originated at the close of the year 1873 (December 23), in Hillsboro, O., and swept the middle states with the resistless force of a prairie fire, formulated the next year into a delegated National body of women which sat in convention for three days at Cleveland, Ohio (November 17–19, 1874). At the very first meeting the power of the press was recognized and the following recommendation, written by Miss Willard, adopted:

Resolved, That we seek permission to edit a column in the interests of temperance in every newspaper in the land, and in all possible ways enlist the secular press in this reform; but in this conflict of moral ideas, we look to the religious press as one of our strongest earthly allies, and we will endeavor to increase the interest in our cause already manifested by this powerful instrumentality.

It was early felt that a society so broad and comprehensive as the Woman's Christian Temperance Union must have its own press, and for eighteen years we have had our official organ, first called the Woman's Temperance Union, later, Our Union, and later still THE UNION SIGNAL. Then a publishing house was established and leaflets ad libitum have been printed and circulated. State organs, bearing chiefly the name "White-Ribboner," already number thirty. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union has not failed to recognize the "power of the press" by establishing its own press agencies. All this is well, but an immense field is still untouched. Our literature reaches our clientele chiefly; we want recognition from and association with other Christian work and workers.

Woman's temperance work is a Christian work, and as such has a place in the Christian church. The religious press is one of the most powerful levers of the Christian church. There is not a pastor who does not believe this, nor a religious editor who does not recognize it. Through the religious press, woman's temperance work can best reach the church where it belongs, for its members are also church members. Tracts and leaflets serve as ephemeral expedients; they have not the influence of a newspaper column, because the fascinating editorial "we" casts a mysterious glamour over the entire paper, and because the regular visits of a religious newspaper add dignity to and command respect for the printed page.

One of the greatest propagating agencies of the church is missions, and as such the religious press gives them every encouragement, devoting often columns of space to reports and editorial paragraphs of indorsement, even issuing, occasionally, entire numbers devoted to special missionary meetings. This is fitting, and none rejoice more than temperance women, for theirs, too, is a missionary work, and they know how effective such recognition is. But the temperance women also have great meetings, holding aloft the banner of Christ, the church, and the home. Do the great religious papers give us special issues? We are profoundly grateful for the recognition given to our annual meetings by religious newspapers (usually a two or three-column report), but we believe that if they knew our loyalty to every interest of the church and the home, as well as our belief in Christian journalism, they would freely give us more than that; aye, we believe the editors-in-chief would make a point of attending our great conventions, and extracting therefrom seed-thoughts for editorials and contributions.

Some would declare that the reason why the religious press has so much news of mission work, and so little of temperance is because the latter "has politics in it" and the former has not. Well, if missions do not get a little "politics" in soon in order to stop the foreign rum traffic, there will be no more missions in Africa, at least, for the heathen will all be killed off by strong drink. This accursed drink, sent from a Christian country in the same vessel that carries Christian missionaries, naturally impresses the poor, darkened heathen mind as one of two desirable Christian products. Christian civilization cast up the highway over which the gospel might be carried to those who do not know its blessed truths. Along this very highway, side by side with the missionary, creeps the crafty trader, whose cargo is soul-destroying rum.

Yea, verily, the temperance mission is the greatest of all missions, for in every drink-cursed nation (and where can any other be found!) temperance must be the forerunner of every other mission. It must "prepare the way"—clear the befogged brain and create a desire for a sober Christian life.

But how much politics is there in our temperance work? One resolution out of twenty or more each year, indorsing that political party which aims to protect the home against its worst enemy—the liquor traffic. We do not ask the religious press to print that resolution unless it chooses, for there are the wide fields of our educational endeavor, scientific temperance instruction, as well as our social and reformatory efforts along purely gospel lines.

Hosts of readers of religious journals are members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and these papers would be doubly dear to them if they contained good words for and news of a work which is very close to their hearts. In would be an advantage to these papers to place woman's temperance work on a parallel with woman's missionary and educational work, for anything that broadens the horizon of religious endeavor furnishes fresh material and multiplies the necessity for religious journalism.

It is scarcely necessary to suggest methods to editors who generally know how to get everything they want. What we desire is to cause them to want temperance news and then they will get it. The prevailing method with the religious press is to cull from strictly temperance papers a column or so (generally in narrow measure, and a short column, too,) of brief paragraphs relative to the general progress of the cause. That is vastly better than no mention, but we suggest that by the time this "news" gets into type the second, or perchance the third time, it is pretty stale "news," and a good many readers recognize a familiar look about it. News is news but once; in order to secure it as news, it must come directly from the field. Temperance women are becoming most acceptable writers, and they would gladly furnish such matter to their chosen church papers, at "regular rates," or gratuitously, if there are no "rates."

It has been easier to place temperance items in the secular press, because the frequency of publication provides more space, and because "patent insides" make their multiplication more feasible. Through four of the largest newspaper agencies, and through local Woman's Christian Temperance Unions, some twenty million readers of the secular press are furnished with temperance news. These facilities are not always available to the religious press, so the press superintendent of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union prepares a bulletin of fresh temperance items twice every month to send particularly to the church papers. Any editor desiring such matter can secure it by indicating his desire on a postal card addressed to Miss L. E. Reed, 66½ North Penn street, Indianapolis, Ind.

More temperance stories would also be acceptable. Fiction is a palatable and an effective form of instruction, and it requires no great stretch of the fancy to produce temperance facts so that they sound like fiction. The weirdest romances and the wildest tragedies abound in this field.

Abstractly, the subject can be most efficiently treated in the editorial columns, and we rejoice that so many journals do thus treat it. All honor to the Christian at Work for placing at the head of its reform union subjects the "liquor problem."

Is there any reason why "woman's temperance work" should not be a distinct department of Christian journalism? Is there any other class of Christian readers more desirous for the success of the religious press? Is there any other field of Christian activity engaging so many Christian women? Is there any other body of Christian workers that give more allegiance to their Christ and their church? One of the finest tributes the W. C. T. U. has ever been paid was delivered at the recent Woman's Congress by a recognized Christian leader, Mary Lowe Dickinson, as follows:

"That the Woman's Christian Temperance Union sits to-day, sceptered and throned and crowned at the center of the world's encircling organizations of women, is not so much because its battle is against the foe of childhood and motherhood and the home; not because its grand crusade is one of rescue to lost manhood; not because of its hundreds of thousands in numbers, or the multiplied agencies of its numerous departments of human helpfulness, as it is because it has struck this one chord to which the hearts of women answer. It made a union. That was great. It made a Temperance union. That was greater. It made a Woman's Temperance Union, and that was greatest. But it made a Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and that, and that alone, made greatness in any degree possible to all the rest. Nay, I dare go even further. I venture to say that not even such masterly and magnificent leadership as this white-ribbon army has known, could have borne its victorious banner to the gate of every welcoming nation or have lifted the towers of yon fair Temple to the sky, had not the hearts of the women of the world been already the temples of the living God. It was the voice of Christ that called together the white-haired and the white-souled women of that first crusade, and it is the Christ in the Union, the Christ in the Temperance and the Christ in the Women that has been, in all this movement, the secret and source of its success and power."

We are grateful for what has been done. If space already granted for news were valued at only fifteen cents a line—the lowest practicable rate—the amount contributed to woman's temperance work by the religious press would be a magnificent donation. But we do not want to count it on a money basis; we want to feel that our work is "part and parcel" of the work of the great church of God, and as such deserves a place in the mouthpiece of that church—the religious press.

A SIDE-LIGHT ON THE WOMAN QUESTION.

A recent article in a Parisian review discusses the relation of women to the French Republic. The writer claims to have noted the attitude of French women and his judgment is that at least three out of four distrust the Republic. The majority of men, he says, have "embraced the Republic without enthusiasm, but without a thought of changing their minds, convinced that the Republic is the form of government which suits best our country and our time." Not so the women; professing to take no interest in politics, the ironical smile or other indication of disdain with which they receive the praises of the founders of the Republic show that they are by no means without opinions on the subject.

The reason for this attitude of French women adduced by the writer is the one which will naturally present itself to every one, the exclusion of women from outside life which always has made them slow to accept anything new in the political or social structure. The writer shows that the entire life of men outside of their homes draws them towards equality, while on the contrary, "Women of different conditions in life are as much separated to-day as they were on the eve of the Revolution." He concludes by considering whether or not it makes any difference what French women think of the French Republic, since they have no political rights and answers the question thus, "They do not vote, it is true, but they represent in French society, more, perhaps, than in any other, one of those moral forces which some day or other government will have to take into account. . . . . This woman, this mother, whom you have treated coldly, is nothing to all outward appearance in the state; she is everything, if, slowly, surely, she acts on the mind of her sons and causes them to be averse to you. It is much to have on your side the half plus one of the voters, but that is not all. The Republic will not be definitely founded until the women shall be in favor of it."

This condition of things as pictured in France is true, to a greater or less degree, everywhere. No one, we think, will question that, deprive her of suffrage, load her with all the political disabilities you may, woman is still a political power, a "moral force which some day or other government is obliged to take into account." This being true, the part of wisdom is to inquire how to render her political power helpful to society and the state. The answer to this in the past has been to divest her of it just as far as possible; to leave her no opportunity which can by any means be wrested from her of making herself felt in the social and political organism. This has been tried long enough so that we should be able to judge of its effects, and these are in truth given in the article we have under consideration. "More than man does she live in the past, more than man she is faithful to her memories and beliefs. She has in general but little inclination for new beliefs and distrusts them from instinct." This means that woman is, and always will be, under a system which excludes her from politics, a dead weight on the forward march of humanity just in proportion as she is excluded.

In India, where this exclusion is carried to the extent of making her a mere thing, and a most disreputable thing at that, we see the complete, the perfected fruit of this doctrine. That the results are not so bad in such countries as our own is only because the system is not fully and logically carried out. Conservatism is an excellent thing in its place, but God has implanted the principle strongly enough in human nature to carry out its purposes. We have no need to so artificially arrange the environment of one half of the race as to make them far behind the other half in their grasp of new ideas. A conservatism which makes woman a dead weight to be dragged forward, a clog under the wheels of progress is a conservatism which is a curse to every one concerned. All experience, past and present, shows conclusively that the only way in which any class of people can be made to take an active, intelligent interest in anything is to engage them in active participation in that subject. Women will be, according to their measure, wise and intelligent factors in political and social questions when they become active participators in social and political affairs. Rather, we may say, women are becoming wise and intelligent factors in these problems, for they are rapidly becoming active participators in every part of our complicated social structure.

A NEW VIEW OF SPELLING REFORM.

An interesting and valuable article on "The Spelling of Words," by D. H. Wheeler, LL.D., appeared in the Western Christian Advocate for June 7. The discussion places the subject of spelling reform in a new light, and is well worth considering. The points emphasized are these: That written and spoken language are essentially different, and it is hopeless to seek to make them one. "They are as different as the two senses to which they are addressed." Even if written language should be made to approximately represent the spoken it could not long do so, as the spoken language is constantly changing, while the written is comparatively permanent. This leads to the second point, that this permanence of the written form alone makes literature possible. "Homer is now known to the ear hardly at all. The permanence of the written forms is our security for the continued existence of Homer."

Dr. Wheeler says that English spelling has indeed changed much, but that such changes have been attended with incalculable loss. "Chaucer is dead for us, less through change in the meaning than through change in the writing of words."

No one can fail to recognize the truth and feel the force of this presentation of the case; in its light, phonetic spelling becomes a very different thing from that which it commonly appears. We have been in the habit of regarding spelling reform from the point of view of ease of acquiring the written form of our mother tongue. From this standpoint it has seemed absurd that t-o-n-g-u-e should spell tongue, while s-u-n-g spelt sung; that s-a-i-d should spell said, and r-e-a-d as well as r-e-d should spell red; that o-u-g-h should spell ow, off, o and uff, according to what letter happens to precede the above-mentioned combination. From the point of view presented so clearly by Dr. Wheeler, it becomes apparent that permanent correspondence between the written and the spoken forms of language can be obtained only in one of two ways, either the written must change constantly with the spoken or the spoken must assume the rigidity of the written. Neither of these is possible; both of them are most undesirable. The one would make literature impossible; the other would destroy the power and beauty of spoken language, would consign our flexible, forceful English, the most perfect language, which, so far as we know, has ever yet been developed, to a living grave. While still spoken, it would be in truth a "dead" language.

We believe that some change of our spelling is desirable, even necessary, for the divergence between the spoken and the written language has about reached the limit, but we very seriously doubt the desirability of any such radical reform as is urged by the advocates of phonetic spelling. It seems to us very clear that the same causes which make the written form and the spoken form of the same language so different that "one may know either and not know the other" are also the causes which give to written language permanence, making literature possible, and give to spoken language all of its value as a medium of conveying thought between living human beings. Compared with these objects, the matter of convenience, which is all that is to be gained by uniformity between the written and the spoken language, dwindles into insignificance.

A MINISTER in Chicago recently said that Chicago has eight thousand saloons, eighty per cent of which are owned or managed by brewers, and brewers have gone into politics. Upwards of half a million men in the United States alone are engaged in the industry of making paupers and beggars. The malt liquors consumed in the United States in 1892 averaged about half a barrel to a man. Carroll D. Wright, our greatest statistician, says that seventy-two per cent of the crimes in Boston are liquor crimes. In the fifteen largest cities in the land, seventy-three per cent of all arrests are for drunkenness or for drink offenses. Terrence V. Powderly says that one-fifth of the drink bill of the nation is paid by the working man. In New York City alone its aggregate is fifteen million dollars a year. One county in Pennsylvania, chiefly habited by working men, pays eleven million dollars a year out of the pockets of the miserable. In 1891 the amount of liquor drunk averaged twelve and twenty-five cents a head. If these things are so what manner of persons ought we to be?

A STRAW cannot bear the strain to which a rope is equal; a rope cannot bear the strain that an iron bar can meet; and so some natures fail in the time of imminent danger. They had not the staying qualities, they lacked the power of resistance; for this they were not to blame, but a wise leader looks out before he puts such as these on guard, even as the ship-builder tests his material. Pine is a beautiful wood, but we do not put it in the hull of a ship, we want "heart of oak" to hold us safe against the thumping waves, and in every great reform the sifting process must go on, the assorting of materials, and, alas, ofttimes such a testing as threatens to cause disaster before we know just how much pressure different fractions can endure that are being combined in the great totality of the ship that shall carry the Union over to its better heritage, its promised land of a clear brain, a steady, beating heart, and a hand that does not tremble. We must not be impatient with those who fit us out with motives such as they would probably have had in a similar contingency. It is natural for ambitious men to cry "Ambitious!" when they note the progress of women up the hill difficulty, singly or in platoons. To call any one of these "a crank," "an old lady," or "an old maid," is the easiest sort of writing for a routine journalist, and the only affliction that it brings to those for whom it is intended is its utter barrenness of wit, brightness or originality.

The following couplet from a Salvation Army song is most pathetic and suggestive as rendered by the sisters of the poke bonnet:

"I must be what I ought to be,
To bring sinners home."

It has been well said that just as the liar's punishment is not so much that he is not believed as that he cannot believe any one else, so a guilty society can more easily be persuaded that any apparently innocent act is guilty than that any apparently guilty act is innocent. In like manner, the penalty of putting an uncharitable construction on the words and acts of other people is that this becomes a habit, and one loses the charm of living because he cannot trust his fellow mortals, and without the power to do this life becomes a burden.

Dr. Kate Bushnell has justly said that as it was only by confounding the languages of the earth that man was prevented from building a tower to heaven, so it has been with women, for this is not so much a physical as a spiritual truth. Women are now saying, "We never understood each other so well as we do in these days." There is a heart language that they are learning in every nation, and nothing can stand before the sisterhood of woman that is now growing up around the world.

To love God is to love His character. For instance, God is purity. And to be pure in thought and look, to turn away from unhallowed books and conversation, to abhor the moments in which we have not been pure, is to love God. God is Love; and to love men till private attachments have expanded into a philanthropy which embraces all, at last even the evil and enemies with compassion, that is to love God. God is Truth. To be true, to hate every form of falsehood, to live a brave, true, real life,—that is to love God. God is infinite; and to love the boundless, reaching on from grace to grace, adding charity to faith, and rising upwards ever to see the Ideal still above us, and to die with it unattained, aiming insatiably to be perfect even as the Father is perfect, that is to love God.—F. W. Robertson.

Jean Ingelow, a plump little woman without the traditional characteristics of the poet, is wont to say with a rueful smile, "All the people that see me are disappointed, and they do not so much as take the trouble to conceal it."

Mrs. Sidney Webb was brought up a near neighbor to the famous philosopher, Herbert Spencer. "He brought me up," she said, "and set me going. There were seven of us children in the school room together. He always contended that there should be no authority; that individualism involved independent development, so he told my mother that she ought to have no authority over us, and gave my governess the same instruction—his rule was, 'Do just as you like.' One day he invited us to go walking with him in the forest and our governess said, 'Remember you are to do just as you like.' So we planned a practical joke and all seven of us asked him to carry our jackets, then when we came to hollows in the woods we filled our arms with dead leaves and flung them on him, making his life so miserable that when he returned he was in a high state of excitement, and going to my mother's boudoir he stammered out as he used when provoked, 'Your children—are—rude!' with great emphasis."

When we have learned that God cannot be separated from the lives and the needs of His children; when we have learned that He made the world beautiful because He loves beauty; when we have learned that we are alone children of God when we bear light and gladness and beauty to others; and that although the outward beauty of the universe is but a type of the "beauty of holiness" which is the birthright of each child of God, yet it is still a type which aids us in attaining the real substance, then we shall be able to estimate more perfectly than we can to-day just what is the place and what the worth of our flower mission work. Our Jennie Casseday doubtless understands it more perfectly than when she guided the work in the flesh. May we not feel that she is guiding it in the spirit still, and that the glory of the flowers of heaven has not caused her to forget the beauty of those of earth; nor the music of its songs dulled her ear to all memory of that "song in the night" which rises from earth's stricken ones, to whom our flower mission, whose anniversary is June 9, so gladly ministers "In His Name"?

ON DUTY.

THE BEAUTY OF THE IDEAL.

BY HESTER M. POOLE.

That woman who is destitute of imagination is unworthy of womanhood. Not to be able to fashion an ideal of beauty of excellence, of transcendent goodness and loveliness, is indeed to be poverty stricken.

One day a charming woman entered the studio of an artist. It was large, low and rudely constructed. Here and there were plaster casts of arms and feet and bits of sculpture. By a northern window was a heap of wet clay, and beside it the artist was at work. Everywhere was the unfinished handiwork of the eager, creative poet of the chisel.

Mincingly the dainty woman lifted her skirts and approached the rough, bearded man in his working blouse. "Is this the famous sculptor G—," inquired she, superciliously.

"Men call me that," he modestly replied.

"I wanted you to make a copy of my head," said she. "I have seen such and such statues," she continued, naming them, "and they pleased me. But, dear me! This looks discouraging. I find only ugliness here. How can you make anything worth looking at out of this clay and that rough marble?"

"Madam," replied the sculptor with flashing eye, "you do me too much honor. Probably I could not suit your ladyship. I do not wish to try."

"But tell me," she went on, "tell me how you can bring order out of chaos, beauty out of deformity? There is nothing finished here."

"Madam, you perceive this huge block of marble. Now as I look at it I see an exquisite woman imbedded in the senseless stone. She is perfect; she is faultless, from crown to soul. Her limbs, her contour, are like strains of sweetest melody. Her mien is incarnate dignity and purity. Her face is radiant with intellect and feeling. No chiseled figure ever embodied so many graces.

"She is there imprisoned in the unresponsive block. To me she is so much more perfect than even you, madam," bowing low, "that I forget there is chaos and dust and gloom in my studio. You see only the external. I see the interior possible perfection."

Even so to every person there is an imprisoned ideal, and every thought and act is a tiny chisel stroke to set it free. Day by day the soundless work goes on, day by day are the rough outlines toned down, so that the statue approaches nearer the pattern set by the secret aspiration.

We may not even know the fashion of that pattern; we are unconscious of the vital touches that are invisibly made. For we, ourselves, look from out the marble with unseeing eyes. The shining ideal of ourselves, like all things spiritual, is subtle and elusive. Worth has not fashioned it. In no spring model is there a suggestion of what it must be like. Only the angels know how lovely it is. Only they can see the toil, the patience, the persistence and maybe, the anguish, that go into the modeling and the polishing of our ideal selves.

From them must be chipped away pride and folly, selfishness and sloth. Yet there shall be left all those energies and graces which give roundness and symmetry to those noble proportions inherent in the least of the children of God.

And no two ideals shall be alike. All imitations are failures. Among the most wonderful things in this wonderful world is this, that the Infinite Artist never threw two pictures exactly similar upon the screen of eternity. Here and there are melodic resemblances; they are thrown into groups and families, but never duplicated. You will just be you, and I shall be I. In the great anthem of the ages there shall be as many instruments in the harmony as there are individuals. That, itself, is an overwhelming thought.

But to the Ideal. Let us set that high, clear and pure, above the mists and shadows of this twilight world of sense. Toward the outline of something shall we work, either consciously or unconsciously. Shall it not be toward perfection?

It is not easy to do. Pleasures allure, vanity distracts, sensuous ease invites to repose. Always there may be "The little pitted speck in garnered fruit,

That, rotting inward, slowly moulders all."

On the other hand there are keen delights for the faithful toiler. To climb is hard, but the ideal stands on the mountain top. There the air is clear, the views supernal. Over the lower land what clouds and mists there are; what wide sweeps of vision; what glorious glimpses of humanity's future; what a sense of fitness, of symmetry, of proportion. Ah! it is worth while to set the ideal high upon the mountain peaks and go on climbing!

Yet must that ideal be pictured true to the inherent aptitude. You may not be a poet—I cannot be an orator. But we can each do something and do it well. Some one has said:

"Many spend their lives in unsuccessful efforts to spin the flax God sends them upon a wheel they can never use. The man who was made to bear Roxbury Russets and yet undertakes to bear roses and magnolias will always fail. Blessed is he who knows his own distaff and has found his own spindle!"

How often we hear it said: "He is so impractical. He is only a dreamer."

Ah! but for these dreamers how much poorer would be this world of ours. It is the dreamer who sees the pattern set for those blindly immured in the senses, and, in whatever way he can find expression, describes to these others the holiness of ideal beauty and loveliness. The reformer is only a poet and a painter of the hidden excellence of man. He is the avant-courier of the new day when Wisdom and Love shall be the only rulers.

So felt the prophetic soul of Adelaide Procter when she wrote:

Nothing resting in its own completeness
Can have worth or beauty; but alone,
Because it leads and tends to further sweetness
Fuller, higher, deeper than its own.

Life is only bright when it proceedeth
Towards a truer, deeper life above,
Human love is sweetest when it leadeth
To a more divine and perfect love.

Nor dare we blame God's gifts for incompleteness,
In that their strife for beauty lies; they roll
Toward some infinite depth of love and sweetness
Bearing onward man's reluctant soul.

The imaging quality, then, is one of man's most precious possessions. What a dull, cold, miserably impoverished world would this be were it deprived of ideality! In fact, it could not have existed at all unless the Great Designer had imaged it, "in the beginning," with all its crudity and all its possibilities.

He could not have made it perfect, to begin with. It had to work toward completion, just as Miss Procter's lovely verse has indicated. And can it be termed irreverence to think of the Divine mind picturing the long, slow, majestic procession of the ages, the development of mankind, the triumph of mind over matter, of goodness over evil? I think not. For, as we are made in His image, it is true that the infinitely grand and beautiful in conception which outrolled from the mind of the Father, must be now and forever taking form and becoming actual.

Through the clang and jargon, through the inharmony and the discord, runs an undertone of joy and triumph. At last,

"Ever shall right be uppermost
And ever be justice done."

Unconscious, it may be, of the philosophy, every true poet and musician and artist has told it in words or in rhythm, or upon the canvas. To make the ideal the real, is the beauty and the duty of all lives:

Therefore, O worker for thy fellows,
Faint not by the way!

Thou art allied with all the forces of nature and the powers of goodness. Though thy body becomes dust, thy soul shall see the fulfillment of thy ideal!

"Not in vain the distance beckons, Forward, forward, let us range, Let the great world spin forever down the ringing grooves of change."

In conclusion let us listen to these thoughts of Harriet Beecher Stowe, whose pen is now silent because of the decrepitude of age, but whose words will live forever:

"Every impulse of beauty, of heroism, and every craving for purer love, fairer perfection, nobler type and style of being than that which closes like a prison wall around us, in the dim, daily walk of life, is God's breath, God's impulse, God's reminder to the soul that there is something higher, sweeter, purer, yet to be attained.

"Therefore, man or woman, when thy ideal is shattered, as shattered a thousand times it must be, when the vision fades, the rapture burns out, turn not away in bitterness. But rather cherish the revelations of these hours as prophecies and foreshadowings of something real and possible yet to be attained in the manhood of immortality. Still give thanks to God that you have had one glimpse of heaven. Treasure it as the highest honor of your being that even you could so feel, that so divine a guest ever possessed your soul."

Metuchen, N. J.

CONNECTICUT.

SUMMER NEWS.

Our little state, not heard from for some time, is still actively at work in the good cause. County conventions, group meetings and a Y conference have all been held, and summer meetings, picnics and the state mass-meeting at Willimantic are now being planned. The grand struggle for a better law to secure scientific temperance teaching in the public school has been passed through, and to our energetic, never-tiring state president, Mrs. Forbes, and our indefatigable National advocate, Mrs. Hunt, is due unlimited commendation for the work they have done and the result they have brought about. The story of the fight is one of those unwritten histories, known only to God and the few, but the influence of it—who can measure it—only time can show.

To many this measure may seem of small importance, but to our women it means much, that the children in our public schools, and that includes, with small exceptions, all our youth, shall be conscientiously and thoroughly taught concerning the effects of alcoholic beverages and tobacco upon the system. Possibly it is a small thing when we consider the universe and the many reforms that occupy the people of the world, but Ruskin says: "When you begin to think of things rightly the ideas of smallness and largeness pass away," and nothing that is done for right seems to us small.

This much has been done for the children, and taking a step beyond we find Y work decidedly looking up. Our new Y superintendent, Miss E. Bertha Cheney, a bright, self-reliant young woman, is taking hold of the work with energy; in herself she is capable in many ways, and it seems that she is able to bring out the latent powers of even a half dead union. Every Y union that can by any means secure her services ought to do so; she will stir up enthusiasm, and arouse everybody, and one of the things we greatly need is more wide-awake Y's to replenish the older unions. The Y forms a link between the Loyal Temperance Legion and the union that it is not wise to permit to become obsolete. Let Darwin have his "missing links." We want none in the temperance evolution; with us every link must tell for God and humanity.

The Y conference at Mystic, a state gathering, was helpful and exceedingly interesting. A bright program was arranged for two days and the time was well spent, the hours were not all devoted to strictly business proceedings, but a lawn reception was tendered the visitors by the local union and was an occasion of delightful sociability and innocent recreation. Light refreshments were served and all separated at an early hour in order to be ready for the work of the following hours. Fair skies shone upon the fair maidens and all nature helped make a success of the second Y conference of our state.

Tolland county convention at Ellington was an encouraging gathering, although the efficient president, Mrs. C. T. Chapman, resigned, much to the regret of all. Six unions were represented and the visitors were cordially welcomed, and generously entertained by the local union. Mrs. Rice, of Boston, Mass., Mrs. Fitz Gerald, our state superintendent of juvenile work, Mrs. Flora M. Stanley, were present and helped make the occasion an enjoyable one by their addresses. also contributed to the enjoyment by their presence and songs of cheer. A quartette of ladies furnished music throughout the day and the song, "God be with you till we meet again," translated into the Indian language was beautifully sung by Misses Effie and Eva Hamilton. The pastor of the church and several other gentlemen gave words of cheer to the assembled ladies. Officers were appointed as follows: President, Mrs. C. W. Hale; secretary, Mrs. A. M. Bancroft; treasurer, Mrs. L. H. Hall. In the evening Mrs. Rice gave her address, "God's Hand in History." One thing reported was the observance of flower mission day by the Rockville union which sent bouquets to the inmates of the almshouse.

The semi-annual report of the Ansonia W. C. T. U. contains many interesting items concerning the work in the various departments. Calls have been made upon pastors or superintendents of all the Sunday-schools of the town; most of them use temperance lessons; nine hundred autograph pledge cards have been distributed, and more than three hundred pages of literature circulated; The Loyal Temperance Legion numbers eighty members, with an average attendance of seventy at the Friday afternoon meetings. The company is divided into ten classes; at a recent entertainment they cleared over twenty dollars; temperance reading matter has been placed in the railway waiting room, almshouse, Y. M. C. A. rooms and barber shops. They have quite a club of subscribers to the state paper. A petition to abolish the smoking compartment of the Palace car was circulated. Fully forty articles have appeared in the local paper, including notices of meetings, county conventions, lectures, entertainments, suppers, addresses, and the organization of the Y, also reports of the same events. Several articles have been sent to a neighboring paper, the Derby Transcript, to the state paper and to THE UNION SIGNAL. Cottage meetings have been held and a temperance sermon delivered at the request of the union. All the Protestant churches in the town use unfermented wine. Work is also being done to aid scientific temperance instruction in the schools. The union numbers fifty-six, and the members work energetically, and still there is need of a more extended and better sentiment in the town regarding temperance. The Y lately organized under favorable circumstances may be able to help this on.

VERMONT VERITIES.

At this beautiful season of the year every white-ribboner should be drawn by the beauties of nature to a closer walk with God.

How much we might accomplish for God and humanity if all were fully consecrated and doing all in our power for the Master. I am grieved just now that so little interest is manifested by members of our local unions. Will some one tell us how to conduct local meetings that every member may be interested to that extent that they will feel it not only a duty but a pleasure to attend habitually?

County conventions have been the order of exercises during May and June, and have been well attended and full of enthusiasm. Our state president, Mrs. Read, has been in attendance at most of the county meetings, bringing to them as she always does, inspiration, earnestness and deep spirituality. Our former president, Mrs. E. T. Housh, graced the Windham county convention with her presence, giving timely suggestions, a paper on "Responsibility of Parents," and an address in the evening.

Union services have been held in many parts of the state, the churches and Christian Endeavor societies uniting with the W. C. T. U. in gospel meetings. These cannot fail of being helpful.

We have laws in Vermont that would rid any state of the crime of liquor-selling if properly enforced. We have a temperance governor and straightforward, able, upright judges. If every town and county would be careful to elect only temperance men to office, intemperance would soon be a thing of the past, for prohibition DOES prohibit.

Chelsea union was instrumental in securing the services of Miss E. S. Tobey, of Boston, for the churches during three weeks in March. There were several conversions and Christians greatly strengthened. One union being much discouraged had about decided to give up the work, but a visit from county and state president infused new life and courage. Behold how great a flame a little fire kindleth!

Hardwick reports: "Our union is increasing in strength and numbers. The outlook is bright for the future." Orleans county has sent one hundred dollars to the Temple. State superintendents are urging local superintendents to press forward the work in their several departments.

The state has sent five delegates to the World's Congress at Chicago. Vermont World's Fair commission has granted permission to distribute and display in Vermont building such literature as has been published by Vermont W. C. T. U. Our state organ, Home Guards, is issuing a World's Fair number, devoted to historical and biographical sketches, with portraits of state officers and leading workers. The editor, Mrs. G. E. Davidson, has, with her husband, spent the month of June at the Exposition, attending temperance congresses, etc. We expect she will come back full of zeal and enthusiasm, ready to impart to others. She has promised to speak of what she sees and hears at our county convention on her return.

The Home, in Burlington, for friendless women, which has occupied the thought and attention of so many white-ribboners the past two years, had its formal opening in May. Thirty ladies were present. The meeting opened with a prayer and praise service, followed by a history of the movement, which, like all great enterprises, has had its encouragements and discouragements. The building is a fine structure, with spacious rooms, handsomely furnished, and we trust will be a blessing to those who occupy it.

A state temperance camp-meeting is to be held near Middlebury in July, commencing the 21st and continuing a week or more. There will be first a workers' conference. Two days will be given to the cause of missions, one to the humane society, one to Christian Endeavor and King's Daughters, etc., the two last days to temperance. We had expected Miss Willard, Lady Henry Somerset and Anna Gordon to be with us and regret exceedingly that we must be deprived of the inspiration this noble trio would bring to us. We expect, however, to have able speakers, and hope to see grand results.

MAINE ITEMS.

Chicago and the World's Fair have sadly interfered with the promptness of Maine's reporter, but she hopes that "the things she has seen and heard" have not only given her enough fresh inspiration to prevent further delinquencies, but a little to pass along the line.

It was certainly a great pleasure to be admitted to that holy of holies, the editorial sanctum, to watch the huge press turning out our ever-welcome UNION SIGNAL, ten thousand copies per hour, to visit our National headquarters, and to sit at the noon hour in beautiful Willard Hall, listening to the searching words of John G. Woolley and other workers whose names have long been familiar, while frequent little talks with our own beloved state president made the great, strange city seem quite homelike.

But while one delighted pilgrim was thus enjoying herself, the work in the Pine Tree state was going forward with renewed vigor as the milder weather made it easier for the women to go about. Within the past two months nearly all our counties have held their annual conventions, which, judging from the reports that have reached me, have been very enthusiastic and profitable, though all regretted that Mrs. Stevens' duties on the World's Fair commission necessitated her absence from the state.

Mrs. Budy, Franklin's energetic president, writes of their gathering at North Jay: "We have just closed a most delightful convention. Neither the unprecedented cold nor threatening skies prevented our dauntless Franklin county unions from making preparations for their convention. We planned all with an eye to the fact that "the best thing that we can do when it is rainy, is to let it rain." But it didn't rain, and the bright skies seemed to vie with the bright faces of our women. There were present fifty delegates. We were favored in having with us Mrs. R. A. Springer, president of Androscoggin county and Mrs. Evernden, now of Farmington but formerly an active worker in the Illinois W. C. T. U. She conducted the memorial services of Miss Mary Allen West, of whom she was a personal friend. Rev. G. W. Gould, of East Fairfield, was present, wearing his white ribbon, being an honorary member of the Greene union. Several persons became members of the county W. C. T. U. and put on the white ribbon for the first time.

Among the important resolutions passed was the following:

In view of the fact that the personal integrity of Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, founder of the Temperance Temple of Chicago, has been assailed,

Resolved, That we as members of the Franklin county W. C. T. U., state of Maine, assembled, express to her our sympathy and confidence in her plan and purpose for the House Beautiful and pledge her all the help and support we can give.

Androscoggin's workers met in their seventh annual convention with the union at Livermore Falls. A pleasant feature of the forenoon was the reception of guests, followed by a prayer-meeting and the organization of the convention. The following departments were reported: Temperance work in Sunday-schools, narcotics, jail work, evangelistic, temperance work at fairs, systematic giving, franchise, flower mission, children's homes and social purity; —the latter reported by a police matron. Mrs. M. B. Ellis, of New Jersey, delivered an address in memory of Miss West and Miss Casseday. Special prayer was offered that the health of our National leader might be restored. Mrs. Ellis also made a fine evening address and the following morning, before the dispersion of the delegates, gave a Bible reading.

Miss Cornelia Dow, daughter of our honored "father of prohibition," marshalled the representatives of her nineteen Cumberland unions at South Bridgton, where a most successful convention was held.

Mrs. Ellis was the evening speaker at most of the conventions, and, in Mrs. Stevens' absence, contributed very largely to their interest and success. At nearly all there was a memorial service for Miss West, and at the latter ones for Miss Casseday.

Mrs. Tarbell, of Presque Isle, writes: "Scientific temperance has been the topic for several meetings. At some of these members of our school board and several of the teachers have been present. If 'agitation is education,' many of us will feel that we have had a liberal education. Flower mission work is receiving its share of attention. Much has been done in visiting the sick. We have given one sick mother the benefit of a nurse for twenty-five days, paying about fourteen dollars out of our treasury. We have finished paying our hundred dollars toward the Temperance Temple. Just here let me tell of one thing that it may be well to pass along. A gentleman who has been in our village for a few weeks joined us as an honorary member and asked for a certificate of membership. We had some cards printed and tiny perforations made in one corner through which our dainty badge was tied. Another bit of cardboard on which were a half dozen fresh knots of ribbon went with the certificate. As the date was on it, it would serve as a reminder to one who wished to retain his membership."

The large union at Houlton has given a genuine surprise party to its president, Mrs. G. B. Page. "She is one of the grandest women in the state," says one of her coworkers, "and we wanted to let her know that we love her while she is with us, and can appreciate it." On a certain evening about seventy members, accompanied by most of the local clergymen and their wives, took possession of her beautiful home. It was all "sudden and unbeknownst" to Mrs. Page, but she began to think that some thing must be on foot. After social intercourse and the singing of a W. C. T. U. hymn, a basket of flowers and a handsome desk and chair were presented Mrs. Page, on behalf of the union. The latter gift, presented by Rev. H. E. Frohock, was accompanied by the names of the donors, artistically penned and framed. The names were arranged in the form of a cross, at whose base was the emblematic knot of ribbon. There were select readings by two ladies, and Scriptural or poetical quotations from nearly all present. Ice cream and cake were served, and after singing "God be with you till we meet again," the happy company dispersed.

A pleasant letter comes from the press superintendent of the union at North Amity, a little town far up in the wilds of Aroostook county: "We have made quite a gain in membership since last June. We have held several gospel temperance meetings and given a number of entertainments for the benefit of our new hall. One was a social and sale of maple candy which netted $10.60. We have distributed a vast amount of literature on temperance, social purity, systematic giving, woman's suffrage, have supplied lumbermen and destitute families with other helpful reading for which they are grateful. We have held two Sabbath observance services—one in the Baptist church and one in a school-house in another part of the town. We have lost one of our best workers by death, others have moved away, while still others are away at school, but with the help of our kind Heavenly Father, we have all pledged ourselves to do more in the year to come. We are circulating the World's Petition now, collecting something for the Willard fountain and are planning for a Demorest medal contest. The last of May we held one of our best gospel temperance meetings in the same school-house where we had our Sabbath observance service."

Since my last letter the Auburn union has held one of the most successful public meetings in its history. It was in the Congregational church, on the evening of temperance Sunday. At the request of the W. C. T. U. presented at the ministers' meeting, every clergyman but one that morning preached a temperance sermon. In the evening the churches either omitted their services or closed early so that their congregations might be able to hear our speaker, Mrs. Emeline Burlingame Cheney, and the large church was, of course, well filled with the prominent church workers of the city. Mrs. Cheney's subject was "The Temperance Movement in its Relation to the Salvation of the Race," and as we listened to her eloquent words we felt that Dr. Cheney, who for so many years has been the honored president of one of our colleges, deserved a vote of thanks from the Maine W. C. T. U. for bringing this gifted and consecrated woman into our state.

At the regular meeting this afternoon your correspondent tried to tell a few of the wonders of the World's Fair, but feels much as Geo. W. Bain did when at the temperance congress he said he thought he could take it in in a week, but instead it had taken him in.

We have in Auburn a clay-bank which is the scene of many exciting incidents. It is situated just opposite the county buildings, and one day last week Sheriff Hill spilled four thousand gallons of barreled soft liquors upon it. A few days ago he received a check for six hundred dollars, for seized liquors which he had sold back to a distillery. While this may be considered creditable to the enforcement of law in our community, no thoughtful person can help wondering why such a farce should be permitted to go on under the banner of union and liberty. The Dirigo state has received two great benefits in material things as well as in things intellectual and moral, to abandon its hostile attitude toward the liquor traffic, and who hinders the righteous law of our state from becoming the law of the land? Is it the brewers and distillers alone, or have they thousands of unconscious allies wearing the same political uniform, though calling themselves, and perhaps meaning to be, soldiers of Jesus Christ?

WEST VIRGINIA.

GOOD CONVENTION NEWS.

The best convention West Virginia has held for several years, not only good in attendance, but in the reports of the year's work, began June 20. The weather was all that could be desired, and the delegates from all parts of the state were met at the depot by the committee on entertainment, and each delegate placed in the pleasant homes of the Grafton people, who know so well how to entertain. Delegates and visitors alike were entertained.

Wednesday morning found the people refreshed and ready for the work of the convention. Mrs. Jennie P. Sisson, state president, was at her best, and conducted the convention in a thorough and businesslike manner. As there was so much to be done, and the time short, it took a clear head to keep the delegates down to close work. Roll-call showed that nearly all of the officers, district presidents and superintendents were present. Mrs. Belle Harmison, of Romney, musical director of the convention, in her pleasing way, added much to the interest of the convention by her selections. She was assisted by Mrs. Jennie Engle, of Fairmont, who sang "Throw out the Life Line." She also conducted the consecration service from 11:30 to 12 o'clock.

Twelve new unions were organized during the year. Moundsville union and district captured both the banners. This is the second year they have held a banner in the district for organization work. The department of systematic giving, taken up for the first time last year, proved a decided success. The superintendent, Mrs. W. J. Hamilton, was appointed superintendent of juvenile work, in place of Mrs. Belle Harmison, who was compelled to give up this work, which she successfully carried on for several years, on account of other work demanding her attention, so the superintendency of systematic giving now has Mrs. Jane Suit, of Keyser, at its head, and from the reports of the good she has done in other lines of work, we know that this will receive careful attention.

The committee on plan of work reported and recommended some very good work to be done this year. They urged that a committee be appointed to visit the legislature at its next session in behalf of a reform school for girls. This is sadly needed in West Virginia as there is no place to send girls who need reformation. The resolutions were ringing, especially those against attending the World's Fair while it is open on the Sabbath, and the elective franchise for women. In order to keep abreast with the times, that we may compare favorably with sister states of older and larger growth, we must keep in touch with noted speakers in order to inspire us with greater zeal and larger efforts.

Miss Margaret Oldham, of Wheeling, who has been under Miss Newcomb's training in the physical culture department for six months, was appointed state superintendent, and it is expected that this department will be in the lead the coming year.

The treasurer's report was well received, for the financial outlook is good and the past year the state had taken on more obligations and these were all met and a balance left in the treasury.

Mrs. N. R. C. Morrow, Y secretary, was reëlected. She had charge of Y evening and held a conference of Y workers, giving a fine address. This department report showed a number of Y's organized.

The next convention will be held in Wheeling, and if the departments are as successfully carried on this year as they were in the past, there will be a decided increase in work and interest, and we have no reason to doubt this as we have some splendid do-everything women at the head of superintendencies and districts.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

THE North Carolina W. C. T. U. convention meets at Waynesville, July 21.

MISS LUCIA KIMBALL inaugurated her work as department lecturer for securing homes for homeless children, by giving an address in the World's Temperance Congress on "The Child Factor in the Temperance Reform."

MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS has been reëlected secretary for Maine of the National Conference of Charities and Correction. Her address in the congress showed great advance had been made in the last twenty years in caring for the delinquent classes.

MRS. ADELE R. WIDNEY, Louisiana W. C. T. U. superintendent for department for securing homes for homeless children, writes: "We have joined our forces with the society for the prevention of cruelty to children, as nearly all our members belong to it."

MRS. MARY TEATS, North California's superintendent of railroad work, went to Viralie in response to a call not long ago and held seven meetings in the three days' stay, three public lectures, a sermon, a mothers' meeting, a meeting for the Y's and one in the jail.

THE W. C. T. U. of Industry, Ill., has completed a temple at a cost of $1,000. It was dedicated June 24 by an address from Mrs. Helen M. Gougar, who raised the amount due, $350, and left it clear of debt. The town is in the midst of a rich farming community and great good will come of this effort.

A FOURTH of July temperance rally was held at North Scituate, R. I., in connection with a clambake planned by the cornet band of young temperance men. Hon. Jas. A. Williams, chairman of the state central prohibition committee, and Mrs. G. F. Martin, president of Providence W. C. T. U., were most acceptable speakers.

THE eighth annual convention of Clearfield county W. C. T. U. will convene in Houtzdale, Pa., August 2 and 3. Dr. Anna Shaw is engaged to lecture on the first date. A unique feature is an invitation to the gentlemen to attend the day sessions. Several clergymen have intimated their intention to be present. Y evening (the 3d) will be occupied with songs, recitations and music—all sweetened with the water of temperance.

AT the Anchorage mission, 125 Plymouth Place, Chicago, a pleasant furnished room is ready for World's Fair guests, at one dollar a day, or one dollar and twenty-five cents for lodging and breakfast. The location is convenient for almost every purpose; and those who are interested in the work of the mission cannot only help by engaging the room while in the city, but will also thus have an opportunity of personal study of the methods employed there.

MISS MARY RIPLEY, the well-known state superintendent of scientific temperance instruction in Nebraska, answered the call, June 3, and went "home." She died in harness, for she was on a lecture tour at the time. Her trained and cultured mind, her efforts and wise counsels were especially valuable to the W. C. T. U. work of the state, and she had become a powerful influence for good in educational circles. Her active labors have ceased, but the influence of her good works will go on forever.

MRS. J. E. SIBLEY, president of Georgia state W. C. T. U. writes: "Dr. Candler's opposition and persecution has been creating sympathy for us and pushing suffrage; it is the very best thing that has happened for us in years. Rev. J. Culpepper, Methodist evangelist, whom some claimed killed the suffrage resolution in our convention (which he did not, only advised to go slow just now and then knelt and prayed such a prayer for us as I never heard) has been organizing W. C. T. Unions for us everywhere since our state convention. He is the best friend we ever had. It was the best convention we have held, and we have taken a long stride forward in influence."

Official Communications.

FRANCHISE.

I believe we have sent out no official note through THE UNION SIGNAL this year, but the department has not been idle. The year 1893 will be reckoned as a most fruitful one, not only from the growing franchise sentiment in the union, but for the advancement of the cause generally. No one can doubt this who followed the proceedings of the World's Congresses in Chicago, and noted the royal welcome and the attentive hearing given to the suffrage veterans. The subject in some of its phases has been considered in many legislatures; the churches no longer look upon it askance; college girls, notably Mt. Holyoke, Wellesley and Smith, have held political rallies, and ministers and the press, religious and secular, that are willing to array themselves against this evident principle of justice and right are exceptional. Let us thank God and take courage.

Let us give special help and encouragement to those states where the question has come up as an amendment to the constitution, as in Colorado, to be voted on in November, and as in Kansas, to be decided in 1894. We do not know so much about the Colorado campaign. Mrs. W. H. Wrigley, of North Denver, is state superintendent of franchise. It is hoped that W. C. T. U. women will do all they can for the adoption of the amendment in Colorado.

The election record in Kansas this year argurs favorably for success in 1894. Mrs. Laura M. Johns is state superintendent of franchise, and whether working as a representative of the Equal Suffrage Association or the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, or as an individual having the cause truly at heart, deserves our hearty coöperation. Money is needed, also literature. Let us keep an eye on Kansas and as we look, listen, and let our interest crystallize in earnest, prayerful helpfulness. School and municipal suffrage already exercised in that state are sure to be followed by full suffrage; why not in 1894?

For this as well as for every reason of expediency and principle, we urge upon the states not yet having adopted this department to do so at once, and to appoint a superintendent.

When the annual report is made, we wish we might chronicle a department worker in every state and territory. We believe, of course we do, that no phase of our work has more to do with the ultimate triumph for temperance.

Blanks are just now being sent to superintendents. They are dry reading as they stand. May they have life and spirit as they come back! If there is no superintendent will the president or the corresponding secretary, anybody, help make vivid the record for 1893?

Is there anything for state superintendents to do except to fill out blanks? Send to 3 Park St., Boston, for "suggestions" and find out. Yours for the department, LOUISE C. PURINGTON, Supt.

Moultonboro, N. H.

POLICE MATRONS.

I consider the effort to secure police matrons worth all it has cost for what has been done for lost and unfortunate children. A gold medal has been presented to a matron by the humane society of one of our large cities, for what she has done by coöperation in sending them lost ones, neglected, dirty, sickly and wretched waifs, none too much so for her motherly sympathy and tender care.

Maine was the first state to see the need of this work. The W. C. T. U. asked permission of the authorities of Eastport to try the experiment, and they defray the expense. Permission being given, it proved so satisfactory that a law was soon obtained making it obligatory in all large cities of the state.

Rhode Island inaugurated a movement of this kind in 1880, and did not stop at the population of twenty or ten thousand inhabitants, but asked that the law should make it binding in all cities.

Maryland, my Maryland, has a law granted by an appeal from the various charity organizations in connection with the W. C. T. U. During the summer months of 1892 more than two thousand women and children in the city of Baltimore were brought under the personal supervision of the fourteen matrons employed there.

I turn to the state of Indiana with satisfaction as an example. She has a law for all cities of ten thousand inhabitants. She has a model matron in Indianapolis, which is a model city in municipal government. It is one of the most orderly, cleanly and rationally governed cities in the United States. The work of this model matron cannot be estimated. She is devoted to the

I have given these items to encourage all state superintendents to continue in well-doing. How many local superintendents have you, and are you in communication with them?

Have you a state law?

Do you make your appeal to municipal authority?

How many matrons have you in your state?

How are they paid?

Is the W. C. T. U. active in securing them?

These questions, dear comrades, are only reminders that "eternal vigilance is the price of victory."

THE WOMAN'S LECTURE BUREAU.

During the World's Fair the Woman's Lecture Bureau will have its headquarters in the organization room of the Woman's Building.

We will be pleased to talk over the work of the coming season with patrons, visitors, and lecturers and cordially invite all to call while in the city.

We expect that great good will result from our summer's work and we wish to urge upon all who sympathize with the work of the Bureau the necessity of using every effort possible to put this department on the footing it deserves. This can only be done through the effective coöperation of the local, county and state unions.

We have a few dates at our disposal of the popular Swedish lecturer, Miss Cecile Gohl, subject: Home life in Sweden (in costume) and the famous Smith sisters concert sextette.

The following lecturers are under our management, and we call your attention to the splendid list of workers:

Mrs. Sarah A. McClees, of New York, will attend the Grand Army Encampment at Indianapolis in September and will remain until after the National W. C. T. U. Convention which is to be held in Chicago, in October. Mrs. McClees, National superintendent for the department of soldiers and sailors, will be accompanied by Mrs. Mary Grant Cramer, a sister of the late Gen. U. S. Grant, who will lecture with her during the months of September and October in Illinois and adjoining states. Several very successful lecture tours have been made by these ladies and their addresses will be especially interesting to members of the G. A. R. and their friends as well as all who are in sympathy with their work.

Unions wishing to secure an address by Elizabeth U. Yates between the 26th and 31st of July, will please communicate at once with Lucy E. Anthony, Manager of the Woman's Lecture Bureau, Woman's Building, Jackson Park, Chicago, through whom arrangements for dates may be made. Miss Yates will speak in the vicinity of Lakeside, Ohio, or Glynden Park, Md., at that time.

For terms, dates, etc., address during the World's Fair,

OUR NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL.

When one is compelled to face the necessity of going into a hospital, naturally the question arises where to find the one offering the best advantages. Having a sister in the corps of nurses at our own Temperance Hospital, there was a double attraction in it for me when the decree came that there was no alternative in my case.

Entering it near midnight everywhere quiet prevailed. A subdued light gave a sense of rest at the very threshold; the large entrance and wide hall, with stairway softly carpeted, lent an air of elegance; while the warm, kindly welcome was like the welcome home. In the handsomely furnished rooms, and over all the house, was apparent the touch of deft fingers, thoughtful care and a more than usual neatness.

In the long days, as I waited in my sweet, quiet room for the return of the health and strength I came to seek, the desire and longing was with me that the institution might be enlarged, and a great work that is sadly needed among both physicians and patients be given a wider and fuller opportunity to demonstrate the benefits of non-alcoholism. Instead of accommodating twenty-five patients, it should at least be able to receive five hundred who could be assured of no alcoholic poisoning.

THE TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL.

The tender care of well disciplined nurses—the flower of many homes, the nourishing food so well prepared by the efficient, white-ribboner cook, the kindly matron, whose quiet, busy care is everywhere visible, and last, but not least, the house physician, on whose wise care the progress of the patients so largely depends—with all these so admirably provided, I long to see our hospital take a forward stride and increase its power for usefulness. It is our school in which physicians who have been taught to use alcohol in their practice as a matter of course or necessity, may find, by actual tests, how much more the gain and less the loss with the poison left out. It is a place of learning for nurses and patients as well.

Dear white-ribboners, let us rally to the support and help of this, our only institution where practical tests are made and the proof of our claims given, that alcohol is not a necessity in medicine. Write to its matron, Mrs. Sarah Hornby, No. 1619 Diversey avenue, Chicago, Ill., for ways and kinds of help needed, also circulars for distribution in the unions.

Gathering funds for a building of our own, to be large, airy and light, should be a part of the work of every local union in the land. Every one can lend a helping hand in this way, and hold a personal interest in this much needed reform.

Money should be sent to Mrs. C. E. Bigelow, the treasurer, designated for the hospital building.

A CARD.

I feel it is due to all my friends and those interested in the "World's Fair Temperance Hotel" to say that I have no longer any connection with it, the hotel having been sold to a company in North Harvey that did not desire my service. I regret more than any one else that I have ever been the cause of influencing any one to invest in "the scheme." While I was connected with the hotel I am glad to say that only words of praise were ever heard by me regarding the dining-room.

Our Library Table.

ONLY A FLOCK OF WOMEN, by Abby Morton Diaz. This spicy volume is made up of forty-two well-rounded chapters, each one containing hard woman sense, bright comments on women's ways and pointed suggestions for the exercise of womanly wisdom in the walk of life. One of the charms of this writer is that she makes her readers feel as if they were sitting down having a friendly face-to-face chat, yet withal, the "chat" does not lightly skim the surface but sounds many depths of thought and experience. Read it.

Published by D. Lothrop Co., Boston.

Mr. Raymond Blathwayt, of London, is now the most celebrated of English interviewers. He was formerly a clergyman of the Established Church. His father was the friend and pastor of Tennyson, and Mr. Blathwayt's surroundings and friendships gave him valuable introductions when he decided to import the interview from the land of its nativity, the land of Brother Jonathan. Mr. Blathwayt has recently brought out a charming volume of INTERVIEWS, including many distinguished men and women on both sides of the water. Among others he has recently interviewed the president and vice-president of the World's W. C. T. U.

ENDEAVOR DOIN'S. By Rev. J. F. Cowan, Boston. D. Lothrop Company.

Morality can be taught by humor and excellence by fun. Mr. Cowan's quaint and pithy "Yankee" style, never descending to caricature, and often rising to real power, is seen at its best in his New England story of "Endeavor Doin's Down to the Corners." It is a book in the interest of the great association of Christian Endeavorers and how one branch of it got a footing at the Corners; how they contended with discouragements, had their ups and down, their trials and their triumphs, is all told in the homely dialect and Down East talk of good Jonathan Hayseed, farmer, reformer, humorist and Christian. He "'lows" that Christian Endeavor has "killed long-winded prayers and torn down sectarian fences," and declares that though "Guinea is got to be saved," so, too, have "Potato Bottom" and "Tradehard," and other places and folks to "hum"; and Christian Endeavor societies are going to do it. As a contribution toward a great movement, treated humorously, yet practically, and with real strength of purpose, this "back country" story of Mr. Cowan's is one of the best books to be put into the hands of all who are seeking to do the work that the Christian Endeavor Societies of both town and country have taken in hand.

THE WITCH OF SALEM; OR CREDULITY RUN MAD. Vol. vii. The Columbian Historical Novels, by John R. Musick. Each volume of this remarkable series of historical novels seems to exceed its predecessor in thrilling interest and graphic diction. The narrative of this volume is designed to cover twenty years in the history of the United States, 1680 to 1700, including all the principal features and events of the grewsome yet romantic period which witnessed the last spasmodic throes of dying superstition. Charles Stevens, of Salem, Massachusetts, with Cora Waters, a slave, whose father was captured at the time of the overthrow of the Duke of Monmouth, are the principal characters. Samuel Parris, the chief actor in the Salem tragedy, is a serious study. Perhaps no greater villain ever lived in any age. Cotton Mather and other advocates of witchcraft all appear in this volume whose thrilling scenes from beginning to end are not only of intense interest, but are highly useful for the lessons they contain. The closing paragraph of the story thus happily tells us: "Salem village is peaceful, happy and quiet. In the gentle murmur of waves, the whisper of breezes, and the laugh of babbling brooks, about the quaint old town, all nature seems to rejoice that the age of superstition has passed." The general history of our country during the period covered by the narrative is given, and all the facts are carefully and accurately authenticated. The historical index to the contents of this volume occupies the seven last pages of the book.

A LETTER TO THE POINT.

HOMETOWN, July 20, 1893.

DEAR MRS. MERRYMAN:—Baby is so wakeful to-night that I cannot get over to say good-by and wish you and Mr. M. great pleasure at the Fair, but I want you to have the July "Responsive Reading" on our W. C. T. U. exhibit. I remember that you were out of town the day we had it in the union.

You need not return it, for I have ordered a hundred copies, and I intend every one of my acquaintances shall have one before starting for the Fair. I am going to take a number with me when I go, for it must be easy to speak to strangers on the grounds, and sister Fan says every one is crazy to get hold of something that points out exhibits of special interest. There is so much to be seen that no one can hope to do it all. This reading, you will see, catalogues and briefly explains our entire exhibit. I think ladies going there will feel like hunting up the union in their own localities when they get home, and that, if we use it right, this "Responsive Reading" can be made effective in winning members all over the country. Let me know your address in Chicago, and I will forward you some as soon as my order is filled. Why, you can go right to the Temple and buy all you want. To be sure!

Do have a good time. You have earned it in the gospel meetings this year. We will all help more than ever while you are gone, and you serve your country by giving every one who will accept it, one of these readings. Yours heartily, B. V. C.

A PHILANTHROPY FUND.

Now and then there come to us burning words of appreciation, which we reproduce that the fire may be enkindled in other hearts. The following is from the pen of a motherless girl, but fifteen years of age: "I am only a poor girl, fifteen years old. I have no mother, and I have to keep house for my papa and take care of the children. There are five children of us, the youngest seven years old, but, thank God, this is a temperance family and a Christian home, though we are very poor. I just cannot get along without my UNION SIGNAL, for I cannot attend meetings much, and it is such a blessing to me; so, if you possibly can, please continue the paper until I can get the money, and I will send it to you. The love to work for temperance so burns in my soul sometimes I can hardly stay at home. Your true temperance sister."

It is needless to say THE UNION SIGNAL will still make its weekly visits to this humble home.

We wish our more fortunate temperance workers would supply us with a "philanthropy fund" to meet just such demands as these. Who will take the initiative?

JULY NUMBER OF THE ADVANCE GUARD.

With this number begins a new volume of The Advance Guard. NOW is the time to send in your subscription. Many new features will add to its attractiveness, and you should not miss the new story, the initial chapter of which is to be found in the July number.

"The Tables Turned,"

BY MATTIE B. FAY,

is illustrated by our special artist. The story opens with a spirited conversation between five interesting young ladies whom our artist has grouped around a table putting the finishing touches on some neckties for use at a coming social. Conversation turns upon the imaginary wearers of the ties, and the laughing and sometimes thoughtless girls, discuss the standard of morality for men, and the possibility of their exquisite work being soiled by the stains of liquor or tobacco.

In this issue Rudyard Kipling tells how he became a Prohibitionist, and Miss Guernsey, in her usual graphic style, writes of historic homes at "The White City." The accurate drawings of Fort Marion, John Hancock House and Mt. Vernon, add to the interest of the article.

A Cincinnati Miracle.

WHY MR. CHARLES B. NOBLE IS BEING CONGRATULATED.

A Remarkable Case of Being Completely Cured of Paralysis After Nearly Three Years of Suffering and Eminent Physicians Had Declared Their Best Efforts Baffled.

Newspaper men as a rule place little credence in patent medicine stories and seldom bother to even read them. This is not to be wondered at when it is taken into consideration how often they are called upon by unscrupulous persons to fabricate and publish stories of remarkable cures and perhaps print a picture of the mythical man or woman supposed to have been cured. That all medicine advertisements are not mere "fakes," and that all newspaper men are not equally prejudiced is proven by a story published in the Cincinnati Times-Star of a well-known newspaper man whose life was saved by reading an advertisement. So remarkable and interesting is the story that it is here reproduced as published in the Times-Star.

Mr. Charles B. Noble, the well-known litterateur, who has been suffering for nearly three years with paralysis, was upon the street to-day, cheerful and active, and the recipient of congratulations from his many friends. There is a bond of unity between all newspaper men, so that Mr. Noble's case appeals to every member of the craft as well as to every one afflicted as he was. Mr. Noble has spent the last three years in traveling from city to city seeking skilled physicians, to whom he has appealed in vain for relief. Knowing this, a reporter expressed surprise at the remarkable cure, but Mr. Noble, after executing a jig to show that he was as sound as he looked, let the reporter into the secret of his cure.

"It was a hard time I had of it," said he, "but the last medicine we take is always the one that cures, and I have taken the last. I was paralyzed on March 9, 1890, while in the employ of the David Williams Publishing Company of New York City as their traveling representative from Cincinnati. I found the traveling a great help to me, both in a financial and a literary way, but suddenly stricken down as I was at Somerset, O., 150 miles from Cincinnati, I was incapacitated for both writing and money making. Luckily my literary productions had been remunerative, and I had a snug bank account laid up, but these three years have made a drain on it.

"I sought a score of physicians, going to the best specialists in Cincinnati, Chattanooga and Pittsburg. Twelve Cincinnati doctors pronounced my case incurable, but I would not give up, and after seeking in vain for relief in Pittsburg and Chattanooga, consulted the best medical talent in Chicago. Up to January 17, 1893, I had spent $2,500 for doctors and medicine, and was about to give up in despair when I got hold of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, through reading the advertisements.

"From the first week of using the remedy I made a steady improvement, and on April 12, I put up my cane after using it thirty months. I certainly believe this medicine is all the proprietors claim for it, and that it will do all they say it will. I take pleasure in recommending it to all similarly afflicted. Like many who have tried medicine in vain I was doubtful of its value at first, and only used it when I grew desperate. Now I cannot praise it too highly. It has restored me to health and strength, and I feel grateful accordingly. Dr. Whitaker pronounced it a hopeless case of locomotor ataxia.

"Yes, I know there are many who will fancy anything you say about my case is an advertisement, but if they want any corroboration, let them address me at the Y. M. C. A. building, and I will cheerfully answer all inquiries if stamps are inclosed."

Pink Pills, while advertised and handled by the drug trade as a proprietary article, are not considered a patent medicine in the sense that name implies. For many years previous to their general manufacture they were used as a prescription. At first their great restorative powers were not fully recognized, and they were chiefly prescribed for impure blood and general weakness. Their remarkable success in such cases, and the fact that there was nothing in the formula that could do any harm, even if they did not do any good, led to their being tried in cases where the skill of the physician and the power of medicine had entirely failed. Their power of restoration seemed to border on the marvelous. They proved to be a never-failing specific for such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after effect of La Grippe, palpitation of the heart, pale and sallow complexions, and all diseases of the blood, such as scrofula, chronic erysipelas, etc.

They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities, and all forms of weakness. They build up the blood and restore the glow of health to pale and sallow cheeks. In case of men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of whatever nature.

Pink Pills are sold in boxes (never in loose form, by the dozen or hundred, and the public is cautioned against numerous imitations sold in this shape) at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y., or Brockville, Ont. The price at which these Pills are sold makes a course of treatment inexpensive as compared with other remedies or medical treatment.

Signal Notes.

THERE are fifty-one thousand breweries in the world.

THERE is a woman's branch of the horticultural college at Swanley, England.

ONE hundred and fifty thousand "schnaps" houses in Belgium to five thousand schools!

IN Norway, state regulation of vice has been completely abolished by government decree.

A MEDALLION portrait of Jenny Lind is to be placed under the statue of Handel in the Poet's Corner of Westminster Abbey.

A PNEUMATIC tube connects Paris with Berlin, making it possible to send a letter from one city to the other in thirty-five minutes.

THERE is a denomination in this country which calls itself The Old Two-Seed-in-the Spirit Predestinarian Baptists, of which there are ten thousand members.

THE butchers and bakers of Indianapolis have decided to give themselves a day of rest rather than accommodate unthrifty customers and will hereafter close their shops on Sunday.

IT has been stated as a curious fact that in the neighborhood of lunatic asylums there are more queer people than in other localities, suggesting some mystery of hypnotic or magnetic influence.

THERE has been much agitation of late in Belgium over Sunday labor. One curious result is the issue of a stamp, at one end of which is a little flap on which is printed, "Not to be delivered on Sunday."

IN order to demonstrate that a cooking department in connection with the public schools is a practical idea, women belonging to a cooking school in Baltimore have offered to train one hundred girls of the grammar grade.

A NIGHT lunch wagon owned by the Church Temperance Society of New York city is run to fires for the benefit of the firemen. It is carried within the fire limits for the use of the men, the expenses of the coffee and food being met by philanthropic people.

THE missionaries of India are signing the following protest by the hundreds: "We are unalterably opposed to the participation by the government in the demoralizing traffic in opium, and we record our conviction that it is a sin against God and a wrong to humanity."

NEW YORK was the first state to incorporate a Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. In the eighteen years of its existence, over sixty-nine thousand complaints have been received, and over thirty-six thousand children have been rescued and given a chance in life.

THERE are about eight hundred thousand men employed on railroads of the United States, nearly all of whom are voters. These, with the one million and a quarter of shareholders and with those employed in trades dependent on the railway, bring the number of voters to about three million, which fact suggests to some one that we may have a railroad party here some day.

STILL another opening for the young woman! The Massachusetts Emergency and Hygienic Association has just prepared a class of young women as trained attendants on chronic invalids, convalescents, elderly persons and young children, in such homes as cannot afford so expensive a luxury as a trained nurse. The attendant has been instructed by trained nurses in the rudiments of nursing, in ventilation, bathing the sick and preparation of wholesome and attractive food. The course consists of thirty lessons and costs but three dollars.

THROUGH the efforts of the white-ribbon women, Bible temperance lessons are regularly given four times a year in the International Sunday-School lesson series for the United States and Canada. These lessons, with the circulation of the temperance pledge and literature in the Sunday schools, and the placing of temperance Sunday-school books in the libraries read by teachers and children, are a force of incalculable value in the moulding of public sentiment, and also in favor of total abstinence and the removal of legal safeguards from the liquor traffic.

Farmer Jones is jogging homeward
On the hot and dusty road;
All the while he's thinking deeply
And examining his load:
"Let me see: there's tea and 'lasses,
And that bran'-new coffee-pot,
And the tacks and thread and sugar—
But it seems like I forgot
Somethin' mother says pa'tic'lar
She can't get along without;
Well! I guess so! Whoa!" and quickly
Then he turns his team about.
"Got to go clean back again, too;
Git, you pesky critters! Lope!
Sakes alive! I wouldn't dast go Home without that Iv'ry Soap!"

CONOVER PIANO.

Too much cannot be said in praise of the Conover Piano. Although a new and not widely-known instrument, it possesses most excellent qualities. Its beauty, power and purity of tone is a revelation, and have been greatly praised by most able artists. Its construction includes numerous valuable patents; it possesses sweet singing qualities, great volume of sound, brilliancy and clear, ringing tones like the sweetest of bells. This piano is fitted with a new dulcet middle pedal, enabling the performer to produce the most charming and delicate effects possible. The combination of this and the loud pedal, with an elastic, crisp touch, makes very clear, soft Æolian-like music. The Conover is made in various styles, both in uprights and grands, by the very reliable and enterprising Chicago Cottage Organ Company, 215 Wabash Ave.

FOR YOUNG LADIES.

The Chicago Female College (formerly at Morgan Park) offers to all young ladies the opportunity of combining the pleasure of a six weeks' study of the World's Fair with systematic instruction in various branches. This institute is in its nineteenth year and opens September 14. The college buildings are new and elegant. The ornamental branches are taught by experienced artists. Any of our readers desiring further particulars should send for catalogue to Miss Julia H. Thayer, Auburn Park, Chicago, or 247 State street.

CALIFORNIA.

The fame of the climate of California draws to that charming state new friends every year, particularly from sections where long, severe winters, followed by trying spring seasons, work such disastrous results among the weak and debilitated.
The great improvements in passenger train service, higher degrees of comfort in the cars, and shorter time required on the trip, combined with the cheapness of the excursion tickets now being sold to California and back by the Santa Fé Route make the journey agreeable and, one can almost say, economical. The many delightful resorts now established in California afford every comfort and luxury desired by the fastidious, and present unique attractions.
The Hotel del Coronado at San Diego, the Raymond at Pasadena, the Redondo at Redondo Beach and the hotels at Santa Barbara, Monterey, Riverside, Los Angeles and many other points, have grown as famous as any on the Atlantic Coast—and a fact that should not be forgotten is that they are resorts all the year around, although the greatest number of people from the East are in California between the months of November and May.
Write to John J. Byrne, Asst. Passenger Traffic Manager, 723 Monadnock Block, Chicago, Ill., if you are interested in California, and he will send you some reading matter.

WORLD'S AND NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTIONS.

The World's W. C. T. U. will hold its second biennial meeting in the Memorial Art Palace, Lake Front Park, Chicago, Ill., beginning October 16, 1893, in connection with the World's Columbian Exposition Congresses, and the National W. C. T. U. will hold its twentieth annual convention in the same place on succeeding days. All National societies of the W. C. T. U. are entitled to send delegates to the World's Convention in the proportion of one for every one thousand members, and state societies will be represented in the National W. C. T. U. Convention by one for every five hundred members, besides the general officers.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

The World's Fair was closed last Sunday.

July 20 was Swedish day at the World's Fair.

Colombia, South America, celebrated its independence day, July 20.

A riot occurred among the striking miners near Weir City, Kan., July 20.

The court martial trial of the Victoria disaster is going on at Valetta, Malta.

A cablegram from London announces that another great labor war is imminent.

The last clauses of the Home Rule Bill are being debated in the British House of Commons.

Troy, N. Y., seminary graduates, known as the Emma Willard Association, met in Chicago last week.

The Brazilian revolutionists have scored a victory, overcoming the government troops in a battle near Jaguaro.

A miniature and needless financial panic occurred in Denver, Col., last week, from which it has recovered in a great measure.

By the will of banker Anthony J. Drexel, of Philadelphia, an estate of thirty million dollars is divided among relatives and charitable institutions.

Russian exhibits at the Fair were covered last Friday by order of the commissioners of that country, who resented certain actions of the American customs officials.

Judge Mitchell, of the Minnesota supreme court, in a test case, has reversed the decisions of the lower courts and interpreted the law in favor of corporations and trusts.

At last report the difficulties between the French and Siamese had not yet been settled, the former country being dissatisfied with the concessions of the latter, and rumors of war fill the air.

The Kindergarten, the University Extension Manual Training, the College Settlement and College Fraternities, divisions of the World's Educational Congresses, have met at the Art Palace, Chicago, during the week.

IF every reader of THE UNION SIGNAL who has had practical experience in Fair work would send us immediately a brief account of it, our Fair number (August 10) would teem with helpful hints. We want this number to be a practical one, not to be filled with theories, but with well tested plans. We can use nothing that comes after August 2, so please send at once.

LOOK on page 10 for the official Call of the World's and National W. C. T. U. Convention in October. Much valuable information may be obtained from this Call for temperance columns in local newspapers. There are so many "congresses" and conventions in Chicago this year that we will need to emphasize our two great conventions more than usual, in order to secure for them public attention.

MRS. FRANCES J. BARNES, general secretary of our Young Woman's Branch, who has been absent in England and France during the last three months, was among the passengers on the steamship Paris, the "Queen of the Seas," which landed at New York, July 21, after a record-breaking trip. Mrs. Barnes' health is greatly improved by her outing, and she returns with renewed vigor to labor for our chosen cause.

OUR reserve force, the host of UNION SIGNAL readers, will support with their sentiment and influence the broadside against gambling fired simultaneously by the religious press of the week. Not only the religious but the secular papers join in the battle. As Mr. Maynard, of the Christian at Work, the writer of the strong article on page 4, pertinently says: "The facts are matters of public record. The Herald, Times, Tribune and Mail and Express, of New York, and The News-Record, of Chicago, have been prominent in their outbreaks against the gambling business, and no epithets in the vocabulary of denunciation have been too strong for them to hurl at the men prominent in gambling circles. The turf, in brief, is but a mass of rottenness from beginning to end, and there is no good thing to be found in it."

FOR eleven days—from July 3 to July 14—the Chicago gambling dens were closed, the mayor, so he said, having placed the matter in the hands of Chief of Police McClaughry. The order for re-opening, however, emanated solely from the chief executive, and it now transpires that the closing order was given in the interests of the "better class" of the gambling fraternity, and that Major McClaughry knew nothing of it. The big gambling dens decided to freeze out the little ones, and with the connivance of their friend, the mayor, have succeeded in doing so. Mr. Harrison's action in this matter has at least the merit of consistency. He proposes to govern the World's Fair City according to the "ideas that rule the world," by which he really means the ideas that rule the men who elected him. The gamblers and saloon-keepers stood by him, and political honor (?) demands that he now stand by them. He is pledged not to enforce objectionable laws, and of course a party pledge is more binding than an official oath.

THE crusade inaugurated by the Chicago Daily News against the Washington Park gambling association merits the warm approval of every lover of morality. A cry of indignation has gone up because the management permits the attendance of droves of dissolute women and seats them side by side with the wives and daughters of respectable citizens. High legal authorities having been consulted say that according to the common law any corporation has a right to exclude from any place of amusement or entertainment "all infamous, debauched or criminal characters, with a view of protecting reputable persons from defilement or disgrace which would result from contact or association with these objectionable classes." In view of the fact that to "these classes" belong (according to the same authority) "gamblers, low women, and libertines," is it just to discriminate between the sexes? In the name of justice we maintain that dissolute women have as much right to frequent the race track, or any other place of amusement or entertainment, as dissolute men, whether those men be professional gamblers or members of the corporation which controls the grounds and pockets a share of the profits. As vicious and criminal characters, then, are "necessary" to the successful operation of the Washington Park race track, let there be no unjust discrimination between the members of the demi-monde and their confréres. If respectable women object to being jostled at the gate or on the grand stand by disreputables of their own sex, let them stay away from this disreputable resort.

"WHATEVER ought to happen will happen," and God works in His own way to teach His children. The few Sundays of open Fair proclaimed to the whole world that this nation stood for Christian principles in keeping sacred the Lord's Day. The action of the Directory defying both divine and human law-making powers is, in the light of later events, a forcible illustration of the bringing forth of good out of evil. The typical Sunday rest and quietude which prevailed almost universally within the gates of the White City on last Sunday, was such as becomes an exhibition of civilized nations in a Christian land.

ON another page is an article on Child Prostitution, from the pen of Elbridge T. Gerry, who, better than any other man, is prepared to speak of the social evil in New York. This paper shocked and deeply stirred the thoughtful men and women in the recent great Social Purity Congress in Chicago. It reveals a rampant pollution in this country, fully equal to the frightful conditions in England, exposed by William T. Stead, and which led to the repeal of the shameful C. D. Acts by the British Parliament. It is time that every redemptory agency of church and government become operative to save this nation from the awful results of the further prostitution of moral sense.

THE National Anti-Gambling League sends out a stirring appeal for help to every one interested in the morals of our country. Workers in this organization are giving their time for nothing, and in order to carry on the much-needed crusade against the growing vice of gambling, it is necessary that this help be of a most practical nature. The committee of the National Anti-Gambling League are prepared to supply tracts and booklets for distribution. They ask for names of influence to add to the list of vice-presidents and to the committee, and call for helpers in every state and city. Those who desire information are asked to correspond with the secretary, 27 Rialto Building, Chicago, Ill.

THE marble walls of Willard Hall reëcho not only earnest prayers to God, and strong appeals to His children to stand by the cause to which they are committed, but also to many a glad testimony of help received. The pledge is presented daily, and nearly every noon some one takes a stand for total abstinence. After one of the meetings last week, a sweet-faced boy, barely able to wield a pen, wrote his name in the pledge-book, saying, as he carefully traced the big, round letters: "When I sign the pledge. I keep it!" Behind him stood a grave-faced man, who, as he took the pen said: "I signed this once before and broke it, but I will keep it now for God will help me—I gave Him my heart in this room just twenty days ago." On Monday last, Mr. Charles Sawyer, of Cooper Union, New York, who was one of those active in the Farwell Hall W. C. T. U. meetings of 1876, led an interested audience, laying special stress on personal responsibility—"It is the individual fight that is going to win." Mrs. Rounds, president of Illinois, was the leader on Tuesday, directing thought to the text, "Come unto me and I will give you rest." Rest and help and salvation are themes that never grow old, and the testimony meeting which followed was one to warm and reinforce all hearts. Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, editor of the Christian Statesman, discussed the Sabbath question, perhaps the one most agitated in Chicago to-day. He had a sympathetic audience, and his stirring words called out frequent applause. Mrs. A. J. Gordon, president of the Boston W. C. T. U., filled one noon hour, talking on the standard of law to be held before the people—the standard to be kept at its undiminished height that the nation may be brought up to it. Mrs. Eldredge, a Chicago white-ribboner, closed the week's good program by a gospel talk, followed by a testimony meeting in which many were blessed.

RISE UP! RISE UP! O WOMAN!*

BY REV. ADA C. BOWLES.

TUNE: "The Morning Light is Breaking."

Rise up! rise up! O woman!
Nor longer sit at ease;
The banner of thy freedom
Is lifting to the breeze.
Be ready for the morning
That breaks thy long, dark night
Of ignorance and bondage,
And hail the coming light.

Rise up! the bridegroom cometh
In grace and majesty;
Go joyfully to meet him,—
His name is Liberty.
His face is as the daybreak,
His heart is true and strong,
His hand is brave in battle
Against the sceptered wrong.

The keys of thy reft kingdom
He bringeth as a gift;
O woman, wronged and fettered,
Thy heart to greet him lift.
'Tis God o'er all and in all,
'Tis Christ who bids thee rise;
Thy night is swiftly passing,
Thy morning gilds the skies.

MRS. FAIRWEATHER'S PONY PHAETON.

BY MARIA FAIRWEATHER.

Yes, I've got a new pony phantom to ride in, and the best of it is that I am able to point to that phantom as bringing one of the best victories for temperance that I ever had a hand in. An' it all happened in this way. I alluz said that 'twuz as much harm to drink cider z'enny other likker, only I never could make 'Lias see it that way. Why, I've talked colyums, yes, volyums to that man, and land! you might as well pour water on a duck's back for all the impression I could make, he was that stubborn about it.

"Tain't z'if I drunk it myself, Marier," says he, "an' you ought to be thankful that I don't come home rantin' round, smellin' like all git out, as my brother-in-law, Sim Simpkins, duz. He's enough to knock a body down just to smell his breath," says 'Lias, says he.

I've allus noticed that men are apt to call on you to be thankful for what they don't do, somehow.

"'Lias," says I, "don't ask me to be thankful for what you ain't, but go to work like a hero to make of yourself a man I can be proud of," I says, real emphatic, as a kind of clincher.

Just as I said them words, kind o' eloquent, like a Fourth o' July oration, who should come dashin' round the corner in a bran new pony phantom but Cerilda Simpkins, 'Lias's sister. I wouldn't say so to 'Lias for the world and all, but there is something about that woman real biggotty —so stuck up an' overbearin' like. I wouldn't complain to 'Lias, but it riled me a good deal to see Cerilda ridin' so lofty with her pretty bay ponies and phantom, an' I havin' to ride in an old joltin' Dimocrat wagon. Cerilda alluz did have mean ways, an' she knew it wuz the hithe of my ambition to hev a new phantom to ride in.

I turned to 'Lias, an' says I, "Cerilda's phantom looks real nice."

"Marier," says he, "I hadn't meant to tell you, but I was goin' to buy you a faytum for your birthday present. Sim Simpkins must a-seen me a-dickerin' for it, an' went an' got Cerilda one first, jest fer spite."

"'Dickerin',' 'Lias," says I, kind o' sollum, for something told me what he'd been a-doin'—"'dickerin',' did you say? an' why not buyin' straight out?" says I. You see 'Lias is kind o' close about money, jest like his mother, for all the world, an' I don't s'pose he can help it, it's in the blood.

"Yes," says he, kind o' reluctant like, "old Moon, the carridge maker, said he'd take two barrels o' cider a year till 'twas all paid for, an' no interest on the balance, and I thought—" he slid the barn door open as he spoke, for we had been out countin' the new hatchin' o' chickens—and there stood the prettiest phantom you ever laid your eyes on, upholstered in goblin blue—just the thing for a phantom—and a dull blue rug to put your feet on, an' I cou.dn't help thinkin' how becomin' the color was to me—Cerilda she's real swarthy and never did look well in blue.

For one minit I was so happy that I seemed to be standin' on air, the next my heart went down to my toes. I'd wanted one so long and now here 'twas, but I thought of Bunker Hill and Valley Forge an' the way my fourfathers fit on bloody fields, an' I says, says I, "'Lias, if you'd let me have some of the money my father left me to buy it," says I, "I'll take it and be thankful, but how could I ride to a W. C. T. U. meeting," says I, "in a phantom bought with cider? I can't do it, 'Lias," says I, "an' keep my self-respect. An' self-respect," says I, "is a needcessity for a woman whose forefathers fit on Bunker Hill."

"Very well," says 'Lias, kind o' cool and lofty, "if you don't want the faytum you're not obliged to use it. But you'll never git such a chance again, likely. But there's the cider, an' I promised to take it down to-night after dark, when you wouldn't know anything about it, an' I'm goin' to keep my promise."

I looked, an' there the barrels stood, two of 'em on the slantin' top of an old oats bin where he and the hired man had rolled 'em, an' just below, on the floor was a hog troth that 'Lias had brought into the barn and nailed tight and strong the day before, for 'Lias always was good about keeping things up, and his only fault was, as I've said a hunderd times, bein' a little close in money matters and lackin' conviction on the temperance question.

"'Lias," says I a-pointin' the finger of scorn at the cider—it was the four finger of my right hand—"remove them barrels if you don't want to disgrace yourself. The W. C. T. U. prayer-meetin' meets here to-night, and if Brother Bush, our minister, sees them barrels there when he comes to put out his horse, what'll he think, and how 'shamed I'll be, 'Lias."

"Marier," says 'Lias, "I've agreed to deliver that cider to-night after dark, and none o' your fannattick notions won't hinder me. As for the faytum, it's yours, an' you can ride in it or git Moon to put a cannibal top on the Dimocrat and make a serrey out of it, jest as you please. While you an' the good sisters of the W. C. T. U. air a-lookin' after my soul," says he, laffin' kind o' sarcastic like, "I'll slip out and deliver the goods according to contract."

It must a-been about half after nine that evenin' after the prayer-meetin' was over, and Brother Bush had gone out to git the horse, and the sisters was tyin' on their bunnits, when I hears a wild screechin' yell that made me weak clear down to my toes. None of the rest noticed it, for they was all a-talkin' and laffin', specially Sister Bush, who is always jolly and cheerful, and talkin' about the county convention that was to take place the next week.

"Hark!" says I, "what was that screechin'," I says, and that minnit Brother Bush came runnin' in, his face white as a rag.

"Some dreadful thing has happened to Brother Fairweather," he says, says he. "Come, run, run!" and with that he started off toward the barn. I snatched up a lamp and Sister Bush another, and all the women followin', armed with mop, broomstick, poker and butcher knife—for we thought it was a robber most likely—and we rushed into the barn.

Such a sight! There was 'Lias stretched out full length in the hog troth, makin' desprit efforts to keep his head up out of the troth, an' right onto him one o' them barrels that had slid off the bin an' knocked him into the troth an' held him there, pinnin' him fast. Worst of all the bung had popped out, blowed out by the fomentation, and there was 'Lias soakin' in the cider, his new suit all spoiled, his hair plastered kind o' dudish-like over his forehead by the little stream of cider that trickled over and into his eyes, with his hands pinned fast to his sides by the weight of the barrel. Well, we women pulled and pulled, helped by the minister, to get him out, but it wan't no use. Nothing but the depth of the troth saved his life; as it was, he was well squeezed, I tell you. Finally Sister Bush, who held both lamps, told us to roll the barrel off, and when we found we just couldn't pull him out we set to to roll it off, for it was half empty by this time.

I cried with fright and mortification at the pickle he was in when we got him out, but Sister Bush, who alluz was a hand at laffin', she just leaned against the stall and laffed and shook till the tears run down her cheeks. I pitied 'Lias, for he never could bear to be laffed at, but I believe that laff cured him, for he has never made nor sold another barrel o' cider since that day. An' the next mornin' he just went to the bank an' took out two hunderd and fifty dollars of the money my father left me, an' handed it to me very meek, an' says he, "For that faytum, Marier."

An' I didn't have a cannibal top put on the old Dimocrat to make it into a serrey, and whenever I've been to a W. C. T. U. meeting, I've rode in my own pony phantom, ever since.

CHILD PROSTITUTION.*

BY HON. ELBRIDGE T. GERRY.

Of all the sad phases of child-saving work, that which deals with child prostitution is the most depressing. Wide-spread as is the social evil, with a history almost from the commencement of the world and a prospective continuance until the Day of Judgment, sexual vice nowhere is exhibited in so loathsome a phase as where young children are its victims. So repulsive is the subject that even the philanthropist shudders at the very mention of it. Wherever it makes its appearance not only are young lives wrecked, but the few who are rescued from its deadly grip bear through their earthly lives the scars and seams of a physical and moral disease worse than the most contagious malady known to the medical profession. Nay, it often itself embraces as one of its results the most loathsome malady known to that profession.

The vice is one which peculiarly assails the children of the poor. Crowded and huddled together in tenements, the opportunities for decency are inversely proportionate to the size of the family. The affiliation of young children with others of the same class similarly situated; their ignorance of sexual vice and its dangers; the lax state of morals too frequently existing in the locality; the absence of that protection which religion throws around the children of our better educated classes and which too often is utterly wanting in the homes of the poor; these are the prevailing conditions which prepare alike the mind and the body of the child for an invasion of sexual vice. Absence of personal cleanliness, ignorance of physical functions, innocence of acts which lead but to one result, and above all, the omission of parents properly to instruct their children on these subjects—these pave the way for the final fall. It is amazing at what an early age the children of the poor of both sexes are tempted to immoral acts without the slightest idea of the consequences involved or of the results.

In the first instance, with female children, it is often the result of violence, and in the cases which follow, dreadful as it may seem, many of the violaters were the parents of the children. In such cases the wretch is usually the father, when besotted with liquor.

The end of these children is invariably sad. The utter moral degradation to which they have been subjected at the hands of their parent so completely destroys every moral impulse that, sooner or later, on arriving at the age of womanhood, they enter the downward path, with no one to restrain them.

Another very prolific source of the ruin of small children is the rapacity of parents to obtain money in any way by their instrumentality. Thus, for many years after the institution of our first Societies for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, young girls aged from five to sixteen years were sent out in the street at all hours of the night to sell flowers or newspapers to the frequenters of theatres and the like places of amusement. The prompt and vigorous efforts made by our societies to repress this traffic have been very effectual for the last ten years in keeping the streets free from these children of vice, whose end was certain, and whose physical systems were often invaded by the dread disease to which I have alluded. It is a sad and distressing fact that the youngest case of constitutional syphilis ever known in Bellevue Hospital was that of a child named Esther ——, aged only seven years. Her little frame was so saturated with the poison that an early death would undoubtedly be the best relief for her sufferings. Young as she was, she was sent out by her parents to make money, and the omission to make it was punished by a beating; the money could not be made fast enough without immorality, and the result was exactly what might have been expected.

There is a strange and singular phase of vice existing, more particularly among foreigners, which is directly the instigation of the devil, but which is known to very few excepting those who have been compelled to apply the moral probe in the investigation of disease. I refer to the superstitious theory that where a male, through vicious indulgence, has contracted disease, by securing as his victim a perfectly pure child, the disease will leave him and affect only the child. No more ghastly suggestion could emanate from the fiend than this, and yet it has been to my certain knowledge the occasion of an infinite number of acts of violation perpetrated upon innocent female children.

The foregoing cases are more particularly those of very young children. As adolescence advances the danger is still greater. The vanity of adulation; the desire to make money easily; the love of dress and finery; the envy of those who enjoy the latter—these are important and well recognized factors in child vice. A girl, for instance, is beguiled by her playmate into visiting the dime museum for the purpose of seeing some wonderful freak of nature.

*A paper read at the World's Congress on Social Purity, Memorial Art Institute, Chicago.

In ignorance of what she is to see, she enters a vile resort. There she makes an acquaintance. Then she is taken to a brothel. Then, when her ruin is accomplished, she is afraid to tell, and unless either disease makes its appearance or a burst of contrition follows the commission of the sin, or something occurs, as her non-attendance at school, to awake suspicion, she becomes hardened in vice and almost a professional prostitute before she has reached womanhood.

One of the most fruitful schools of vice in this respect is the training of children for the song and dance business, and this is all the worse because the parents themselves are made the agents for the ruin of the children. Tempted by promises of large gains, they are induced to allow their children to be educated for the song business, which means the memorizing of impure and obscene verses, and for the dance, in which the children denuded of their clothing and clad in tights so transparent as almost to present the appearance of human flesh, are drilled day after day in exercises intended to render the limbs supple, and are then exhibited before a public audience in this semi-nude costume, until at last every sense of decency disappears. Then another pernicious avenue is opened in the way of picnics and balls of a public character where, as the girl nears womanhood, she is allowed to go in company with others of her sex, without proper oversight; and then her fall becomes an easy matter, especially with the accessories of beer and liquor, of which she first partakes in innocence, which she soon learns to like, and which simply hasten her downfall.

Owing to the stringent laws which have been passed in the state of New York and sister states in the Union, whereby sexual vice under the age of sixteen years is practically made a felony for the procurers of it, a certain check has been placed upon its advance, within that bound. But the large and continual increase of our foreign population, who bring with them very crude ideas on the subject of morality and whose ignorance proverbially engenders vice, frequently, in our large cities, taxes to the utmost the restraining vigilance of our Societies for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. In the city of New York alone, the Superintendent of Police and the author of this article compared notes with exactly the same result, and viewing the matter from two different standpoints they agreed that the number of prostitutes in New York city to-day was at least 40,000. The average life of one of these unfortunates is five years, so that the extent of the vice may be readily understood when it is considered that twenty years previous the number was one-half that mentioned; in other words, that the number of prostitutes has doubled during the last twenty years in the city of New York alone. The question then is, what is the method of dealing with and destroying child prostitution?

First, if corporal punishment could be inflicted in every case upon the offender where a felony consists in, or is accompanied by the infliction of physical pain and suffering on another; or if the law at least provided that in addition to the penalties now imposed by statute, the violation of a child under the age of sixteen years in every case should be punished by corporal punishment, a most salutary check would be put upon one class of brutes in human form, who would dread the lash while they did not fear imprisonment as the penalty. It was only the lash which stopped the "garroting" of peaceful citizens in England some time since. It would be more dreaded than any other punishment which could be devised by law. It certainly would be appropriate in every case of child violation, and it would tend much to diminish the evil as it now exists. Our laws have done much to prevent systematic professional child prostitution. The utilization of a female child for that purpose is made a felony by the laws of the state of New York, and this law has been generally copied elsewhere throughout the United States. Again and again the keepers of brothels have notified the society over which I preside of children being brought to them for improper purposes, and in many cases have detained the abductor until his arrest could follow, because, as they expressed it, "It was bad enough that grown women should lead such a life, without dragging children down to hell before they became women." So vigilant has been our attitude, and so vigorous our action in these cases, that it is next to impossible to-day to find, even in the great city of New York, with its countless brothels, one single establishment where a child can be procured by any patron of the place. And yet the evil does exist, and it is difficult to cure on account of the morally polluted atmosphere which the children breathe. The little girls who run about the docks and play out on the streets at night, with no one to guard or protect them, soon come within the category of the lost. In order to shield these children from vice, active moral and religious influences are absolutely necessary, especially the latter. Unless more vigor is put by the teachers in our Sunday-schools, by those who are interested in the reclamation of the young, and by those who make a practical study of tenement house life, into the work for the moral purification of the atmosphere and the substitution of intellectual and religious attractions for evil associations, it is impossible to say where the evil will end or where reformation can begin.

Second, the great difficulty with the child prostitute is that when once the moral sense is blunted by the vice there is but little ground left for cultivation. It seems almost impossible to restore that purity which is innate in every female child, when once vice has obliterated every trace of it. True, there are cases where the past life has been shrouded in oblivion, apparently forgotten, and the unfortunate victim by subsequent marriage has blotted out the past. But as a general rule, when once vice has fastened its grip upon the female victim, she becomes a professional as soon as age permits, and the early grave, towards which the excesses incidental to the life inevitably tend, ends her earthly existence. Houses of reformation accomplish much; there is no limiting the benefits from careful religious training and teaching, because the mercy of God is unlimited; but unless the unfortunate child is taken absolutely and entirely away from every surrounding of vice, so that the atmosphere which she is to breathe no longer possesses a taint of the deadly disease, an attempt to cure the malady is like attempting to destroy typhus fever in an infected locality where the very air reproduces and disseminates the germs of the disease. Sad, sad, indeed, is the picture. And yet, the more fearful the ravages of the vice, the more urgent the task of employing every effort to repress it. Only an organized system, such as exists in many of our excellent institutions for the reformation of young children, can accomplish any permanent result; and it is to the credit of the people of these United States that this century has done more in the way of creation of such institutions, and the passage of such laws to repress child-vice, than any of its predecessors. And while the results may seem small, while the percentage of those saved from lives of infamy may be not large, it is enough to encourage those who persevere manfully in the work, and who see in the little child—once the beautiful image of God's own purity, though now disfigured with moral disease—a subject for rescue, because over its fall even the angels weep.

THE IDEAL WOMAN.

[Comparatively few have answered the challenge of the Ideal Man, but the quality of the following responses compensates for numerical strength. No wonder these men speak so enthusiastically, with such wives as make home for them. Thank you! Selah!—Ed.]

IDEAL-REAL.

Of course you mean the "ideal woman" to be the ideal wife, since one hardly conceives of the ideal woman as merely a something to be admired as a Venus de Medici. I could hardly describe my ideal better than Dickens has portrayed her in his Agnes Wickfield. To my mind, Agnes is as nearly an ideal, possibly real, woman as fancy can present.

May I add, sotto voce, that when a college boy, I met Agnes in real flesh and blood? Years afterward I wooed and won her, and now, after long years, I am perfectly sure that I have the identical character, if not the identical woman, whom Dickens has made immortal in David Copperfield.

THE IDEAL-PROGRESSIVE.

No man ever grew up with more reverence for a fine woman than I. I have never lost that reverence; but my idea of what constitutes a fine woman has materially changed. I used to think her essential qualities in youth, were sweetness, delicacy and modesty, and, in after life, a home-loving wifeliness and Madonna-like motherliness. Fifty years of observation and reflection have taught me that a woman grows nobler and truer to herself and all her obligations who, still faithful and loving in her home relations (for her heart will always be there), is yet full of intelligence on all matters that are interesting the public, full of a sense of the value of her sex in its relation to social progress, full of an appreciation of her rights as a human being, inspirable by inspiring thoughts and influences, and a power for good in the community in which she lives, and perhaps in that larger community that makes up the nation to which she belongs.

She is to me the noblest woman who, without mere personal ambition or self-seeking of any sort, and with a great spirit of helpfulness toward all the wronged and suffering, limits the field of her work only by her ability and opportunity, making these, and not any conventional rules, the test of what God meant that she should do. That a woman may be all this, and yet not lose a particle of her wifeliness or motherliness, or of her sweetness and delicacy, is a matter of absolute knowledge with the writer.

AN ENLARGER OF FREEDOM.

1. She dies young, but she is long-lived.
2. Her chest is broad, her bosom full, her waist moderate, but not small.
3. Her head is high but not broad at the ears. Her face is well developed but moderate with lower half and the temples full.
4. Her eyes sparkle, and a captivating smile ever lies in ambush to conquer all who approach.
5. As Pope says, "Oft she rejects but never once offends."
6. She is at home in all situations, never wearies in serving others, and manages her husband so well that he is a loyal and well satisfied subject.
7. She is independent of all needless and absurd conventional rules, being a born reformer and enlarges the area of freedom for all women, for whatever she does seems right to all around her, and she cares nothing for the comments of the far-off circle of fools.
8. Her children are an ornament to society and look to her with reverential love.
9. She lives in close communion with her guardian angels, and realizes the heavenly life on earth.

THE FOOT SOLDIER OF THE AGES.

The ideal woman is the one who, from conditions unknown, has caught the spirit of the ages and joined its great evolutionary march.

Such a woman is ever growing and gathering the truest and best from each experience. Sorrow and joy, misfortune and success, surroundings, culture, travel, and every possible condition of life, are so many schools from which she graduates to higher planes of activity. Such women I have seen passing through great clouds of trial and suffering, from the inebriety of some loved ones or other trials, which have developed and broadened life and raised them to ethical points of view unknown to others.

The ideal woman has come and can be seen in outline and in early stages, in almost every section. She is the woman who never stops growing, mentally, morally and physically, and who is always above the low levels of the present, and always struggling to higher conceptions and higher activities, and who makes the present stepping-stones for the future.

The ideal woman follows the same line of development and growth that characterizes all things in nature. Limitations in some directions are compensated for by increased activities in others, and are in an ever ascending round, assimilating, growing, enlarging and rising to higher levels, until the mortal drops off and the ideal life begins.

WHO IN GOD LIVETH.

Size and symmetry are large elements in my ideal of woman, as well as of man. Symmetry means spirituality and sensitiveness, as well as balance of soul. Size means strength and comprehensiveness, not of mind only, but of affection, imagination, will and conscience. In woman even more than in man, charm and power depend on symmetry of soul. In both man and woman, symmetry has its pricelessness enhanced by intensity, flame, inspiration, and these arise only when the soul lives in the mood of glad self-surrender to conscience. Mrs. Browning, herself almost an ideal woman, writes:

"What's the best thing in the world?
Something out of it, I think."

God is the source of all ideals. What is the best thing in man or woman? God in both.

Joseph Cook.

THE FASHION OF HER CHANGETH.

The ideal woman varies, like other women—and men. Twenty-five years ago I could have told you all about her—but now, if I give you a single thought it must be expressly limited, like a railroad conductor's "trip slip," "Good for this trip and train only." I say she varies, and so she does, from any woman to no woman, according to the age and mood of the ideal-er. If I had kept word-pictures of all the ideal women I have created since I was first in love—with a woman just my mother's age—the assortment would paralyze the ideal ethnologist who might be seeking for even a faint family likeness among them. But there always is a woman in the "secret place" of a man's ideality, and as nearly as I can define her or describe, she is just a real woman—loved.

HILLSBORO CRUSADE SKETCHES.

XII.

BY ELIZA J. THOMPSON.

An evening service of much interest was held in the Methodist church about the 20th of April; the Rev. S. D. Clayton was called upon for a speech. He responded in an earnest, rousing address, taking for a text the reply of a saloon-keeper, in a town near by, when a broken-hearted mother besought him to sell no more liquor to her only son. Said he: "Madam, your son has as good a right to fill a drunkard's grave as any other mother's son, and I will sell to him as long as he has money to pay for it." I only wish a reporter had been on hand, that the words of power and pathos on that occasion could have been preserved; but they were not lost.

The New Temperance Era came forth about this time, and met a very great need in our work, not only as a source of information among the Ohio workers, but as a campaign document for no license. A committee of young ladies was appointed to canvass the town for subscribers—Misses Bessie Wilson, Ella Dill, Grace Gardner and Eliza Anderson. Dr. P. H. Wever was also requested to receive names and money, and send for the papers. In about two days the Doctor reported fifty-eight subscriptions sent on to the editor. Oh, for the zeal of those Crusade days, to be applied to THE UNION SIGNAL, Oak and Ivy Leaf, Young Crusader and the Temple!!

The "State Temperance Fair," to be held in Cincinnati, was now the theme of great interest and all Crusaders felt the importance of a state fund for temperance work. A meeting was called in our little village for the purpose of deciding what we could do, and right heartily did our ladies, young and middle-aged, respond; a certain number of our Crusaders were elected to take charge of the Hillsboro table, and work, beautiful and useful, to the amount of about $100 was prepared. When the time came the committee went down to Cincinnati, took charge of and sustained this table, securing for its adornment and significance a handsome painted canopy bearing the motto, in beautiful golden letters mingled with scarlet and black,

"Death to the Traffic, but Life to the Slave!"

At a morning meeting in the old Crusade Church, about the 25th of May, 1874, a message came telling of the arrest of Cincinnati's Crusaders, and a city missionary who had for a long time been preaching on the streets of the city, unmolested.

After prayer was offered in behalf of the persecuted ones, the president was requested to write to her friends, Mesdames Wm. I. Fee and S. K. Leavitt, expressive of the heartfelt sympathy of our entire association in this, their time of trial. The meeting for the next morning was to be appropriated to prayer and supplication for their particular cases. Before our meeting adjourned, Brother Saylor came in with the cheering news that the Rocky Fork distillery was about to close for want of customers, and that the Lynchburg distillery was closed. These being two of Highland county's "high towers of iniquity," much joy was felt upon the report, and the grand old doxology was sung "with the spirit and the understanding," and we were dismissed by Brother McSurely with a tender benediction in reference to the treatment of Cincinnati's noble women.

Some time before a committee had been empowered to name a number of gentlemen who would serve in a county and township temperance organization. The following gentlemen agreed, and a more judicious selection could not have been made: General McDowell, Judge Mathews, Drs. P. H. Wever, H. S. Fulliton and Marshall A. Nelson. The accepted mission was at once entered upon by this committee, and the Crusaders responded very heartily to all invitations to aid in this work of the new temperance organization.

OUR AMERICAN MONTE CARLOS.

BY LA SALLE A. MAYNARD.

We are accustomed to think and speak of the infamous institution at Monte Carlo in Southern Europe as the summation of all that is evil and reprehensible in the gambling business. For years it has gone under the familiar and appropriate title of "the gambling hell of Europe." At frequent intervals we are treated to tables of ghastly statistics detailing the number of suicides, murders and other crimes for which the place is responsible.

But vile as Monaco is, and no words are strong enough to paint all its vileness, I assert it as a solemn and a fearful fact, that we have in this country to-day a gambling institution before whose baleful power and damning influence the dens at Monte Carlo sink into comparative insignificance. I refer to the horse-racing interest, or to what is known as the turf. Here we have a large number of Monte Carlos, an aggregation of them, stationed at various points throughout the country, all linked together for a common purpose and with common ends. But every one of these race-tracks is a center of demoralizing influence for all the country around. For every suicide or other crime attributable to the gambling tables at Monte Carlo a hundred may be ascribed to the influence of turf gambling. Next to the banded liquor interest stands the turf as an agency of evil, as a corrupter of politics and public morals, as a breeder of vice and crime. Like the liquor interest the turf commands the allegiance of legislatures, juries, courts and municipal governments. It counts its wealth by tens of millions, and nothing that money can buy is permitted to stand in the way of its success. The secular journals of the country, with rare exceptions, are its most obedient and willing servants. Every day the "cards" at Guttenberg, Gloucester, and other similar resorts are flashed over the country for the use of newspapers and pool-room keepers in catering to the gambling propensities of the people. It is for this reason, among others, that turf gambling is a far more powerful agency of evil than Monte Carlo. The influence of the latter is confined almost wholly to the territory where the gambling tables are located, whereas through the agency of the press and the telegraph the turf gamblers throw out their lines into all the towns, hamlets, and byways of the land.

The brothels, the dives, the saloons, and all other evil resorts of the towns and cities empty themselves into these enclosures. The thief, the swindler, the harlot, the roué—all creatures who prey upon the community here find the largest liberty and the most congenial atmosphere. Here such things are taught and openly practiced, ofttimes under the color of law, and always with a certain amount of respectable encouragement and support. The race-track business from beginning to end is a tissue of fraud and treachery. It is only by the merest chance that an honest race is ever run on any track. A regular conspiracy exists between the owners of horses, the jockeys, and the "bookmakers," by which the deluded wretches who frequent the tracks in the hope of winning something by "placing" money on horses are fleeced and robbed. If persons are allowed to win now and then it is only that the blind infatuation may be kept up and new victims brought in.

Let me quote on this point the testimony of Thomas J. Byrnes, superintendent of police, New York. Mr. Byrnes has never posed as a teacher of morals, but he has a large and intimate knowledge of crime and crime-breeders, and he ought to be a good witness. In an interview published in the New York Times some months ago, Mr. Byrnes said: "What respectable man who knows the race-tracks for what they are, will to-day take his wife or his daughter to a race-track to see the races for the pleasure of seeing them? He must sit among a lot of over dressed women who yell and shout like men, and who act as decent men would be ashamed to act. To seat a good woman or a young girl among the horde of hardened, gambling-crazed females who are found in the grand stands on every racing day, is an insult to the entire sex. Horse-racing here is in the hands of a gang of criminals, including swindlers, thieves, blackmailers, and even murderers. They prey upon each other and everybody else." Such language as this would hardly have been used had not the facts warranted it. One of the leading turfmen of the day and the owner of the largest and most fully equipped race-course in the country is John A. Morris. But this John A. Morris was one of the chief owners and managers of the Louisiana lottery, and has probably done more than any other man of this century to debauch and ruin his fellow-men. Since his viperous institution at New Orleans was crushed under the heel of the Federal government, he has devoted the most of his attention to the development of his other gambling concern at Morris Park. Other and lesser lights of the race-track world are such men as the "Big Four," who control the track at Guttenberg, N. J. One of these men is a murderer who escaped justice, another formerly kept a notorious den in New York and was finally driven from the city, a third is an ex-saloon-keeper, and a fourth is a bar-room politician of Jersey City, a man whose name stands for all that is corrupt in political life.

A significant and suggestive feature of the transactions of the turf is the vast amount of money involved. Things here always go in large figures. Turf writers, race-track owners and gamblers talk as glibly of thousands and tens of thousands as honest men do of dollars and cents. John A. Morris is said to have an income of $150,000 a year from stakes and purses alone, and he is worth many millions. The "Big Four" of Guttenberg were poor seven years ago. Now they own palatial residences in the city, and are worth all the way from one hundred thousand to a million dollars each. The gross receipts at Guttenberg each year are said to be over $2,500,000, and of this amount over $1,750,000 is clear profit. The "starter" on the Guttenberg track receives a salary of $25,000 a year, and many perquisites. A jockey who rode a winning horse in a great race a few weeks ago received $5,000 as a gratuity. The gamblers pay a regular fee of $100 for the privilege of doing business on the tracks. The Western Union Company pays $1,100 a day for the telegraph privilege at Guttenberg. The gambling privileges alone at Washington Park, a race-track near Chicago, were sold for the present year to a well-known St. Paul gambler for $175,000. It was recently stated by Police Commissioner MacLean, of New York City, that within a radius of nine miles of the city hall over nine million dollars had been laid out for the conveniences of horse-racing. It was openly charged and generally believed that $150,000 was raised among turfmen for influencing legislation in New Jersey last winter. Where does all this money come from? Let the results of the defalcations and embezzlements directly due to "playing on the races" be a partial answer to this question. We have it on the best authority that over $2,898,000 was stolen in a single year recently by men who afterward confessed that the money was lost on the races. Mr. Chauncey M. Depew said, in a newspaper interview not long ago, that ninety per cent of the defalcations and thefts and ruin of youth among people employed in places of trust are due directly to gambling.

All the country knows the dark and shameful story of how New Jersey was literally sold into the hands of the race-track gamblers. Surely a more disgraceful chapter of legislative history was never written than that recording the work of the lawmakers of New Jersey last spring. When the results of the conspiracy between the legislators and the gamblers became known, a whirlwind of wrath swept over the state; but nothing availed to shake the purpose of the creatures who had betrayed the commonwealth. They carried out their bargain in spite of all appeals, resolutions and mass-meetings. The result is that the state is covered as it never was before with a network of race-courses operating under the new laws. And what the turf gamblers and their legislative friends have done in New Jersey they are trying to do in other states. They practically control the legislature of New York now, and can have almost anything they desire. In Tennessee race-tracks are licensed, and pool gambling is protected by official sanction. The Illinois legislature passed a similar law at its last session, but happily for the cause of public morals, the Supreme Court of that state has declared it unconstitutional, denying the power of the legislature to make crime legal under any conditions.

It is high time that the full truth was set forth plainly. It is time that a strong, united and general resistance was made to the spread of gambling practices, and the encroachments which gamblers are making everywhere in the fields of legislation and government,

THE TWELFTH INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION OF CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORERS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Our city of 220,000 has been touched by 16,500 young Christians; and they, in turn, have gone to touch over one million and a half of their comrades in arms! Here are but two lines of the reflex influence of the great convention. How many lines run out from these, netting the globe! They came to us from afar. The British Isles, France, Africa, China and Japan sent their greetings in person. Cablegrams from other foreign parts heaped upon Secretary Baer's desk, silent messengers of societies in prayerful coöperation with us all. As these messages were read the yearly motto, "One is your Master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren," tingled with fullness of meaning. "The love of Christ constraineth us." What else could have brought so many from so far at such sacrifice? Think of Texas sending ninety-seven, and California over one hundred and fifty.

And Montreal was ready for them. Scouts with white yachting cap faced with the word "Reception" met, one hundred miles away, every incoming train and boat, and at the five main landing spots—the three railway stations and the two docks—scores of white caps extended cordial greetings to our visitors. Our city, best of all, was prepared spiritually to receive the convention. For weeks the pastors had united in earnest prayer in an upper room for an outpouring of God's spirit, and their churches and societies moved in the same atmosphere.

The opening services of the convention were, most fittingly, services for prayer. Five of the largest churches were crowded on Wednesday evening, the theme of each meeting being "The Holy Spirit." His power was manifest there, and at every succeeding session. Souls were saved as God's servants gave their messages.

The united society seemed bent on giving this year a a program, vital and practical, and they succeeded. The keynote was aggressive work for Christ and the church, and more of it. The rum power, social evils, corruption in politics, Sabbath desecration, infamous acts, such as the Geary act, struck a wall of adamant, where they met the eternal principles of truth and righteousness in the young hearts of the Christian Endeavorers. Nothing brought forth such thunderous applause as recitals of hand-to-hand conflicts with the rum demon and victories over him. The following resolution was passed with great applause:

Resolved, That we recognize in the liquor traffic the chief evil of the time and chief obstacle to the advancement of a Christian civilization; that we condemn intemperance in every form; that we stand for the suppression of the saloon and the abolition of its power in the politics of our land as one of the first duties of American citizenship, and that we heartily commend all righteous agencies whose purpose is the protection of our home and of the true interest of humanity by the extermination of the liquor traffic.

When the resolution was read that firmly and unmistakably condemned the opening of the gates of the World's Fair on Sunday, the convention rose as one body, and every face was flushed with holy indignation at the violation of God's sacred day. None could fail to read this sign. It said to evil men and to devils, "You may gain a temporary victory, but it will be short-lived, God helping us." The church of to-morrow will be so near the heart of such nation that she shall turn it as the rivers of water.

There are two other impressions that the meetings left on the mind of an observer—the missionary spirit convinced, and the holy earnestness to win souls to Christ. It was quite plain that hundreds of young souls in the vast gathering had already given their lives to Christ for mission work, and as in past conventions hundreds more were brought into the "valley of decision." President Clark's tour around the world was an element in this earnest advance in missionary zeal, united with the personal touch with missions in the two-cents-a-week plan of giving recommended at the Minneapolis convention, and so universally adopted by the societies.

Soul-winning has always been uppermost in this great society. The associate member compels this. A society without associate members is guilty of neglecting her greatest missionary field. One hundred and fifty-eight thousand associate members last year were brought into full fellowship with the church. Next year, by God's help, great things are to be attempted. No scene was so thrillingly inspiring as the one witnessed Sunday evening in the Drill Hall when at least nine thousand hands were uplifted and held silently before God, as President Clark led in simple, earnest prayer that the sacred desire in every heart to save at least one soul might be granted for His Name's sake.

The impression upon our city of many races and creeds was deep. The patience and good humor of our visitors in trying circumstances, were observed by outsiders and provoked comment. The sweet oneness of spirit was a telling object lesson to the world, and so real was the earnestness exhibited that a well-known atheist of our city who attended several of the meetings confessed its power and said, "Right or wrong, you people mean it."

Vast as was the labor of accommodating the convention, I am convinced that every Christian citizen would say, "Come again, and bless us with your presence."

MISS ACKERMANN "AT HOME" TO THE PEOPLE OF THE NORTHWEST.

Dear Union Signal:—The quality that most stirs human hearts is courage. Splendid heroism is the great history-maker. When it is linked to the driving-wheel of a great principle, martyrs and epochs are born fast. Five years ago Miss Jessie Ackermann severed every old tie, to carry the gospel of total abstinence to the outlying world. Threading her way along our coast to Alaska, she began the one hundred thousand miles of travel round the earth which she had just completed on Tuesday, July 18. Then the people of the hardy Northwest came by the hundreds to that heaven-given haven for the weariest, Rest Island, Minn., to grasp her hand, to look into the face of the woman who had the heroism to go out alone to girdle the earth with the white ribbon, and to say to her, "I know thy works and thy toil and patience . . . behold I have set before thee an open door which none can shut . . . because thou didst keep the word of my patience I also will keep thee from the hour of trial . . . him that overcometh shall all things inherit."

The order of ceremonies was a brief welcome home to Miss Ackermann, in behalf of the National W. C. T. U. and the Southern people, by the writer; a greeting from the young women of the land by Miss Belle Kearney, National organizer of the Y's; a salutation from the neighboring W. C. T. Union of Lake City, by Mrs. Chritchett, wife of the Baptist pastor of that place, and an enthusiastic reception from the Christian Endeavor Society by the general secretary, Rev. W. H. Meddlar, of the Congregational church of Wabasha, Minn. A part of the Endeavor greeting was the presentation of baskets of lovely flowers, by six little girls as emblematic of the methods of Endeavor work. Mrs. Dr. Hobart, president of the Minnesota state W. C. T. U. was prevented by illness in her family from giving the welcome in behalf of the state.

Miss Ackermann responded in an address of thrilling interest. She said that somebody had asked her what was the greatest thing that had happened to her in her famous journeys. "Coming home, coming home," she replied. As one of the conclusions of her many experiences, and surely few can speak with so wide knowledge, Miss Ackermann stated a fact which every church should take to heart—that the people who need missionaries most are the law-makers of Christian lands.

Brave Jessie Ackermann is a woman of splendid physique, unimpaired by the great stress to which it has been subjected, of admirable poise of mind and character, and evidently trained and molded by the Spirit to lead out the best in men and women for the best uses.

The annual convention week for Christian workers began on July 16, at Rest Island, the loveliest spot on the upper Mississippi, where John and Mary Woolley are giving "a chance" to the drink-tossed to anchor off the sea of temptation and find a refuge in Christ. Here for a week railway and boat pour out their freight of excursionists, while the hungry-hearted by hundreds thread their way for miles in vehicles, through the woods, to the great tent in the solemn, sweet temple of the groves where daily, in afternoon and evening, "the better way" is presented with wonderful power of the Holy Ghost.

There were too many Christian workers and guests present to name in this hurried letter, but Rev. Frank Peterson, superintendent of the Baptist Missions of the northwest, preached a remarkable sermon on consecration, the burden of which was that every worker should stop making excuses and go into the battle for the Lord with whatever weapon he has in hand, as Moses went before Pharaoh with his staff only, which the power of God made miracle-working for the release of Israel. Joshua with his trumpet, David with his stone and sling, Elijah with his mantle smiting the fleeing waters, Sampson with his jaw-bone and the little lad's little basket of loaves and fishes—all used of God for His mighty works.

Mrs. Charlton Edholm, of World's W. C. T. U. press department, was a busy factor in the meetings; also Mrs. Nelson, of the state work; numerous representatives of pulpits and H. N. Timolat, the earnest-hearted and godly superintendent of the mission, gave special strength to the gathering, but there was universal regret that charming Mrs. Timolat was unfortunately too ill to attend.

Rev. W. H. Boole, D. D., of New York, husband of our Mrs. Boole, founder of the Water Street Mission, in which Jerry McAuley was converted, and out of which has arisen that amazing work in the dark corners of New York City, was the main figure of the convention. In the time of the Crusade he espoused the cause of woman and temperance, and ever since has set it ahead in his work, on the principle that justice is God's chief attribute, and must be satisfied before any more mighty works can be done by the church. He preached every day, and the rocks, remedies and rockets, the cream, comfort and grit poured out overwhelmingly from his experiences of the grace and goodness of God, all were turned into bread for starving souls. He led the morning prayers in Somerset cottage, the focal interest of Rest Island work, where the hour is devoted to the simplest, most practical instruction as to the bone and sinew of Christianity, to the exclusion of isms and creeds—teaching on the most progressive, modern, thoughtful lines. Out of this kind of instruction shall go from this place men—and women, too, in time—to stir the people to activity in operative Christianity touching the great reforms of the day, especially the liquor traffic; the central thought being that while it is a vital point to rescue drunkards, it is an infinitely more pressing business upon the Christian conscience to destroy the complicity of church and government with the license of this tarffic in lives and souls.

John G. Woolley is the all-pervading and unique spirit of the work. One of the men who rejoices in a Saviour found at Rest Island, and the thirst for drink destroyed, said: "Isn't Mr. Woolley the sweetest man in the world?" "Sweetest and strongest," was the reply, "for he is strong as sweet. God bless him and Mary Woolley!—they are inseparable in thought."

Every day witnesses deep works of grace in Rest Island Mission—men delivered from the power of appetite by the power of Christ. When I had to turn back to work in Chicago I felt like Moses coming down from the Mount to that golden calf in the valley. But the soft lapping of waters on the shore, the light and color, the opalescent mists clinging to the hills, the sweet breath of woods and flowers, and the diviner "communion of saints" enfold me still—for it seems as if we had turned aside, for a little while, with Christ and His near ones, to those mountain sides where He loved to go when He was world-weary. Life would be glorified and the world won for Christ if the truth were everywhere told in the simplicity with which it is uttered at Rest Island.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

And he said unto her, Thy sins are forgiven. And they that sat at meat with him began to say within themselves, Who is this that forgiveth sins also? And he said to the woman, Thy faith hath saved thee; go in peace.—Luke 7:48, 49, 50.

Let all the faithful read the following letter, which is written by Mrs. Harriet M. Bond; she has passed her three score years and ten, and is not only bowed under the weight of years, but of poor health. She says: "Several weeks ago I proposed to our union that we try to raise a dollar a member for the Temple, but was informed that the society was in debt, and could not do anything at present. I thought I would see what I could do by calling on individual members of the union and other friends. I have succeeded in collecting $19, which I forward by to-day's mail; $10.50 of this has been contributed by ladies not members of the union. But I think it all had better be credited to the Lake Mills, Wis., W. C. T. U." We would like to print the above in letters of gold and send it to every union in the land, to show the faint-hearted what one, aged and feeble, inspired by a noble purpose, accomplished. Another saintly one, Mrs. E. R. Coates, sends $14, which she secured by getting friends to fill mite-boxes, etc. She makes excuse for not having accomplished more, by saying, "Sickness, death and trouble have been in my family during the past year, and I have been so crippled in my feet I could not get from home. I have just sent $14 to the Temple, and shall endeavor to secure as much more. An original Crusader, eighty-six years old, Mrs. E. A. Johnson, Elkhart, Ind., sends $2.50 from her mite-box. This is the second gift from her.

Mrs. V. H. Danforth, Jamestown, N. Y., is another living witness showing what can be accomplished by one impelled by a high aim and determined purpose, even when burdened by the weight of advancing years and failing strength. This noble woman, two or three years ago, wrote, stating that she was very anxious that a suitable memorial should be placed in Willard Hall to commemorate the fact to coming generations that Chautauqua, New York, was the birthplace of the W. C. T. U. We wrote her stating that we had drawings for a beautiful fountain in the corridor of Willard Hall, which the architect estimated would cost about $1,000, and it seemed to us it would be a most fitting memorial for the object she desired. The cost, however, appalled her; but she prayed over the matter, and faith was given her to believe that the work could be accomplished. She then presented the subject to the W. C. T. U. of Chautauqua county, and these brave women came nobly to her aid pledging to stand by her until the work was accomplished. Part of the fountain had to be cast in bronze, but it cost much more than the architect had contemplated. We gave the work to one of our best sculptors, Carl Rohl-Smith. The bronze is completed and is indeed a superb work of art. The cost, however, instead of being $1,000 is $1,450. Did Mrs. Danforth and her noble co-laborers give up the undertaking when they found the price so great? Not a bit of it! Mrs. Danforth has just sent a check for $308.25—a little bird has whispered that $50 of this amount was her own gift. This makes over eleven hundred dollars that Chautauqua county has paid on the fountain, and they are now at work raising their last three hundred dollars. Without a doubt these brave women will accomplish that whereunto they have set their hand. We are daily expecting from Italy the marble portion of the fountain. As soon as it arrives and is put in place we will write a description of this beautiful memorial for the benefit of our readers. In the meantime let the work accomplished by Mrs. Danforth and her noble helpers be an incentive to all unions and individuals to take hold of the work in faith and courage with the determination to have a part in the erection of the "House Beautiful."

We promised in our last issue to say something this week about the littles which the children are sending to aid in paying for the Temple. Little Edith Harding, of Rich Lake, Wis., sends $3.65 with a nice letter. She tells that after getting her mite-box, she was taken ill with typhoid fever and was confined to bed for eleven weeks. When she was a little better and her friends began to call on her she would pass around her mite-box, so the little invalid at last got it filled. Little Emily Kennard, Lebanon, Tenn., sends $3.65 which is all her own savings and earnings; $3.65 has been received from little eight-year-old Alice Cortland, Concord, N. C., who collected the money from the members of the W. C. T. U.

A beautiful letter has been received from Mr. Walter Tucker, Wellesley, Mass., enclosing a check for $17 from his children, which includes $5 from himself. Frank aged fourteen, sends $4, Bessie ten years old, sends $4, and Emma of eight years, sends $4. Mr. Tucker writes: "Our Ralph sent his some time ago; most of the money has been earned by hard work about home and garden by our girls and boys." Philip C. Jeans, Hillsboro, Ohio, writes: "I send you $5 that I earned mostly myself. My mamma is a white ribboner and my grandma was a Crusader, so of course I could not be anything else but a temperance boy." Mrs. Helen Van Eman, Effie, Texas, writes: "Enclosed please find 50 cents, all that little Charles and Edward Van Eman have been able to save this year. We live in the Pan Handle of Texas, and the drought has been such this year that our farm has not yielded a cent. We live twenty-five miles from town and the children have little communication with others. They begged to save pennies to help build the beautiful Temple, with this poor result. It is their best, however. They will continue their savings and a good crop year will gather many." According to heaven's valuations we believe this fifty cents has become an infinite sum.

MY BOOKS.

BY EMMA PLAYTER SEABURY.

My darling softly comes behind the chair
Where I sit reading, planning my surprise;
She puts her dimpled hands before my eyes,
And kisses me on forehead, lips and hair—
Shutting my book before I am aware.

"I want you now, and I your book will be."
She nestles in my arms as if to rest.
I love this human book of child-life best,
New, precious truths each day it teaches me,
And fills my heart brimful with its own glee.

MRS. BRUCE'S LESSON.

BY NORA MARBLE.

Mr. Bruce often wondered as he looked upon his wife's peevish face, if it could be the same upon which had once rested the sunshine of a happy heart, of a contented spirit, this face, now disfigured by the venomous touch of discontent and envy.

"Oh, yes," she was wont to reply to his mild remonstrances, "the pleasures of life may consist, as you say, in doing acts of kindness, in the knowledge of duties well done, in laying up treasures in heaven," sarcastically, "but"—her eyes fixed enviously upon the fine house across the way—"for me, they exist only in the possession of a great mansion, horses, equipages, jewels!"

Mr. Bruce thought of their little Jamie with his crown of golden curls, a precious jewel for which he doubted not the childless couple across the way would have given their entire fortune; but it would be useless he felt to mention him, for since the erection of that great house, and its occupancy by the wealthy and ostentatious Mr. Craft, love seemed to have taken its departure from his wife's heart. For her, indeed, the whole aspect of life had changed, now that daily, with an envious spirit, she looked upon their neighbor's mettlesome horses, the obsequious footman, the dignified coachman, and caught fleeting glimpses of the elegantly attired and presumably haughty, Mrs. Craft.

"But, Mary," her husband would expostulate, "we certainly are not to say poor, and so far as I can determine we are never to be rich, yet—"

"So far as you can determine," scornfully, "oh, if I were a man I'd determine to be rich or—or—"

"Or what?" sorrowfully.

"Or I'd betake myself to that world in which I had laid up my treasures," bitterly.

As well as he might, Mr. Bruce continued to bear these sarcasms, believing that in time his wife would, by some great sorrow, by some unmixed bitterness of genuine affliction, be aroused to a sense of her folly, if not wickedness.

"Goodness, wisdom, the imperishable gifts of intellect!" she would repeat after him with scorn, "how I hate them all. Had you given less time to your books, to the calls of religion, as you term it, been less scrupulous, less righteous," her mind as she spoke reverting to certain rumors affecting the commercial integrity of their neighbor across the way, "why, I too might be riding in my carriage, and have a fine mansion, and coachman, and footman."

Her husband's mild reply only served to exasperate her.

"Don't tell me," she would repeat angrily, "that God from the beginning meant differences to exist in the conditions of men. 'Tis not so! Look up, and you will climb up, that's my motto!"

A year or more of such reproaches, of bitter repinings, and lo, one day Mrs. Bruce found herself in full possession of their modest home and comfortable income, with the assurance from her husband that he hoped in a distant land to regain an even and quiet mind, while striving to secure that which she deemed earthly happiness alone to consist.

"It may be my duty," he wrote, "and I shall with firm resolution set myself to pursue it. 'Tis a false scale of happiness, Mary, which you have set up for yourself. Through love and love alone will you be brought some day to a sense of your error. The trappings of wealth I hope in time to afford you, but God alone can prove to you the hollowness of that which you now deem so real. Farewell!"

Months passed, and now it was the second anniversary of her husband's departure. "When, oh when," was the ever-recurring wish of her heart, "shall I be able to vie with my neighbors across the way?" Letters from Australia she ever opened with an eager hand, read with a disappointed air; destroyed with petulant anger. Their messages of affection for her, their tender longings for little Jamie touched her not.

"A letter, ma'am," said the servant upon this day, "from Californy, it 'pears like."

"California!" repeated her mistress, startled. "Why, who can it be from?" But further conjecture she cut short by opening it.

"Dear niece," it ran, "it won't be many days before you'll see your old uncle, who is remembering your bright, pretty face the day you stood up to be spliced to honest John Bruce, and he feels pretty sure that now he is poor and ailin' John's roof and yours'll prove a refuge for the declinin' years of your loving

"UNCLE SI."

"Poor and ailing," quoted Mrs. Bruce angrily, "and he'll be here in a few days. Such effrontery! Well, we'll see." And from the smile which flitted across her face—as faint as the last rays of the departing sun—'twas plain to be seen that Uncle Si's fate had already been decided.

In due time, bent and crippled with rheumatism, with great blue goggles shading his weakened eyes, and a beard of patriarchal growth, Uncle Si made his appearance.

"And so John has gone away," said he by the fireside that night, stroking with a loving hand the golden curls of little Jamie, "gone away to seek his fortune, eh?"

"Yes," replied Mrs. Bruce coldly; "he awoke to the fact at last that a man is nothing in this world without riches."

"Nothin' in this world without riches," repeated the old man, "aye, aye!"

"How the poor old fellow seems to enjoy the fire," thought Mrs. Bruce, as in the silence which followed a sigh of contentment broke from his bearded lips, and then, noting his much-worn shoes, she bade Jamie fetch a pair of his father's slippers.

"They will prove more comfortable," she said with a softening of tone which surprised herself.

Something glistened upon the blue-shrouded eyes, glistened, then like drops of heavenly dew fell upon the flowing beard. Jamie, his cheek against the old man's shoulder, with a shy hand touched the pearly drops.

"I love you, Uncle Si," said he in plaintive tones, "won't you—won't you please love me?" The little starved heart had made its moan, that tender heart, which nightly, since the departure of the father, had longed to ask and receive this sweet assurance from the cold, self-absorbed, ambitious woman opposite.

"'Simon Peter, lovest thou me?'" quoted the old man, tenderly drawing the little form to his breast; "'He saith unto Him, 'Yea, Lord, thou knowest that I love thee.' He saith unto him, 'Feed my lambs.'"

Mrs. Bruce smiled as she abstractedly repeated the words, "Feed my lambs."

"Aye," rejoined the old man solemnly, "aye, Mary, the starving soul as well as the starving body. Love is life, a plant of truly celestial seed. 'Tis a barren heart in which it takes not root, for from the heart alone can real happiness sincerely flow."

Something in Uncle Si's words and tone brought the image of her husband before her eyes.

"Through love and love alone will you be brought to a sense of your error," he had written, and for the first time came a realizing sense of the sacrifice he had made in thus abandoning home, and child, and country.

"Love is sacrifice," continued the old man as though in reverie, "Love is atonement! Love solemnized its triumph when that divine head bowed itself upon the cross."

With breathless interest Jamie lay in the speaker's arms, listening, as after an interval of profound silence, the old man in broken tones sang verse after verse of an old-time gospel hymn, the refrain of which,

"The Lamb that was slain,
But lives again—" filling his childish mind with wonder.

"Slain that we might live," was the answer to his timid question, "live, Jamie, to love and serve Him."

"WHAT AM I?"

BY HANNAH A. FOSTER.

"Oh, mamma, what do you think?" shouted little Harry Hill as he bounded into the room. "The boys in our school are going to vote this afternoon, and they're all something! Billy Rice says he is a Republican, and Mike Manning is a Democrat, and I—what am I, mamma?"

His mother, a bright young Y, called a sudden halt on her dinner preparations, sat down, and lifting him upon her lap, brushed back his curly hair, kissed his flushed cheeks, and looking straight and smilingly into his questioning eyes replied:

"Well, my son, let us see if we can find out what you are. You belong to the Band of Mercy where you are taught to be good and kind, gentle to the beautiful dumb animals which God has made, and loving and helpful to your playmates and friends. Then, too, you are a Loyal Temperance Legion boy and have promised never to drink anything that could make you stupid or wicked; never to smoke or chew tobacco, and never to swear or say bad words. The saloons teach people to do all such things! In both your societies you have promised to do all you can to help others to be good and happy. Now, as the saloons make so many men, women and children dreadfully poor, wicked and miserable, one way to help people to be good and happy is to close all the saloons, and those who are determined to do this—those who work and pray and vote against the saloons are called—"

"Oh, mamma, now I know what I am—I'm a Prohibitionist!"

"But are you quite sure, Harry? What if you are the only Prohibitionist in your room, and Billy, Mike and the other boys laugh at you and ask you to vote as they do?"

"Why, mamma, I won't do it! I'm a mercy and temperance boy, you know, and must do all I can to help people be good and happy, so I shall vote against the saloons, anyway!"

"That's my own brave, blessed boy!" said the little Y mother, but her fond kiss of approval said even more.

Your Harry is what you make him. Thank God for the white-ribbon mothers of this and all lands who are educating the boys and girls into intelligent, stanch defenders of purity and justice. The most hopeful sign in our sky of reform is the star of promise that rests over the cradle. When American motherhood shall fully appreciate the profound significance of childhood's "What am I?" it will mean to the world "a nation whose God is the Lord."

The mother, crowned with the love and loyalty of her children, is queen indeed.

Two little girls, very dear to each other, were one day playing "visit."

"Let's play we're our mammas," said Ruth. "You be your mamma and I'll be mine—she is very good looking, you know."

"So is my mamma good looking—better than yours," said Bessie, with much spirit.

"Oh, no, she isn't, but I'll tell you, Bessie, how it is; both our mammas are real good, and yours is some good looking, but how I know my mamma looks the best is because I see her face most all the time, and it's always pretty!"

Although Ruth's logic failed to convince her indignant playmate, we would commend it to mothers everywhere. Every child ought to believe it has a better and more beautiful mother than have other children. Oh, mothers! study the secret of soul culture; covet earnestly the best gifts; grow fairer, stronger, wiser and dearer to your children with every passing year, so shall the love and sweet faith of your little ones never be lost. What are they? What will they be as men and women? Very largely what you make them.

Berea, O.

TRUTHS TOLD BY GEORGE MACDONALD.

Like many another she was hardly aware of the jurisdiction of conscience, save in respect of immediate personal relations.

"Then," she said, "we must see in these birds and blossoms, and that great blossom in the sky, so many prophets of a peaceful time and a better country, sent to remind us that we pass away and go to them."

When the thunder burst he closed the book and went to the window, flung it wide and went out into the court. Like a tide from the plains of innocent heaven through the sultry, passionate air of the world, came the coolness to his brow and heart. Oxygen, ozone, nitrogen, water, carbonic acid, is it? Doubtless—and other things, perhaps, which chemistry cannot detect. Nevertheless, give its parts what names you will, its whole is yet the wind of the living God to the bodies of men, His spirit to their spirits, His breath to their hearts. When I learn that there is no primal intent—only chance—in the unspeakable joy that it gives I shall cease to believe in poetry, in music, in woman, in God. Nay, I must have already ceased to believe in God ere I could believe that the wind that bloweth where it listeth is free because God hath forgotten it, and that it bears from Him no message to me.—St. George and St. Michael.

DEEDS become a home which arrest and bind to themselves the feelings and the love which built them up. Your heart becomes the inmate of its own acts, and dwells in the midst of its expenditure. It has given away its home and it has no other home except in remaining near the one to whom all this has been given. Thenceforth two spirits dwell together. I think the heavenly philosophy of this is contained in the words: "Sell that you hast and give alms—for where your treasure is there will your heart be also." We cannot afford to lightly throw away that person or cause on which we have ventured so much.—F. W. Robertson.

GERALD'S RACKET.

BY JULIA D. PECK.

"Papa, can you give me three dollars to buy a racket? All the boys have them and they have lots of fun playing tennis on the common after school. Mr. White has some for three dollars and I told him I guessed I'd take one," said Gerald Watson, eagerly.

"I cannot give you the money, Gerald," said Mr. Watson, "I have to make a payment on the house next week and I shall need every dollar I have. You will have to do without a racket this year."

"Bob Bowkert's got one, and I know they are a great deal poorer than we are," said Gerald. "I wish I could have things like the other boys."

"You ought to be thankful that you have food and clothes," said Gerald's mother. "We must do without luxuries, for times are hard and everything is high. Your father would be glad to get you a racket if he could, but debts must be paid first, so think no more about it."

"I'm going to have one, mamma, and I can earn it myself, I know I can," said Gerald. "Jack Benson said this morning that his father had six hundred bushels of corn to husk, and that he would pay two cents a bushel for husking. I could husk evenings if you are willing."

"I am perfectly willing to have you earn the money, Gerald, and I think your father will be, and I have no objections to your going to Mr. Benson's to husk, but you must be home before nine."

"All right, mamma, I'll go after school and tell him I'll husk for him," said Gerald, delighted. "How many bushels will I need to husk before I can have the racket?"

"That is a good example for you to work out," his mother said smiling. For she believed children should think for themselves.

"It will take one hundred and fifty bushels, I think," said Gerald. "Oh, dear! It will be a long time before I can earn it—but I'll have it just the same."

"You must remember you are not to neglect your duties or studies," his mother said.

"I won't, mamma, I'll bring in my wood and do everything you want to have me, just the same," said the boy as he gave her a kiss and hurried off to school.

That evening he came home with twenty cents.

"I husked ten baskets full," he cried. "Not big baskets like Mr. Benson's. He let Jack and me have smaller ones and he pays us two cents just the same. We had such fun! Jack and I tried to see who would fill his basket first; and Mr. Benson told jolly stories about when he was a boy. I've made a bargain to husk one hundred and fifty baskets for Mr. Benson and he is to pay me three dollars and then I can get my racket. Hurrah!"

At the end of a week Gerald had earned a dollar and he was a happy boy, for it was the first dollar he had ever earned.

"I didn't know it was such hard work to get money," he said. "I'm going to be more careful about wearing out my boots and clothes so papa won't have to work so hard to get them for me."

Friday he had two dollars and twenty cents earned and his racket did not seem so far off.

"And, papa, Mr. Field says if I'll pick up potatoes for him to-morrow, he'll give me fifty cents," he said, "Have you anything for me to do?"

"No, you may work for him if you like," Mr. Watson said, "but you'll find picking potatoes very hard work."

"I guess I can stand it one day," said Gerald, "and then don't you see, papa, I'll only have to husk fifteen baskets more. And Mr. White says I may have the racket any time and he'll wait for the pay. I didn't ask him, either. He's ever so kind. May I get it to-night when I come home from school?"

"No, indeed, Gerald, you cannot have it until you have the money in your hand to pay," said Mr. Watson, decidedly. "When I was a boy I made a rule that I would not run in debt for anything that I could do without and I find it a very good rule. It saves a great deal of trouble and worry and people have confidence in a boy or man who pays as he goes. Then if it is necessary for him, any time, to borrow money people are ready to trust him. Then there is another thing. Didn't you make a bargain with Mr. Benson that you would husk so many baskets of corn?"

"Yes," said Gerald, faintly, "but I guess may be he won't care." To tell the truth he was growing very tired of husking.

"Perhaps Mr. Benson would let you off if you asked him," said Mr. Watson, "but he would not be likely to trust you in the future. A promise, my son, should be thoughtfully made and be kept if possible. Always remember that."

"I guess you live by the 'Golden Rule,' don't you, papa?" said Gerald, after he had been silent for several minutes. "I never thought before that there is a right way and a wrong way of doing everything. I want Mr. Benson to think I will keep my word so I s'pose I'll have to do as I agreed, but next time I will be careful what promise I make. I'll be glad, I tell you, when it's done."

Not many days after Gerald came home with a very happy face, and a roll of bills which he waved above his head.

"I've earned it all, mamma Watson!" he cried, joyfully. "And I'm going to get my racket this very day. Oh! it will be fun. I shan't have to look on and see the other boys play any longer. I'm going to learn Saturday afternoon, but I'm going to husk evenings for Mr. Benson until I've done the twenty-five baskets that I promised."

"I am sure you will enjoy it much better for earning the money yourself," his mother said. "And you have learned many valuable lessons besides. Your father was speaking about it only this morning, that you had grown more manly and self-reliant. We thought you would give it up before you had earned half enough to buy your racket, and were glad to know you were not easily discouraged."

"I'm afraid I haven't helped you quite so much, mamma," said Gerald, "because I've had my mind upon that, but I'll make it up when I get all my corn husked."

"You might shell these beans for me now if you have time," said his mother, "that would help me a good deal."

Gerald took the pan of beans and sat down on the porch just outside of the kitchen door, when his aunt, who lived near by, came in.

"I'm going to send on my subscription for THE UNION SIGNAL, Mary," she said to his mother, "and I will send for you at the same time if you wish to have me, and save you the trouble of writing."

"We have decided that we must do without it this year," Gerald heard his mother answer. "It has been a hard year for us, as you know; Daniel's accident made a large doctor's bill besides the time he lost, and we have such a horror of debts that we shall do without everything not absolutely necessary."

"But how can you do without your paper that you prize so much? I would be only too glad to lend you mine but we send it as soon as we have read it to Mary, and she depends upon it for her temperance meetings," said Aunt Anna.

"I am sure I don't know how we can do without it," his mother answered, sadly, "but food and clothes we must have—we've taken it ever since we were married and it will be a great trial not to see it every week."

Gerald waited to hear no more but hurried away to school. He did not stop at the store as he intended to do and leave his money for the racket, which tempted him from the window. His face was very sober all the afternoon and it was hard to keep his thoughts on his lessons. When the session was through he hurried away not waiting for the other boys. But instead of going home he went to his Aunt Anna's.

"Here's the money for the paper," he said, when she opened the door. "It's all right and please send right on for it quick!" Then before she could speak he was gone.

Gerald's mother heard her boy go upstairs, and as she called to him and he did not answer she went softly up to his room. Gerald sprang up from the bed where he had thrown himself, as she entered the room. His eyes were red and he wiped the tears hurriedly away, looking very much ashamed.

"I'm glad, I am truly," he cried. "I don't mind it a bit—you needn't think for a moment that I do. I'd a thousand times rather you'd have the paper."

"Gerald! what do you mean?" asked his mother.

"You are going to have your paper," he said, smiling. "I told Aunt Anna to send for it. I would not be so selfish."

"My dear boy," his mother interrupted; "why, I never thought of such a thing."

"Don't you say a word," he cried, with his arms around his mother's neck. "It's too late now, and I'm glad of it. I'm going to have my racket, too, only I'll have to wait a little longer. Mr. Benson told me to come to him any time when I wanted work and he'd give it to me. I'll enjoy it all the more when I do get it—don't you see I will?"

Gerald looked up and saw tears in his mother's eyes and he was fully repaid for his self-denial.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Such good times as are in store for the poor children of Chicago at the World's Fair next Wednesday! I know you will want to hear about the plans which are being made to give ten thousand of the waifs of this big city an immense picnic in beautiful Jackson Park on that day. First, they will gather at eight o'clock and march to the trains which will bear them swiftly to the World's Fair, where they will be met and escorted about the grounds. Then they will have rest and lunch, and a visit to Buffalo Bill's Wild West Show, with games in the afternoon, returning early, so that the newsboys will be in time to sell their afternoon papers. A large quantity of food and clothing will be needed, of course, and kind-hearted people are supplying both. Lunch boxes to be filled are sent to any address by Superintendent Daniels, of the Waifs' Mission, 44 State street, Chicago, Ill., and they will be called for on the evening before Poor Children's Day.

During the first two days of this week there was a gathering of young people at the Art Palace in Chicago, the like of which, I think, was never seen before. It was made up of scholars of highest standing in the public schools, appointed to form the Youths' Congress of the World's Fair. They listened to music by the World's Fair Children's Chorus, addresses by well-known children's writers and messages from noted people of the world, besides visiting the great Exposition. These children's lives are in pleasant places, and in protected homes they receive all the benefits which this great country affords. How different from the children of the street, the homeless boys and girls—spending their precious hours in striving to keep from starvation—who will form the great company on Poor Children's Day!

The Cozy Corner hurrah for Sunday closing of the World's Fair! Now we will feel a genuine interest and a patriotic pride in the great Exposition which we couldn't muster up while the holy Sabbath was broken.

Yours joyfully,

Aunt Jane

Decoration Day our L. T. L. marched to the cemetery and decorated the soldiers' graves. We have quite small meetings now; not over half of the members come. At our last meeting there were but eighteen. I will stop now, and next time I write I hope we will have a bigger Legion. EVA BENNETT.

Bloomingburg, N. Y.

Yes, I am sure your Legion must grow, and you are going to help, aren't you? If each one of the eighteen got one new member, how many would that make?

Is there any room for me in the Cozy Corner? I do not belong to the L. T. L., but I like to read the Cozy Corner letters. I used to belong to the L. T. L. in Lead City, S. Dak., but there were so many saloons there that it broke up in a little while. Mamma said that was a bad place to raise children, so we moved away in 1891 and came to a small town in Florida where the place is so small that they have no Legion, nor any saloons, either, but I see drunken men sometimes.

The getting of treasures by a lying tongue is a vanity tossed to and fro of them that seek death.—Prov. 21:6.

PERILS OF THE GAMBLING EVIL.

It is said that we are fast becoming a nation of gamblers. The mania for gambling extends its baleful influence into almost every financial enterprise, and from the church society to the Wall street manipulator there is the same demoralizing tendency to pander to the popular craze for "taking chances." In the school-boy who plays marbles for "keeps," and the business man who risks his thousands on a turn in the market, may be seen the same morbid craving, differing only in degree from that exhibited by the professional gamester.

In tracing the gambling evil back to first cause, we find its root, like the root of many other evils, to be the "love of money." Now money in itself is good. Rightly used, it is a powerful instrument for the blessing of mankind, hence the acquisitive faculty is not to be despised. It is only when we manifest an inordinate love of money, when we worship it as the one thing needful, that it becomes a curse.

In this age of electricity, these days of swift achievement along all scientific and industrial lines, it is natural that the spirit of restlessness and outreaching (itself one of the factors of human progress) should make itself felt along financial lines also, and become manifest in an abnormal thirst for gain. No man in these bustling, hurrying days is content to follow the slow, laborious methods of his grandfather, whether it be in the way of travel or of money-getting. The eagerness to acquire riches at a bound is to-day the bane of young manhood, especially in our own land so peculiarly favored in multitudinous chances for fortune making. There is a dangerous tendency among our young men of all classes to turn impatiently from legitimate lines of labor with sure, but slow, returns, and to seek some way of gaining a living "by their wits." The "something for nothing" principle, so popular in the business world at the present time, is subversive of all business integrity, and is fraught with serious danger, not only to the individual, but to the nation. The vast army of non-producers, which preys upon the possessions and upon the vices of others, is assuming such proportions as to demand summary action on the part of our legislators. This parasitical class of "bread-winners" impedes the moral and material development of the nation, and is a menace to its financial and industrial stability.

In view, then, of present conditions, it behooves every one who truly desires the welfare and prosperity of this republic to lift up the voice in no uncertain tones concerning the gambling evil. To-day more than ever before in the history of the nation do these United States stand in need of stringent laws against every form of gambling; more than ever is it necessary to demand a rigid enforcement of laws we already have. Though love of money is doubtless the root of the gambling propensity, the motive power which first impels a man to "try his luck" in the pool-room or at the gaming table, and though in some cases it may continue to be the gambler's incentive, the rule is that habitual indulgence in this vice leads to an enslavement most terrible in its consequences. The man who begins by gambling for the sake of gain, soon discovers that he is addicted to the vice for its own sake. His own folly has bound him in chains from which escape is well-nigh impossible. If he awakens to the horror of the situation, if he stops to think about it at all, he realizes that he is powerless in the clutches of a giant evil, and that in all probability a miserable fate is in store for him. There is no "gold cure" for the gambler; no physical treatment that can overcome the abnormal craving of the victim of the gambling evil. Medical and physiological science is daily rendering it more easy to deal with the "dipsomaniac," to cast out the demon of alcoholic appetite, but what can science do for one possessed by the evil spirit of gambling?

Of all forms of gambling, that connected with the race track is most to be dreaded. And this because its veneer of "respectability" serves more effectively to blunt the moral perception. The faro bank and the roulette table are not so alluring to the young man as the horse race. The atmosphere of bold and undisguised vice which surrounds them is naturally repulsive to the beginner. They are popularly regarded as "low" forms of gambling, and the man known to indulge in them loses social caste.

The races, on the other hand, present no such obstacles to the would-be initiate. They are patronized by men and women of high business and social standing, and the daily papers devote column after column to the favorite horses and to the gorgeous turn-outs and elaborate costumes of patrons and patronesses of the "Derby."

The race course stands in the same relation to less reputable gambling resorts that the high-toned, licensed saloon does to the low groggery and the "blind tiger." And as the "respectable" saloon is more dangerous to society than the basement dive, so the "respectable" gambling club is infinitely more harmful than the lawless gaming table.

Vices, like misfortunes, never come singly. Gambling, from its very nature, draws around it other and coarser vices. Its dangers lie most of all in the debasing associations which inevitably plunge the participant into still deeper degradation and leave him a moral and physical wreck. The saloon and the brothel are the inseparable attendants of the gambling resort, however "legal" and "respectable." Gambling, drunkenness and social impurity go hand-in-hand and are the devil's own trinity.

What shall we say of a nation that connives at either of these debauching evils for money? What shall we say of a city which fosters and builds up a powerful gambling enterprise like the Washington Park club of Chicago, and which elects as its chief officer a man known to be hand-in-glove with the "boss" gamblers and saloon-keepers?

And what shall we say of the "good moral citizen"—the church member, perhaps—who by public patronage of a gambling club, or by his presence at a notorious gambling resort, actively countenances and supports this mammoth iniquity and thereby encourages the spread of lawlessness and vice?

WHAT ARE THE FACTS?

Such wild statements have been going the newspaper rounds in England with reference to the effect the adoption of a suffrage plank has had upon the W. C. T. U. in America, that one is almost inclined to forget that wild statements are not indigenous to the British soil, but that they flourish equally well when separated widely from the lion and his mighty roar. Unfortunately for the facts of the case, America, too, has produced a sufficient number of assertions which are incapable of substantiation, to make it impossible for us ever to fear the supremacy of the other side of the Atlantic in this particular kind of falsifying. Strange, is it not, that people who are strictly truthful in all that concerns their private lives, who would not tell a deliberate falsehood though it were to their own personal advantage, will, nevertheless, allow themselves to make statements whose truth or falsity they have not taken the trouble to investigate?

A question in point is the statement made by Rev. J. M. Buckley, that redoubtable champion of the cause of woman, last summer at Chautauqua. In his famous debate he said, "Woman suffrage was tried in the territory of Washington. There no particular interest was taken in it. The female vote was always light." (We suppose Dr. Buckley meant the women's vote, because suffrage thus far has been confined to the genus homo.)

Fortunately, Washington state has some women living in it who believe in the principles and practice of woman's suffrage. One of these, Mrs. Lucy A. Switzer, of Cheney, Wash., has given herself to the work of ferreting out the truth of this statement of the great opposer of progress in the M. E. church. She has placed in our hands several letters received from prominent men and women there, in answer to a request sent them from herself in which, after stating the Doctor's assertion, she requests:

"Please state whether this was true according to your personal observation during the time that impartial suffrage was the law of Washington."

Rev. D. G. Strong, long a presiding elder in the M. E. church in Washington Territory and state, says: "I have no statistics of election before me from which to quote, but, being myself a suffragist, I watched with interest the conduct of the women of Washington Territory pending their right to vote, and observed these points:

"1. The woman's vote was noticeably large.

"2. It was, in a large majority, on the side of good order and sobriety, and hence,

"3. Was objected to, not by the women themselves, nor by the pure-minded men of the territory, but by scheming politicians in the interests of the whisky traffic.

"P. S.—I have lived in Washington since 1876, and had opportunity for a wide range of observation."

Mr. R. C. Dunbar, associate justice of the supreme court, says: "Answering yours of the 6th instant I will say that the quoted statement of Rev. J. M. Buckley, in regard to the practical working of woman suffrage in Washington was either an exhibition of awful ignorance or a willful misstatement of facts. Considering the radical departure of the law from the old, established customs, the 'female vote' was large; and, in fact, it was growing into universal favor. The women of the territory, as a rule, took a very lively interest in the exercise of this right, and almost universally condemned the destruction of the law as an unjust deprivation of their rights. It must be borne in mind that after the supreme court had held the act conferring the right on women void, the people again through their representatives in the legislature promptly reënacted the law, and it remained for an imported supreme court to again declare the act unconstitutional."

From a long time resident Baptist minister, Rev. J. S. S. Cairns, comes the following:

"The statement of Rev. J. M. Buckley with regard to woman suffrage is remarkable in the extreme. We have been in Washington between eight and nine years, and I have been a very close observer of the suffrage question, and my observation is that women very highly appreciated the right of suffrage while they had it and used it to the sorrow of some corrupt politicians. My conviction, from experience with the enlightened Christian women of to-day, is that nineteen-twentieths of them most earnestly desire suffrage, and would use it if they had it. Most of the Christian denominations are agreed in this on this coast, so that when the matter is brought up at our conventions it elicits more enthusiasm than almost anything else. The only opposition is the rum power and corrupt politicians."

Mr. Everett Smith, a prohibition lawyer of Seattle, says: "You ask for my opinion on the workings of woman suffrage in the state of Washington. I assume that you refer to my opinion as to its practical workings, for in theory and principle I cannot see how any thoughtful and fair man can logically take any other position than in favor of the equal rights of women with men. I came to this state in 1885, in territorial days. I came straight from several years' study at Yale and a residence in and near New Haven, Conn., of twenty-three years, so that I cannot be considered as having any sympathy with woman suffrage. I had little acquaintance with the subject in any way. As soon as I came to Seattle I saw it practically. Women held some minor offices and showed their capabilities for higher ones. They served on grand and petit juries with impartiality and justice. I believe it was the verdict of all the lawyers that a jury with some women as members was sure to be a fairer and more careful jury than the ordinary jury of men alone. At the polls the women averaged a smaller attendance, which was to be expected, but the better class of women did their duty as faithfully and conscientiously as did their husbands. I think, from observation and report, that generally women voted the same as their husbands and brothers, but exceptions were common. The more I saw of the workings of equal suffrage, the surer I was that the system was all right, in practice as in principle. Had it not been for cheap Republican and Democratic politicians the laws in favor of equal suffrage would still be on our statute books. The people at large were in favor of the practice and I am confident at the time would have sustained it by a popular vote. Before the opportunity was given to express popular vote upon it, such a large number of conservative Eastern people, unfamiliar with the equal suffrage question, had come into the state, that they defeated it. I expect to live to see the day that equal suffrage will be again adopted in this state, and I don't believe I shall be an old man either."

Mr. Purdy J. Flint, "one of the solid and reliable men," and his wife, Mrs. Lucy Flint, say: "The statement of the Rev. J. M. Buckley that the women of Washington Territory took no particular interest in the elections during the time they had the right to vote, is far from the truth. We lived in the territory during the entire time of their enfranchisement, and we state positively that women in this part of the country took as much interest in elections as the men did, and the result was in every way beneficial to the general and moral welfare of the community. There were very few women who did not vote. The true reason for their disfranchisement was that they did take an interest in elections, but the interest they took was not whisky interest, hence their disfranchisement. They also made good jurors, and were highly complimented in many cases by the judges for correct decisions."

ington W. C. T. U., and wife of a Congregational general missionary, writes: "The statement of Rev. J. M. Buckley is untrue according to my personal observation before, during and after the elections in which the women of Washington Territory were allowed to vote. There was great interest taken in it by all parties and classes of people. The 'female vote' was generally pretty well represented, especially considering the 'pioneer' condition of affairs at that time. The W. C. T. U. and women generally bore upon political affairs to such an extent with their ballots for good men, regardless of party lines, that most abusive newspaper articles appeared from masculine writers, and the saloon element was the most bitter foe to the election of those men by women's vote. The utmost independence was shown in the 'female vote,' in some few localities the liquor element predominating. Nevertheless the women voted, and woman suffrage was a grand success in Washington Territory, followed by a disastrous defeat in Washington State. I feel very deeply the manifest injustice done by statements like the above. Good men say, 'There is no reason why women should not vote.'"

Mrs. Switzer has secured other testimony, equally conclusive. In view of these facts, what can be said of such bald assertions as the one quoted from the distinguished doctor of divinity? Even a woman, who is unfitted by her sex for a place in the deliberations of the General Conference of the church women so largely helped to found, and who has grave disqualifications for any participation in governmental life, cannot help feeling that if the sole representation of womanhood in church or state is to be left in the hands of men, she would humbly, as an inferior being, venture to suggest that men should be a little more careful to have their statements strictly veracious. At least seven competent witnesses declare woman suffrage in Washington to have been a success; Dr. Buckley says it was not. What are the facts?

THE Rev. Dr. Lewis Curts, one of the most progressive Methodist ministers in the United States, a thoroughgoing Prohibitionist and one of the leading Methodist publishers, in compliance with our request, states in the following language his view of the position of the "women's question" as it now stands in the Methodist church: "At the General Conference, in 1888, a large minority said that 'by the constitution of the church women are eligible to seats in this body,' a small majority said, 'they are not eligible, and if the minority of this body think the eligibility of women is already comprehended in the constitution, let them demonstrate that fact by securing a three-fourths vote of the members of the annual conferences, and a two-thirds vote of the next General Conference.' The minority said: 'This is not necessary, women are already eligible and the constitution needs no amendment, but, to satisfy the majority we will go through the process of amending the constitution.' This amendment failed. In 1892, a majority of the General Conference believed that women are eligible to seats in the General Conference under the constitution. A minority said, 'They are not.' Then the majority said, 'Very well, if you think they are not we will give you four years in which to prove the truth of your position by securing a three-fourths vote of the ministry, and a two-thirds vote in the next General Conference for your view of the subject.' The minority in this case, as in the case of 1888, protest that the constitution needs no amendment, because they hold that ineligibility of women is already a part of the constitution. Logically, the opponents of women's admission are in exactly the same position as were the advocates for her admission at the preceding General Conference. The entire effect of the proposition as now submitted to the church is that at the next General Conference we propose to admit women to seats in that body, should any appear duly elected."

DR. LEES, one of the most incisive writers that the temperance reform has produced, after a study of fifty years, gives the following as the chief factors in his opinion concerned in the causation of alcoholic intemperance:

1. The notion that intoxicating drink is a good beverage or a good medicine. This is the principal factor from which all the rest follow.

2. The example of decent people who drink it in the presence of people who believe in them.

3. The feeling of pleasure at first excited by it. Pleasure is Satan's bait always.

4. The bringing of people into contact with drinking—which is the law of hypnotic suggestion.

5. The continued and inevitable operation of the narcotic upon nerve and brain.

6. The pecuniary inducement of sale, giving rise to needless and increased temptation.

7. The desire to drown care and sorrow in the forgetfulness of wine.

8. The strong craving created by tippling, beginning with the "moderate glass," so gradually and insensibly producing "thirsty souls."

9. The inherited predisposition to drink consequent on the drinking of parents, which renders many people susceptible to the more rapid development of alcoholism.

PLEDGE.—"I hereby solemnly promise, God helping me, to abstain from all distilled, fermented and malt liquor, including Wine and Cider, and to employ all proper means to discourage the use of and traffic in the same."

QUERY.—What would you think of a temperance play, entitled, "From the Saloon to the Gallows"? I am a temperance man, and am sure that if we can get the saloon-keeper shown up in his true light in the theater, it will be the great siege gun which will level the enemy's works.

S. W. H.

ANSWER.—We cannot in any wise give your proposed plan indorsement, and we feel sure that if you give the question more minute thought and analysis, you will, ere long, think as we do—and as does the great army of Christians who are earnestly fighting this common enemy. Such a play as you suggest would need the authorship of one intelligently committed to the temperance reform; would also need for the presentation of such play earnest advocates of the temperance cause. When all was complete, it would fail to draw the very audience which you would wish to reach, and it would have little or no indorsement from Christian and temperance workers. The saloon and its fruitage need no depicting—the reality is flaunted in our faces from day to day. What is needed is to win over to our side the intelligent Christian men and women of our land, who will use every dignified, gospel-indorsed means to reclaim the drunkard, protect the weak and helpless, and convert our enemies to our own way of thinking.

The effort has been made again and again to so remodel the theater that it shall be an educator and a factor in all well-directed endeavors for humanity's uplift, but such efforts have signally failed. The strength of theatrical presentations lies in the fact that they minister not to the higher, but to the lower element in human nature, and this is as truly the case in the most costly as well as in the cheaper plays. Even in the "highly moral" performances, there is that subtle treatment of the whole that throws the most attractive light over the weakest characters in the cast.

Q.—Will you please give the correct definition or meaning of the words "Temperance" and "Prohibition"? Is the following right? Temperance—"Moderate use of all things good and total prohibition of all things bad." Prohibition—"Total prohibition or destruction of all wrong and equally energetic support of all that is right." Should not the correct definition of these words be kept before the people until they become more familiar with their true meaning, of which but a very few seem to have any clear-cut ideas. I draw mine from the Law of God, the Mt. Sinai prohibition, which I understand to be equally promotive of all good and prohibitive of all bad. Thus does the word Prohibition ever stand before me, which I continually wear upon the breast of my coat and so interpret to the many who question me regarding it. Am I right? Please answer personally or through the SIGNAL, and much oblige a constant reader of your "God-given" organ.

J. F. IRONS.

A.—We doubt whether many lexicographers would accept as accurate the definitions of our correspondent, especially that of Prohibition, but the subject is one of sufficient importance to engage attention. The reformers of the present time suffer for the want of clear and exact terms. The word "Temperance" once stood for an accurate and well understood idea. The use of a certain moderate quantity of alcoholic liquor was, in the popular estimation, temperance, and the user was a temperate man. Time was when the most intelligent and conscientious of men had no more scruple about a "dram" of liquor than the best men now have about a cup of coffee. "Temperance" meant moderation, use without abuse. A temperance society was a society to secure moderation and prevent abuse.

But years passed on and convictions grew. It was discovered that alcoholic drinks had a law of their own; the distinction between use and abuse could not be maintained. Then total abstinence began to be urged, first from "spirits" and later from all alcoholic liquors. A barbarous term, "teetotal" came in as an attempt to furnish a descriptive title. But most people preferred the old and familiar word, temperance, and they sought to inject into it the new meaning. That effort continues yet.

The temptation to put new wine into old bottles will be strong as long as so many apparently good bottles, well adapted to their purpose with little alteration, are so handy. But the experiment, no matter how often tried, results in the same way, there is destruction and waste. If the men who so bravely came to the front in 1836 and established the test of total abstinence from all that can intoxicate, had found or coined a word to express their contention and had let the advocates of temperance possess and enjoy their time-honored descriptive title, it seems to us it would have been better. But the history of the past seventy years is one of struggle to popularize the word temperance and endow it with a meaning which for centuries never occurred to scholars. It should not surprise us if but little progress has been made. Words do change their meaning but it is a slow process.

It is refreshing to read in the London daily papers a statement from a Cambridge correspondent to this effect: "You in London make much account of the high rank taken by women in the Cambridge examinations, but with us here the wonder would be if this were not the case."

Dr. Kate Bushnell quotes the saying of a Chinese that it is better to be an American dog than a Chinese woman, and adds: "Why are millions of women hobbling on lame feet in China, and millions more shut up inside of barred windows in India? Because the devil knows that so long as he can keep women from mutual faith and coöperation the world will go very much as he desires to have it, but the day of our deliverance draweth nigh; we are finding out that 'the world was made for women, too,' and the bands of ribbon white are binding us in an invincible Home Guard around the world."

That was a witty introduction of Mrs. Livermore at the International Congress, when the chairman said that "Everybody knew Boston was the hub of the universe, but all did not perhaps know why it was so called. This is the reason: Because out of Boston go *spokes*men for the w(h)eal of mankind, who never tire of doing good to their fellows (loes). Some of those spokesmen are spokeswomen, and among the more distinguished of them is Mrs. Mary A. Livermore."

The suggestion is made in a London paper that the comparative advantages of a vegetable and animal diet, also of the "moderate" (?) use of alcoholics and tobacco could be advantageously compared by noticing their effects upon two groups of prisoners. Such an experiment, carried on for a sufficient length of time and under the supervision of scientific men, might yield us some most valuable conclusions in the interest of the race.

It is pleasant to be able to write something helpful of the life of the great French writer, Balzac. It is declared that he had the capacity for delightful friendships with women, which were never sullied by the slightest breath of scandal. He led a pure life, cherishing for fifty years his high ideal of love and the noble virginity of his senses, for even in Paris his morals were pure, and he was sober in all respects. He insisted upon the most absolute chastity, which he believed was of great advantage in developing the highest powers of the mind, and gave to those who practiced it mysterious faculties. He dreaded excesses as the death to talent, and his life from his earliest years was that of an anchorite. After he had completed half a century he married a woman who could give him not only affection but intellectual companionship, and concerning this greatest experience he wrote these noble words: "I believe this union to be the compensation which God has held in reserve for me through all my years of toil and difficulties which I have met with and finally surmounted. I had no happiness in youth, no blossoming springtime, but I shall have a brilliant summer and the sweetest of all autumns."

A distinguished physician in London, who is a firm believer in the great advantage to women and the public of the profession of nursing, gave the following incidents: He said, "I was called upon to attend a lady in the country; she was dangerously ill, and no one in the family had the head or hand to be of the least use to me except the cook. She evinced so much native ability that I said, on leaving, You ought not to remain here, but come to London, and learn to be a trained nurse. A few months after she put in an appearance at the doctor's office, saying that his words had remained with her, and she was most desirous of learning to be a nurse, but had not the requisite funds. He had so much faith in the woman that he told her to take the course of study and he would lend her the money to meet the expenses. She was called back to the lady who had been her former employer, and was so successful in carrying the lady's husband through a serious illness, that when the family went to India they sent for her in a difficult emergency. From there she went to Australia, to nurse a friend of theirs, and from there to South Africa. In all of these places she was so successful that she has now founded a training hospital for nurses at Natal, and has fifty young women under her care. The doctor said that a good nurse was one of the best paid persons in South Africa to-day." He told a similar incident in the case of a young seamstress who had aided him in a family where no one else had the least skill, and said that she, having taken the course of training in London, was now earning £500 a year.

ON DUTY.

World's W. C. T. U.

"For God and Home and Every Land."

BADGE: A knot of white ribbon.
HOUR OF PRAYER: Noon.
METHODS: Agitate, educate, organize.
DEPARTMENTS: Preventive, educational, evangelistic, social and legal.
THE POLYGLOT PETITION has been circulated throughout the world and signed in fifty languages. It asks for the outlawing of the alcohol and opium trade and the system of legalized vice. The chief auxiliaries of the W. C. T. U. are the United States, Canada, Great Britain, Australia, South Africa, India, Japan and the Sandwich Islands.

CALL TO WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION CONVENTIONS.

To all White-Ribboners Greeting:

The World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the United States will hold their Conventions on successive days beginning October 16, 1893, in the city of Chicago, in the Memorial Art Institute building, in which are held all the great congresses of the Columbian Exposition year.

This will be the twentieth Convention of the white-ribboners of the United States and the second biennial Convention of the World's W. C. T. U. The Convention of the World's W. C. T. U. will be composed of its general officers and executive committee, the secretaries and treasurers of auxiliary national societies, the World's superintendents of departments, the editors and publishers of the official organ, and one additional delegate for every one thousand members of auxiliary National societies.

Each National organization is requested to pay careful heed to the foregoing statement which may be further explained as follows:

The Presidents of all National W. C. T. U's and of the British Women's Temperance Association compose, with the five General Officers of the World's W. C. T. U., the executive committee of that society; the secretaries and treasurers of all National W. C. T. U's are, by virtue of their office, ex officio members of the convention. Besides these, there are World's superintendents of departments, of which there are at present eighteen, and the editors and publishers of THE UNION SIGNAL. All the foregoing are ex officio members of the biennial meeting, and besides these each auxiliary National union is entitled to one delegate for every 1,000 members. It is desirable that alternate delegates should be chosen, as some of those regularly authorized may be unable to attend. We are confident that in this exceptional year, when the Columbian Exposition has attracted myriads from all parts of Christendom, we shall have a more representative attendance than we are likely to secure at any other time for years to come. We therefore urge our leaders in all countries to make every possible effort to ascertain who among our membership are likely to attend the Exposition, and to appoint them as delegates either through the action of the National Convention in their respective countries or by the executive committee, or failing that, by the vote or attestation of the general officers of national societies.

We especially request the National W. C. T. U. of the United States, the Dominion W. C. T. U. of Canada, and the British Women's Temperance Association, including England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales, to give careful attention to the appointment of delegates, for we are more likely to have representatives from these countries than from others. We also ask white ribbon women to whom this announcement may come, and who are intending to be present at the World's Fair in October, to inform their National Officers of this fact, that credentials may be sent them by the accredited authorities of their respective countries.

It is with profound pleasure that we announce the expected presence of Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt, honorary president of the World's W. C. T. U.; Lady Henry Somerset, president of the British Women's Temperance Association; Mrs. Ella F. M. Williams, president of the Dominion W. C. T. U.; Miss Jessie Ackermann, president of the Australian W. C. T. U.; Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler Andrew and Dr. Kate Bushnell, round-the-world missionaries of the World's W. C. T. U., besides representative women from most of the great nations of the world, all of whom will be presented to the Convention.

The program of the World's Convention will be carefully prepared by the secretaries and printed in THE UNION SIGNAL. The officers of the National W. C. T. U., with nearly twenty years experience, will do their utmost to make a program of even exceptional variety and power for their own annual meeting. The music will be in charge of Mrs. Harris, of Boston, and Miss Gordon's "White-Ribbon Hymnal" and "Songs of the Y. W. C. T. U." will be used by both conventions. The annual sermon will be delivered by Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, president of the W. C. T. U. of Michigan. The dedication of the Woman's Temple (headquarters of the World's and National W. C. T. U.) will take place in connection with the Convention services, and the dedicatory address will be delivered by Lady Henry Somerset. The children's fountain will also be presented to the city of Chicago, with appropriate ceremonies. The Polyglot Petition, signed in fifty languages, will be festooned around the upper hall in which the Convention is held. There will be two great halls at our service in the Art Institute, and scores of smaller halls and committee-rooms, so that we can hold several mass-meetings each evening.

The Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union will hold a meeting one evening, under the management of the general secretary, Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, of New York City. The annual address of the President of the World's and the National W. C. T. U. will be delivered at the opening of the Convention (October 16th) at eleven o'clock a. m. The mass-meetings will be addressed by our returned white-ribbon missionaries, by leading speakers of the North and South, and we hope by many representatives from foreign lands.

The address of welcome will be given by Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, of Chicago, founder of the Temperance Temple, and it is expected that replies will be made by Lady Henry Somerset, Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, of Massachusetts, Miss Lillian Phelps, of Canada, and others. The memorial services will be conducted by Mrs. Louise S. Rounds, president of the W. C. T. U. of Illinois, and the address in memory of Miss Mary Allen West will be given by Mrs. Clara Hoffman, of Missouri. The overflow meetings will be in charge of Rev. Anna Shaw, of Washington, D. C.

We have thus outlined a program of rare interest to all the growing membership of the white ribbon army. The time and place of this coming "campfire" are of great significance and inspiration—the central city of the greatest republic at the culmination of its achievements and in the blossom of its beauty and charm, invites us to be its guests.

We meet but a few weeks before the completion of the twentieth year since the Crusade of Christian women against the dram-shops of Ohio sounded the trumpet of alarm that called us forth to battle. Home protection was their watchword and it is ours. They went forth in the power of the Spirit, as we have done, and so have victories been won for God and Home and Every Land.

"Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee, that it may be displayed because of the truth."

We stand for purity and truth in personal habits, in the customs of society and in the laws of the land. We meet in a city that has seven thousand legalized saloons, and which in defiance of law allows the sale of liquor on the Fair grounds of the World's Exposition, and has opened the gates of that great object lesson on Sundays, contrary to its pledge made to the United States Government. If the white ribbon women of America ever had reason to go upon their knees in prayer and hide their faces in confusion for their country's shame it will be at that Convention. The liquor traffic flaunts its red flag defiantly in places of power to which our white flag has by no means attained, nor will for many a weary day.

In view of these considerations, and many more that will occur to the thoughtful and devoted of our membership, we appoint the first Sunday in October (the 1st) as a Day of Prayer throughout all our borders, earnestly calling upon every white ribbon woman to offer up secret prayer to God for herself, her home, her nation, and our world, that the alcohol and opium trades, and licensed and unlicensed impurity, may be overthrown root and branch, and that the glory of God may cover the whole earth as the waters do the great deep. Nothing less is worthy of His promise and our faith.

We also urge that a prayer-meeting of the white-ribboners shall be held on this date, or on the Saturday previous, and that efforts shall be made to secure the general observance of Saturday or Sunday, as shall be most practicable for the local societies, but especially that pastors shall be earnestly requested to preach on the Temperance cause and mass-meetings in its interests shall be held on Saturday or Sunday evening.

"Work bravely, Temperance sailors,
Ye shall not suffer wreck.
While up to God the people's prayers,
Are rising from your deck."

We are, yours in sisterly love and loyalty in the name of Christ and the Gospel of Peace,

FRANCES E. WILLARD, President.

MARY ALLEN WEST'S WORK STILL LIVES.

For the late Miss Mary Allen West a memorial service was held at the Union Church in Yokohama on the ninth of May. Mr. S. Hayashi, the president of Yokohama Temperance Society, took the chair; Professor Ito spoke of the object of the meeting; Mr. Ninomiya offered prayer. Mr. Hayashi introduced Mr. Sho Nemoto to the audience to make an address; next Mr. Taro Ando who came from Tokio. The last two speakers were Revs. Aibara and Hoshino. This large church was packed with an audience who listened with honor and thankfulness to the review of the labors of Miss West, who died "For God and Home and Every Land." Such a meeting will be the noblest monument to our beloved and lamented Miss West.

The next evening, Saturday, we had the regular monthly temperance lecture of Tokio Temperance Society. We had a large audience. Dr. Kenzo Wada made an address on the effect of alcohol to the brain. His lecture was very instructive, as he is a doctor of medicine. The same hour a letter inclosing a gold ring and a pair of gold shirt studs was sent to the society from an unknown person, writing that he wishes to help the work in buying pictures for the Kawasaki magic lantern. This is the first time we have received such a gift in our society. It makes us something wonderful. We do not know who gave these gold pieces, but it is surely one of the good results shown by Miss West.

The donor of the magic lantern was Mr. Kawasaki, who was once a great drinker, and was very poor. But after he became a temperance man by the influence of Mr. Taro Ando, he saved five cents a day. One day he counted it, and found fifteen dollars in that saving box. This was in 1889, and they were both in Hawaii, as Mr. Ando was the Japanese Consul General there. When Mr. Ando came back to Japan, Mr. Kawasaki wished him to make it a contribution to the Navy. So Mr. Ando conveyed this desire to the government, but it was not accepted, as the time was passed to receive for this cause. Mr. Ando wrote Mr. Kawasaki about the matter, and he proposed that it be used in Tokio Temperance Society. By this money, the magic lantern was made, and now it is very useful to show the effects of drinking habits that destroy the beauty of the world.

In many ways the temperance work is growing bright

"W. C. T. U. HEADQUARTERS."

"What a joy to see these letters here in the midst of the gay city," said a friend who had been well-nigh all over the world. "I have seen them in Japan and other far-away lands, but I scarcely expected to encounter them in Paris." And why not? Should it really be true, what so many answer when you speak of temperance reform in France: "It is impossible here; we cannot drink the water; all the doctors tell us so!"

Dear friends, would you have a practical proof to deny this statement, here it is:

For about twenty-two years Miss de Broen, now the president of the W. C. T. U. in France, and her workers have been drinking that water, and have, thank God, kept strong and well in the midst of much toil and harassing scenes of poverty and sorrow. But the general feeling of the French people is against abstinence, sorely as it is needed here as everywhere. And the little band of temperance workers which we represent have more difficulties and objections to encounter than our sisters in America are perhaps aware of. Yet we are pressing on.

Our headquarters in a very central part of the city, 205 Rue St. Honoré, has a temperance refreshment room attached to it where all our white ribbon literature is kept on the reading tables. Occasional meetings are held, and much private conversation on the subject of temperance is carried on day by day.

Will white-ribboners keep this address in mind and not forget to look in at our Paris office when they come to France? It is situated close to the Louvre and the Tuileries, 205 Rue St. Honoré. They will always be sure to find a welcome, and—a rarity in Paris—a most excellent cup of tea. E. B., Sec'y W. C. T. U. for France.

FIGHTING THE CURSE IN GRAHAMSTOWN.

THE UNION SIGNAL as it comes to me week by week is as welcome as the olive branch brought by the dove to Noah; as he would be reminded by it of the pastures and groves of his boyhood, so does your paper remind me of my work and dear fellow-workers in my American home. I often live the Crusade days over again; it was then I received my baptism for temperance work. The enthusiasm of those praying women in Hillsboro spread, and soon reached Hempstead, L. I., where I was then living. In January, 1874, a few women met in the office of the husband of one of the ladies, and we organized ourselves into a union, the whole number present, five, being elected as officers. I was elected secretary. That was the day of small things. How little we thought then that the Woman's Christian Temperance Union would become one of the most important factors in the world's history in dealing the deathblow to the drink traffic.

Two years ago we organized a branch of the W. C. T. U. in Grahamstown after the visit of Dr. Kate Bushnell and Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler Andrew. Some thought it would soon collapse, but we still have a name to live and are doing our best in various ways to reduce the terrible evil of the sale of strong drink. It is a fearful curse in this country, especially among the natives, they are demoralized by it to an awful extent. Many of the tribes have been long crying out for prohibition, but government will not heed their cry. And why? because they must have a market for Cape brandy, and the Cape Parliament is largely represented by those who manufacture it! Oh, the pity of it! A race of people dependent as children asking to be saved from that which is destroying them, and a strong. Christian (?) nation refusing their request! Oh, the shame of it!

But I meant to tell you simply what we were doing in this far-off quarter of the world. It sometimes seems to our impatience that we accomplish very little, but as we look over two years, we do see results and praise God. Public opinion has made an advance on the total abstinence question. Intoxicants in many instances are taken apologetically: "It is by doctors' orders, you know." We see advance steps in these apologies. Our first petition to the licensing board met with strong opposition, and was vetoed by a strong majority. Our last petition was lost by a majority of one, and that the casting vote of the chairman.

At a mass-meeting recently held, three petitions were presented on which the people were requested to vote, two of which were voted for unanimously, and the third only three hands were raised against, one the brother of a publican, and his two friends. The petitions were for Sunday closing, prohibition to natives, and a local petition for closing the canteens on Saturday afternoons, when the other businesses close. The voice of that meeting was the greatest triumph for the temperance cause that this city has known.

LOUISE M. WODEHOUSE.

WEST AFRICA.

Our union in Rotufunk feels much encouraged, and sees much cause for thanksgiving to Almighty God for the work being done in the hearts and lives of Africa's sons and daughters, through the work of the W. C. T. U.

We have long felt the need of our "knot of white ribbon," but though we missionaries have had our own, we felt that the native dress and habit would make it rather ridiculous to require the native sisters to wear white ribbon, even without taking into consideration the item of expense. But when a woman really wants a thing, she generally gets it, though she be in Africa. Well, we wanted badges, so we prepared pretty little bows of white cambric, and gave one of these to each member. Could you have been present the evening we gave out the badges, you would have been thoroughly convinced of the success of our enterprise. They look pretty, too. We all wear them, and think our sisters in the homeland, where ribbons are cheaper and dress more elaborate, would not be ashamed to acknowledge our "knot of white cambric" as the badge of union.

There are many features of the work very hopeful here in our little interior African station, but none more so than our Loyal Temperance Legion. It would do your hearts good to hear some of the rousing songs or stirring speeches given by our temperance boys and girls, and they are temperance in principle as well as name.

Let me give you an incident, then you may judge for yourselves. Here the country drink is palm wine. It is a sap obtained from a variety of palm trees and at first is fresh and sweet—something like the juice of the apple or grape—but after standing it ferments and becomes an intoxicant. During the month of April, our mission doctor, Miss Hatfield, and myself were taking our annual vacation on the mountains overlooking the city of Freetown, and a good five miles distant and about one thousand two hundred feet above it. One of our Loyal Temperance Legion boys was with us as messenger between us and the city. One very hot day when the mercury stood at about 110 or 115 degrees in the sun or even higher, our boy was coming up from the city, faint and tired from heat, exertion and hunger (for he had gone without his breakfast and it was past mid-day). He sat down to rest, when one of Satan's ever watchful agents came to him with a bottle of palm wine and begged him to drink and refresh himself. But the boy knew the nature of the drink and sent him away with his bottle. Do you wonder we are proud of such children? All along the road on these intensely hot days these venders of palm wine are stationed and it requires a good deal of moral courage to refuse a present of any kind, especially when offered by a senior. Tremble, King Alcohol, for these boys and girls will be men and women ere long.

The temperance manuals are taught systematically in our schools, there being quite a number of our pupils who have passed good examinations in the first four books of volume one. Our last regular Legion meeting was given up to our advanced grade in school work who were contestants for a Demorest medal.

The contest did credit to the six young men and the efforts of their devoted teacher, Miss Groenendyke. The medal was won by Bengie Marot; this being the first contest of the kind on the West Coast of Africa, we feel, I think, justly proud of the achievements of this young man, whose entire intercourse with civilization can be embraced within a period of ten or twelve years.

We were much grieved, and sympathized greatly with our leaders in the loss by death of Miss West and Miss Casseday, both so dear to every white-ribboner's heart. Though so far removed from other unions, yet our hearts and prayers go up to the same God in behalf of our righteous cause, and feel sure victory is near.

We will think of you and pray for you, especially during these busy months of the great Fair, and though we cannot be with you in person, we are by representation, and, sisters, when you look upon that wonderful festooning of women's prayers and children's tears, remember five hundred voices were raised here in our little world of woes and wrongs, where the light of the gospel of our blessed Lord is just beginning to dawn. Will the nations hear?

In behalf of our Legion work, I will say that we, as teachers, preachers, musicians and poets, find the tax on our genius rather heavy, for here we must be all things to all conditions of men, and if any one feels like helping in the way of songs and poetry, not too national in character, it would be, indeed, very helpful and a great boon to us.

At our last regular session the following resolutions, relating to the loss sustained by our union by the death of our two sisters, Misses Williams and Bittle, were ordered sent to THE UNION SIGNAL for publication:

WHEREAS, God, in his infinite wisdom, has seen fit to promote Miss Frances Williams and Miss Elma Bittle from the toils and cares of earth to the glorious rewards of heaven, and

WHEREAS, We, as a W. C. T. U., have lost two stanch friends and supporters, and

WHEREAS, We appreciate their Christian worth and labor of love among us, therefore be it

Resolved, That we humbly bow in submission to the will of our Heavenly Father; that though they are no longer with us, the fruits of their labor remain as a living monument to their names, and that the memory of their pure lives shall stimulate us to greater exertions in proclaiming the Truth, the Way and the Life to the people they so much loved; that we sincerely sympathize with their bereaved relatives in America, and pray that God may overrule this seeming calamity to His glory and the advancement of His kingdom on earth.

WORLD'S WAVE CRESTS.

GRAHAMSTOWN, South Africa, will be the place of meeting for the W. C. T. U. in October.

THE W. C. T. U. and Y. at Peitermaritzburg gave a charming reception to Miss Palmer this spring.

THE final steps in the formation of the Bulgaria W. C. T. U. were taken at the April convention, when a full list of officers was chosen. The Vuzdurzhatel, published for the past two years at Philippopolis, will be the organ of the union.

A HANDSOME Y shaped pledge card, containing also a brief résumé of the history and object of the Y. W. C. T. U. is being distributed at the World's Fair. South African and Hawaiian Y's have contributed to the distribution of these.

MISS ANNA GORDON, assistant secretary of the World's W. C. T. U. and World's superintendent of juvenile work, will make a visit to her sister, Mrs. Alice Gordon Gulick, in Spain, before joining Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Willard in Switzerland.

MRS. BRIDGEMAN, president of Natal, South Africa W. C. T. U., is ninety miles from her nearest local union. This, considering the difficulties of travel in that country, would prove an unsurmountable obstacle to any less courageous and indomitable worker.

MRS. FRANCES J. BARNES, General Secretary of the World's Y. W. C. T. U., has been enjoying a season of necessary rest at Reigate, England, the guest of Lady Henry Somerset, and at St. Cloud, Paris, with Miss Isabel Gibson, Y. W. C. T. U. president of France. She will return to New York on the steamship, Paris, which sails from England July 15.

MR. H. J. OSBORN, 112 Fleet St., London, England, for many years press agent of the United Kingdom Alliance, has been appointed press agent for Great Britain of the World's W. C. T. U.

THE International European Congress which was postponed last year on account of cholera, is to be held this year in August at The Hague. Ida, Countess Wedel-Jarlsberg, vice-president for Norway; Mrs. Elisabeth Selmer, vice-president for Denmark, and Mrs. Mary B. Willard of Berlin, will represent the W. C. T. U.

MISS ALICE PALMER, fifth W. C. T. U. round-the-world missionary, has done excellent work organizing new unions in the South African republic, Orange Free State, and is now in Natal where she gave valuable assistance at the annual convention held at Verulam, June 20 and 23. Miss Palmer has written to the August Oak and Ivy Leaf an interesting account of her visit in this portion of South Africa.

A THANKSGIVING meeting to commemorate the seventh anniversary of the South Australian W. C. T. U. was held at Adelaide in April. From the first union organized by Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt in Adelaide with fifty-seven members, the Colonial W. C. T. U. now numbers sixty unions, with a membership of over 2,000, besides the seven Y unions and eighteen L. T. L's in which about 500 children are enrolled.

THE Y. W. C. T. U. of South Africa is a band of active young women workers, led by Miss Anna Cummings, of Huguenot Seminary, Wellington, Cape Colony, their president. As their link in the chain of World's W. C. T. U. work, they have sent a quantity of beautifully painted silver leaves, leucadendron argenteum, mounted, for the benefit of the World's Fair Y souvenir fund.

MRS. E. A. WALKER and Miss Catherine Gurney, so long identified with work among policemen in London, expect to visit the United States again in August and will probably continue their journey to Japan, China and India. Miss Gurney will be remembered as a fraternal delegate from the British Women's Temperance Association to the Boston convention in 1891. They can be addressed care of Miss Alice Briggs, office of the World's W. C. T. U., The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

THE provincial W. C. T. U. convention opened in Knox church, Winnipeg, Manitoba, June 14, the president, Mrs. J. B. McLaren, presiding. There were forty-one voting delegates present. The reports of the work showed an advance all along the line and an increase in membership of ninety-six per cent during the year. The address of welcome was by Mrs. Dr. Blakely and the reply by Mrs. (Rev.) J. McClurg. The president's able address, and the paper, "Christianity and Woman Suffrage," given by Dr. Amelia Yeomans, all placed the franchise question prominently before the convention. A series of resolutions declaring adhesion to the principle of full franchise for women were adopted. It was resolved to petition the Provincial legislature again at the next session. Mrs. Dr. Blakely, of Winnipeg, was elected president. The presence of Mrs. E. Norinne Law, National organizer, added materially to the interest and profit of the meetings.

MRS. JENNIE HAUSER, of Lucknow, India, who has been appointed president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of India, by the general officers of the World's W. C. T. U. on the recommendation of Miss Jessie Ackermann during her recent visit to that country, writes: "Aside from the missionaries scarcely one in five hundred of English people in India are total abstainers, and have not the slightest interest in the subject. The depreciation of the rupee is bringing family distress to thousands of their homes, and the whole country to the verge of ruin. The drunkenness is very great among women as well as men; a lady who has spent thirty years in the Hill Country told me two days ago that the coolie women give liquor to their little children. A clergyman in Devyuling tells me that of about four hundred English and Scotch tea planters in these hills not more than four are strictly temperance, and the majority of them keep coolie rum to furnish as a treat to their people on particular occasions. There are from one to three thousand coolies on a single plantation. I wish to have some temperance tracts published in the native dialects placed in the plantation schools, also for such as can read on Sunday, which is the great bazaar day, when the market is crowded by thousands of coolies and their chiefs. I shall try to organize temperance unions, as far as possible in the Christian girls' boarding schools, that they may be accustomed to the forms and routine of meetings, and go out to their homes with temperance principles established, interested in the cause, and able in their villages and districts to organize and carry on unions."

Can't Keep Cool while you're rubbing away over a tub of steaming clothes. If you want to save your health (think of inhaling that fetid steam) and strength, stop the rubbing—and the steaming. Pearline does it. Pearline; cold water; no boiling; little work; that is the programme for hot weather. This taking away of the rubbing is more than a matter of saving work. It's a saving of needless and ruinous wear to all your clothing. News from the Field.

NEW YORK STATE NEWS.

The work in New York state is in a prosperous condition and we expect to find our membership increased at least one thousand when we come together in state convention this fall. We had thought that in this Columbian year if we merely "held our own" perhaps that was all we need to expect, but we are glad to know that the good work has been steadily carried forward. The unions have been very active in no-license work and with excellent results, while the department work along all lines has been faithfully performed and new departments taken up.

Y UNIONS.

The Y's have not been idle and reports coming from them are most encouraging. Salem Y has taken up four new lines of work and one hundred and sixty-eight sick ones have been made happy through the flower mission.

MT. VERNON Y held an evangelistic service conducted by six students from the Missionary College. They report sending twenty-five dollars and thirty calendars to Jennie Smith for railroad work.

GLENS FALLS Y holds a temperance school every Sunday and connected with it is a temperance library. In a series of Bible readings recently conducted by them the following subjects were taken: "Readiness for Service," "Courage for Service," "Patience in Service."

A Y School of Methods was held at MECHANICSVILLE, Saratoga county, with representatives from six counties present.

MISS CLARA PARRISH, of Illinois, has done excellent work in the western part of the state.

COUNTY CONVENTIONS.

ST. LAWRENCE COUNTY met in convention at Rensselaer Falls, and the opening devotional exercises were helpful and inspiring, two hours being devoted to prayer and praise. Mrs. Jump, our state secretary of the Y's, was present, and aided toward the success of the gathering in many ways. She delivered a fine address in the evening. At one o'clock Mrs. Ives, of Potsdam, visited the village school and gave a temperance lesson to the three departments, as this was a more convenient way than having the pupils come to the church. At two o'clock the convention was again called to order and full and encouraging reports were heard from the different superintendents.

Last fall Mrs. Jump organized four new Y's in this county, two of which were represented by delegates. Two new unions recently organized at Norwood and Parishville were represented for the first time in the county. The Y's took an active part in the convention. This being the annual meeting, all the officers were reëlected. Excellent music and recitations added to the pleasure of all. The clergy were present, and gave kindly greetings. A memorial service was held in memory of Mary Allen West and Jennie Casseday. The Good Templars were represented by sixty of their members, and "all things together," made this one of the best conventions ever held in St. Lawrence county.

"The white-ribbon host will keep banner unfurled,
'Till the keynote of triumph rings over the world."

RENSSELAER COUNTY held its eleventh semi-annual convention in Temple of Honor Hall, Hoosick Falls. Mrs. Kenney, county president, led the opening devotions. Seventy-two delegates were present. After the committees were appointed, the regular work was taken up, and carried forward. Reports of officers showed that the county is in a good condition, and reports of local unions, through local secretaries, proved that the work is more progressive than ever before, consequently more encouraging. Several papers were read, followed by discussions, and good music was rendered by the Hoosick Falls Quartette. Brief speeches, by Rev. Geo. Flack, W. H. Berry, Calvin E. Keach and John A. Nicholls, were listened to with pleasure. Mr. Nicholls delivered the evening address, his subject being, "Shadows of a Great City, or Life in London," which was full of interest. The members of the Temple of Honor attended in a body.

CHEMUNG COUNTY met at Erin, and thirteen unions and eleven societies were represented in the gathering. Most delightful music was rendered by Mrs. J. B. Briggs and the M. E. church choir. A very pleasing feature of the meeting was the presence of the G. A. R., who attended all the sessions in a body Their representative was Prof. Williams. Miss Conley spoke for the Juvenile Good Templars. Mrs. D. Smith read a paper on the "Missionary Aspect of the W. C. T. U.," in which she showed that a vast amount of that kind of work was being accomplished.

The Y. M. C. A. was represented by general secretary, Mr. Rufus Stanley, of Elmira; the R. W. Y. M. C. A. by the secretary, Mr. C. L. Shattuck. The Royal Templars by Mrs. E. A. Stratton. "The Temperance League," a paper by Mr. Thatcher, was read by Mrs. Baldwin. Miss Hattie Miner and Harry B. Allen represented the Y. P. S. C. E.; the Farmers' Alliance was represented by LeRoy Searles and others.

The address of the evening was by Mr. F. E. Baldwin. Subject: "The Church and Great Reforms."

CHEMUNG NOTES.

Seven unions in this county have headquarters and five have L. T. L's.

Horseheads union voted to join in the exercises of a Catholic temperance convention.

Wellsburg, having outlawed eight saloons, has opened a coffee house in a hotel made vacant by prohibition laws.

Elmira coffee house serves four hundred meals daily.

Millport convicted and fined a cider seller. This union has increased its membership from eighteen to fifty in six months.

Veteran, the oldest union in the county, though situated in a rural district, meets regularly and has nearly doubled its membership during the year.

Post Creek, composed of members from three counties, meets monthly, serving refreshments each time. The husbands of these white-ribboners usually accompany them. This is a strong union of forty members.

Pine Valley has headquarters and a flourishing L. T. L.

A new county paper, The Chemung White Ribbon, has been born this year; No. 8 lies before me full of good things. Mention is made of a lecture at Millport by Mrs. Colburn, which left the union richer by sixteen new members.

Elmira fifth ward union gave a flag drill and musical entertainment, the program prepared by Mrs. Briggs. After paying expenses sixteen dollars was left in the treasury.

Elmira Central held a most profitable parlor meeting at the home of Mrs. Dounce.

Mrs. Stoddard, county president, and Mrs. Baker, recording secretary, held a meeting at Pine Valley, doing much good.

All these notes prove that Chemung does not mean to "take a back seat."

TEXAS CONVENTION.

The eleventh annual convention of the Texas Woman's Christian Temperance Union met at Paris, June 2 to 5, with Mrs. Helen M. Stoddard, president, in the chair. Though pale and weak from recent severe illness, she presided with her usual ability and faithfulness to details. Nothing escapes her eye or ear.

The ladies of Paris had devoted much time and energy for the comfort of their guests. The large Cumberland Presbyterian church, with a number of rooms for committees, dining room and kitchen was placed at the disposition of the convention. A delicious lunch was served in the church dining room. This feature was highly appreciated by delegates who in the past have been exhausted by the hurrying back and forth from convention to houses of entertainment.

The church was beautifully decorated with palms and other plants, cut flowers and banners. The banner furnished by Miss Willard for the largest increase of membership in the Southwest was presented to the convention by Mrs. Stoddard. It was received with enthusiasm and the hope that for another year at least, we should be able to retain it.

Another banner was that of the state L. T. L., the work of Mrs. Wendell, of Iowa Park, an accomplished artist. The banner is of heavy white satin on one side with the state motto, "Christ our leader," and the blue violet state L. T. L. flower, and a lone star with Texas in the center. The star and all the gold trimmings are of bullion. The reverse is of light blue satin with the national motto: "Tremble, King Alcohol, we shall grow up." The staff is of Texas yellow pine, made and presented by Mr. Graves, of Iowa Park. Miss Maggie Angus, of Taylor, bore the banner in triumph to her L. T. L. as the largest in the state.

Dennison's banner also deserves notice as the largest and finest one displayed. It cost about one hundred dollars.

There were sixty delegates and visitors to the convention, the long distance keeping many away who would have attended at a more central point. For this reason, and the cordiality of its invitation, Taylor was selected for the next annual meeting.

Much regret was expressed at the absence of several state workers A telegram of sympathy was sent to Mrs. Dixon, editor of the White Ribbon, who was very sick at the time. She resigned her position as editor, and Mrs. Knowles, as business manager. Mrs. Laura Pennel was elected to fill both positions. She is eminently fitted for the work, as she has long been a writer well known in Texas journalism. Mrs. Pennel, by her own labor, supports two missionaries in Japan, and her life is full of good works.

The morning sessions were devoted to routine business, hearing reports, etc. The afternoons were generally enlivened by visitors. The evening of the second there were addresses of welcome from the mayor, three pastors, the local W. C. T. U. and the press, all very interesting, mostly eulogistic of woman. They were responded to by Mrs. Cornelia Keith Carter, of San Antonio.

On the afternoon of the third day Mrs. Stoddard delivered her annual address. It was a masterly paper, full of thought, containing an account of her eleven weeks' campaign at the capital last winter. When she announced that at last the black cap is removed from Texas, and we have scientific temperance instruction in our public schools our hearts were flooded with gladness that vented itself in applause. As there was such a small audience out to hear the address it was repeated by request the night after the convention adjourned.

Dr. Ellen M. Keller, superintendent of heredity and hygiene, was detained at home by sickness and it was felt that a large blank was left in the program by her absence.

Mrs. Ada Hetherington sent a beautiful and encouraging report of press work, showing that much is being accomplished in that line in the state. Prison work was reported by Mrs. Lizzie Johnson, state superintendent. A large number have been converted and signed the pledge. Mrs. Johnson is well adapted for this work as she is a most devout Christian.

On the evening of the third day at the Christian church, Mrs. Delia Collins made an address on social purity which was very interesting. Mrs. Collins is superintendent of a home for fallen women in Fort Worth. While the W. C. T. U. has no connection whatever with it a large amount of W. C. T. U. money has been contributed towards its support.

Sunday morning Mrs. L. M. Haughten, National evangelist, preached at the Christian church a sermon that touched all hearts and completely did away with the prejudice against woman's preaching existing in some minds.

Sunday afternoon there were addresses by Miss Hattie Henderson, corresponding secretary, Miss Maggie Angus, state superintendent of L. T. L. work, and Mrs. Rebecca Calhoun, superintendent of Temple work.

A large delegation of ladies accompanied Mrs. Johnson to the jail where services were held with the prisoners. Mrs. Waite, of Corsicana, preached a stirring sermon to them. Sunday night Mrs. Sweeney, evangelistic superintendent, preached but a storm interfered with the attendance.

Monday morning all the old officers were reëlected; Mrs. Stoddard, president, Miss Henderson, corresponding secretary, Mrs. Canfield, recording secretary; Mrs. Curtis, treasurer. As each one was brought back into the room she was greeted with a verse of song. A smile ran round the room as the treasurer was welcomed with the lines,

"We share our mutual woes,
Our mutual burdens bear,
And often for each other flows
The sympathizing tear."

Monday evening was devoted to a memorial service for Mrs. Rosa Johnson, promoted from the state, and Madam Willard, Miss Mary Allen West and Miss Jennie Casseday, promoted from the National. Mrs. A. P. Boyd, president of the Paris W. C. T. U., gave an interesting resumé of "Aunt Rosa's" temperance and philanthropic work. Rev. Chas. Manton followed in a glowing tribute to her as a godly woman. The National workers were remembered by papers read from the memorial numbers of THE UNION SIGNAL, and a beautiful tribute to the memory of Miss West by Mrs. Calhoun.

The convention was enlivened by a recitation, "The Cost of a Drink," by little Miss Ligan, of Ft. Worth. All felt indebted to Mrs. Barnum for the lovely solos from the White Ribbon Hymnal so exquisitely rendered. The one baby present, Annie Frazier Carter, was introduced to the convention and the white ribbon tied on her arm. Altogether it was a delightfully harmonious convention and we were sorry when the time rolled round for us to leave beautiful Paris and the kind friends who entertained us so hospitably.

CORNELIA KEITH CARTER.

QUINCY, Ill., had a visit from Dr. Anna Shaw, June 10 and 11, during which she gave a parlor talk and three public lectures on temperance, woman suffrage and club-life.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

SOUTHERN Ohio Y's held their annual conference at Wilmington, July 13 and 14, the state superintendent, Miss Frances Ensign, presiding.

CRAIG, Ind., W. C. T. U. has secured nearly one hundred signers to the pledge, many of them voters and boys growing to manhood.

HAND county, South Dakota, convention met at St. Lawrence, June 29. A very interesting time is reported by the good workers who were present.

A NEW W. C. T. U., "a resolute little band" is reported from Lamb, Ind., who have held two earnest, well attended gospel temperance meetings, and propose to counteract the influence of their next-door neighbor, a licensed saloon.

CONNECTICUT Y conference gathered at the spacious and beautifully decorated Y headquarters in Mystic, June 26 and 27. Miss Bertha Cheney, state Y secretary, occupied the chair and the fifty Y delegates there were helped by the presence of able W. C. T. U. workers.

THE twelfth annual district convention meets at Payson, Ill., July 26 to 28. W. C. T. U. day at Piasa Bluffs Assembly will be observed Thursday, August 30, when plans will be made for establishing a school of methods on the lot donated to the state W. C. T. U. by the association. Mrs. Daisy Carlock will be the speaker at both these meetings.

INDIANA reports seventy-six Demorest contests in the last six months: Sixty-six silver, nine small gold and one grand gold. The Cooper system was taken too by the same superintendent, Mary E. Balch, Frankfort, who for the same length of time reports thirty-five Cooper contests, fifteen silver, nine small gold and eleven grand gold with a diamond contest advertised for July 14.

MRS. DAISY CARLOCK, vice-president of Illinois W. C. T. U., and secretary of Chicago Central W. C. T. U., has in charge the arrangements for the Willard Hall noon meetings which are so strong a magnet and furnish such benefit and help to those who attend them. During a fortnight's vacation trip commencing July 27, Mrs. Carlock is to speak at various places in the state, at encampments, Chautauquas and district conventions.

THE Rounds W. C. T. U. held their annual picnic, July Fourth, in Mr. J. C. Brown's grove, five miles southwest of Pana, Ill. The addresses of Mrs. Ada H. Kepley, of Effingham, and Miss M. A. Mahon, of Moline, were very instructive. Rev. Thule and wife of the Baptist church, Rev. E. W. Clark, of the Presbyterian church, and Rev. Bungeroth, former pastor of the German Evangelical church of Pana, were present all day.

MISS BELLE KEARNEY, of Flora, Miss., National Y organizer, was one of the speakers at the great Montreal Christian Endeavor convention, giving an address without notes on gospel temperance. She made a powerful plea for youths' Christian work, outlined the great efforts made by temperance reformers, and called on church members, young and old, to ally themselves against the licensed liquor traffic. At the close of the convention, Miss Kearney went directly to Mr. John G. Woolley's Rest Island convention of Christian workers.

MISS EMILY KELLOGG, who passed so suddenly from this life to the better one, after a brief illness, June 31, was a Chicago white-ribbon journalist, and an intimate friend of the late Mary Allen West, for whose book of memoirs she has been collecting material. No one was better fitted for the task of preparing such a biography than this modest, earnest Christian worker and philanthropist, who is well known in Chicago church circles and among press workers. Services in her memory were held by the Illinois Woman's Press Association at their headquarters in Chicago, July 21.

THE Fourth of July at Argos, Ind., was celebrated under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., as it never was before. The procession of children, members of the W. C. T. U. and others, headed by the Argos junior band, marched to the grove at 9:30 a. m. After singing by the children, an address was given by Rev. B. H. Beall, pastor of the M. E. church, of Argos, followed by Mrs. Strickland, pastor of the Christian church, who gave us a short review of our work and led in the noontide prayer. During the picnic dinner the bells of the town rang as requested by the W. C. T. U. At 1:30 p. m., a large audience was addressed by Mr. Stanley, the temperance evangelist from Logansport, subject, "The Real Robber," after which Mrs. Ormsby gave a recitation. Fair weather and good order also contributed to make the celebration a success.

WORK AMONG FOREIGNERS.

Three years ago we sent a petition to Congress to prohibit the sale of liquors at the ports of entry. Up to that time a mother could not get a glass of milk for her baby without buying it at a saloon counter, for the restaurant privileges were rented out at two hundred and fifty dollars a year, and drinking with all its attendant evils, went on constantly among the immigrants. Our petition was presented in the Senate by Wm. Chandler, of New Hampshire, and in the House by Wm. Orren, of Indiana, and within two weeks, greatly to our joy, Secretary Windom gave an order prohibiting the sale of liquors at the ports. This order was strictly enforced until within the last month. Secretary Carlisle has, it seems, rescinded the order, and our missionary, Miss Lindahl, writes in distress about it. She says it does not seem like the same place. I sent an urgent petition to Secretary Carlisle telling him of the good effect of the prohibitory law, and of the evils of surrounding immigrants with saloon influences even while they were under the protection and care of our government. I received so evasive a reply to this that I shall again petition Congress as soon as it convenes in August. But there ought to be concerted and prompt action by all temperance workers also. Will you, dear sisters, not write to your Congressmen, both senators and representatives, concerning this evil, and urge that as a government we do not officially aid and encourage liquor selling, and that these strangers be protected from saloons. The work Miss Lindahl has been carrying on so nobly there is practically nullified by this pernicious business going on under the law of our own government.

MARY F. LOVELL, Superintendent.
Bryn Mawr, Pa.

N. B.—All state superintendents are specially urged to send their reports in early this year. Before the date named on blanks, if possible.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

TO THE MICHIGAN WHITE-RIBBONERS.

The school of methods at Hackley Park will convene in "Mary T. Lathrap Hall" July 28 to August 5. The beautiful state home and hall is nearly completed; nothing excels it anywhere. We would remind all who have made pledges to the building fund, that these are overdue and much needed. It is easier for you to raise or borrow five dollars than for the trustees to borrow five hundred dollars because promises are not kept. Much interest is being shown in furnishing. The Muskegon union of unions is doing very helpful work. The 2d, 5th, 9th and 10th districts will furnish rooms this year and perhaps others. Cots will be rented if those who will attend send on the necessary information. Quite a number of the state workers will be present and act as teachers and lecturers. We give only the unfinished outline.

Mary T. Lathrap, superintendent.

Mrs. M. M. Maybee, state evangelist, Bible Reading, Lectures and Readings.

Mrs. A. S. Benjamin, Parliamentary and Officers' Drills.

Mrs. Julia R. Parrish, Studies of Constitution, Literary Value of W. C. T. U.

Mrs. Emma H. May, Studies in Finance.

Mrs. Jennie Voorhies, "The New Status of Women in Michigan and their Duty."

Mrs. Caroline Humphrey, "The Need of the Hour."

Mrs. Julia Stannard, Women's Voting Clubs. The Australian.

Mrs. M. M. Weeks, Chart talks to the children.

Mrs. Lucy F. Morehouse, Model Unions and Department Drills.

Department work will be conducted by any of the state superintendents present. One hundred women can be charmingly housed by bringing blankets, pillows and towels, and writing at once to Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, that they intend to be there. The superintendent of the Lake Harbor railroad will attend to all freight directed to Lathrap Hall, and prepaid at starting point. The easiest way to the World's Fair is via Hackley Park. MARY T. LATHRAP, Pres.
Jackson, Mich.

"LACTATED FOOD SAVES BABIES' LIVES."

"Last August our baby was taken with Cholera Infantum, and was soon so thin no one knew her. She could keep nothing on her stomach until I gave her Lactated Food. She drank this greedily, and by night I had great hopes of her recovery. Now she is as fat as butter, and every one says that Lactated Food saved her life." MRS. WM. ELLIOTT, 115 Louisa St., Peoria, Ill.

Mothers cannot afford to use any other food than Lactated for their babies in the summer months. A regular-sized package for trial free.

OUR JULY OFFR.

To all subscribers of THE UNION SIGNAL who, during the month of July, will remit $1 for renewal, with 50 cents addition, we will send as a premium a book whose title is truly expressive of its contents.

Touching Incidents and Remarkable Answers to Prayer.

This book, which is edited by Rev. S. B. Shaw, is neither doctrinal nor denominational, yet distinctly Christian. Its high religious tone, its fascinating spirit and the high rank of its contributors, make it a strong faith tonic and an inspiration to prevailing prayer. Price $1. Given as a premium for three new subscribers.

THE OAK AND IVY LEAF FOR JULY

Is a number of great interest.

It contains two cuts illustrating the Créche of the Paris Y's, the especial work inaugurated by the enthusiastic young French woman on her return to France after her visit among American white-ribboners.

MISS ISABEL GIBSON,

Miss Gibson has written a description of the work for this number of the Oak and Ivy Leaf.

Mrs. Barnes' Letter From France is in her best vein.

Besides these, the paper contains A "FRESH AIR" STORY by Miss Gifford, the popular writer, the studies in Bible Wisdom.

and many news items and notes of helpful work for young women.

Send your name and address enclosing twenty-five cents and receive the paper for one year commencing with the July number.

Great Handy Cyclopedias.

Alden's Cyclopedia of History. Illustrated. Complete in 2 volumes, of about 1,000 pages, nonpareil type. The set in cloth, 80c., half morocco, $1.00, postage, 20c. Issued also in 6 volumes, in strong manilla binding, price for the set, post-paid, 75c.

Alden's Cyclopedia of Natural History. Profusely illustrated. In 2 volumes, of about 1,000 pages, nonpareil type. The set in cloth, 80c., half morocco, $1.00, postage, 20c. Issued also in 6 volumes, in strong manilla binding, price, post-paid, 75c.

10 Cents will secure by mail, post-paid, a specimen manilla volume, 160 pages, of either Cyclopedia, by which you can judge of the character of the remainder of the work.

Wonderful books in the amount of the most interesting and valuable knowledge given for a little money. Their equivalent cannot be had elsewhere under ten times the cost.

In The Cyclopedia of History you have ancient history back to B.C. 5004, and modern history down to 1892. Every nation of the earth, (except the United States which is to form an independent volume), is treated in its alphabetical order and described in its physical aspects as well as historically, so you have the equivalent of a book of travels round the world.

In the Natural History you have the most complete, popular, and at the same time thoroughly scientific, work ever compiled for general use. Nearly every beast, bird, or other creature, in earth, air or water, living or extinct, known to science, is described, and thousands of them are illustrated.

Oxford Teachers' Bibles.

With References, Concordance and Helps. Size, closed, 5⅝ by 7¾ inches, by 1⅝ inches thick. 1,336 pages, besides maps. We bind in two styles: Limp black silk cloth, red edges, 90c.; French Seal, Divinity Circuit, round corners, gilt edges, $1.80, postage, 18c.

Size of type shown by these lines. Beyond comparison the cheapest Bibles sold, and always found satisfactory. Circular describing finer and higher priced Bibles sent free.

Book-lovers find "a literary gold mine" in each new issue of our Catalogue of choice books, which is published monthly, 128 pages, and sent for a 2-cent stamp. Mention this paper.

World's Best Books.

Fabulously cheap for such excellent editions; nearly all in this or larger type, always fine paper and excellent cloth or half morocco, gilt top binding.

The style and quality of most of the following are represented by Cooper's "The Pilot"; those marked with an asterisk (*) are in cloth and also in half morocco gilt top, like Scott's Ivanhoe; see under "More 'Surprise' Bargains"; prices are for cloth, or 15 cents higher for half morocco.

JULY NUMBER OF THE ADVANCE GUARD.

With this number begins a new volume of The Advance Guard. NOW is the time to send in your subscription. Many new features will add to its attractiveness, and you should not miss the new story, the initial chapter of which is to be found in the July number.

"The Tables Turned,"

BY MATTIE B. FAY,

is illustrated by our special artist. The story opens with a spirited conversation between five interesting young ladies whom our artist has grouped around a table putting the finishing touches on some neckties for use at a coming social. Conversation turns upon the imaginary wearers of the ties, and the laughing and sometimes thoughtless girls, discuss the standard of morality for men, and the possibility of their exquisite work being soiled by the stains of liquor or tobacco.

In this issue Rudyard Kipling tells how he became a Prohibitionist, and Miss Guernsey, in her usual graphic style, writes of historic homes at "The White City." The accurate drawings of Fort Marion, John Hancock House and Mt. Vernon, add to the interest of the article.

A PHILANTHROPY FUND.

Now and then there come to us burning words of appreciation, which we reproduce that the fire may be enkindled in other hearts. The following is from the pen of a motherless girl, but fifteen years of age: "I am only a poor girl, fifteen years old. I have no mother, and I have to keep house for my papa and take care of the children. There are five children of us, the youngest seven years old, but, thank God, this is a temperance family and a Christian home, though we are very poor. I just cannot get along without my UNION SIGNAL, for I cannot attend meetings much, and it is such a blessing to me; so, if you possibly can, please continue the paper until I can get the money, and I will send it to you. The love to work for temperance so burns in my soul sometimes I can hardly stay at home. Your true temperance sister."

It is needless to say THE UNION SIGNAL will still make its weekly visits to this humble home.

We wish our more fortunate temperance workers would supply us with a "philanthropy fund" to meet just such demands as these. Who will take the initiative?

Of Mrs. Harriet L. Adams' new book, "A Woman's Journeyings in the New Northwest," the Cleveland Leader says: "It is so happily written, and its themes are so well chosen that people having any wish to learn of the great growth of the West, as well as something of its social status, and who like to read of the magnificent scenery to be found there, will leave its pages with regret."

Every W. C. T. U. woman should read this book by a sister W. C. T. U. woman.

WHEN some one remonstrated with an old saloon-keeper for enticing in the boys, he replied, "Oh, it is beezness, beezness—the old drinkers will soon be dead and where will my beezness be if I don't get the boys?"

THE Northwestern Christian Advocate has, at great pains, collected statistics showing the number of conversions in its denomination, the Methodist Episcopal, for a year. The result shows that the conversions through the agency of that church alone during the past year are 300,000.

IN our issue of June 22, a brief statement was made relative to the rejection of a resolution by the International Typographical Union to adopt a "sliding scale" of wages, with varying rates for men and women. This resolution was to affect only the local union of the city of Boston, as the International Union put itself on record years ago in favor of equal remuneration for men and women.

DR. DOUGLAS, who recently lectured on China to a London audience, stated that among the poorer classes it was so common to kill off the female infants that such notices as "girls cannot be drowned in this pond" were often met with. He advanced reasons for believing that infanticide was largely and steadily practiced in the densely populated towns where the people were so thick on the ground that the streets could hardly accommodate them. A short time ago an instance occurred which shows the Chinese disregard of human life which is so extraordinary from a western point of view. A Chinaman carried his mattress and placed it on a line of rail across the sleepers, and then laid quietly down and slept. A passing morning train cut him to pieces. This is a cool, deliberate method of committing suicide which is not often resorted to among nations where human life is held of some account.

THE New York Rescue Band is a young organization which was set on foot by a few practical Christians who saw the need of a home where women could be taken without the delays ordinarily incurred, incident to necessary forms of application, and other red tape features. Headed by one, herself rescued from a wayward life, the movement was started by a little band of women, two rooms in a rear tenement being rented with the most meagre furnishings, but all clean and safe and even luxurious to most of those taking refuge there. In the course of time other rooms were added, furniture bought and donated, the work continually growing, reaching to both sexes, until in last April, the body of workers was duly organized, the sole object being, "To rescue fallen men and women from lives of sin and shame and lead them to Jesus Christ." As one branch of the work a building has been secured as a temporary shelter for women, and up to date over two hundred women helped. No salaries accrue to the officers and all income depends upon the open hands of Christian men and women.

CALIFORNIA.

The fame of the climate of California draws to that charming state new friends every year, particularly from sections where long, severe winters, followed by trying spring seasons, work such disastrous results among the weak and debilitated.

The great improvements in passenger train service, higher degrees of comfort in the cars, and shorter time required on the trip, combined with the cheapness of the excursion tickets now being sold to California and back by the Santa Fé Route make the journey agreeable and, one can almost say, economical. The many delightful resorts now established in California afford every comfort and luxury desired by the fastidious, and present unique attractions.

The Hotel del Coronado at San Diego, the Raymond at Pasadena, the Redondo at Redondo Beach and the hotels at Santa Barbara, Monterey, Riverside, Los Angeles and many other points, have grown as famous as any on the Atlantic Coast—and a fact that should not be forgotten is that they are resorts all the year around, although the greatest number of people from the East are in California between the months of November and May.

Write to John J. Byrne, Asst. Passenger Traffic Manager, 723 Monadnock Block, Chicago, Ill., if you are interested in California, and he will send you some reading matter.

WORLD'S AND NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTIONS.

The World's W. C. T. U. will hold its second biennial meeting in the Memorial Art Palace, Lake Front Park, Chicago, Ill., beginning October 16, 1893, in connection with the World's Columbian Exposition Congresses, and the National W. C. T. U. will hold its twentieth annual convention in the same place on succeeding days. All National societies of the W. C. T. U. are entitled to send delegates to the World's Convention in the proportion of one for every one thousand members, and state societies will be represented in the National W. C. T. U. Convention by one for every five hundred members, besides the general officers.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

The silver convention met in Chicago Tuesday.

The Salvation Army is in session at Lake Bluff, Ill.

Wine valued at four million francs was consumed during a fire in Paris last Friday.

The court martial at Valetta holds the late Admiral Tryon only responsible for the Victoria disaster.

The annual tournament of the United States Lawn Tennis Association closed at Chicago, July 29.

A strike of three hundred and fifty thousand men, the largest ever known in England, commenced Friday.

The outflow of gold from this country has ceased, and large quantities are now being received from Europe in payment of wheat exports and for the purchase of bonds.

Great distress is being experienced in Colorado caused by the closing of the silver mines and the bank suspensions. Thousands of poor miners are being fed in Denver by charity.

A dispatch from Honolulu announces the preparation of a new treaty for annexation with United States,—covering the objections to the old—to be presented to the coming Congress.

An advance in customs duties of fifty per cent on all Russian products went into effect in Germany, August 1, in retaliation for the increase of taxes levied by that country on German imports.

A mob of fifteen thousand people formed in Denver, July 26, broke into the jail and lynched an Italian saloon-keeper, Nicoli Arrata, who had brutally murdered an inoffensive old man on the previous evening.

The fifty-sixth annual report of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions issued last week shows a total expenditure for the year of $1,008,124, the list of missionaries including six hundred and twenty-six men and women.

An unprecedented scene occurred in the British House of Commons last Thursday evening, during an inflammatory speech by Joseph Chamberlain on the Home Rule Bill, which called forth indignant remonstrances from opposing members, finally culminating in a riotous mêlée.

OUR annual Fair Number, which will be issued next week, will contain a harvest of thought set in most attractive form. A large edition will be printed and this representative number will be especially valuable for distribution among friends of the field and farm. Look in our publisher's columns for full particulars.

AND still the temperance forces multiply. The "Anti-saloon Army" is an association of men and women whose object is the overthrow of the rum power. It is organized on the army plan, and knows no "schism, ism or creed save hostility to the liquor traffic." It proposes to organize a post in every school district in the land, and will arrange for the same whenever five or more persons in any locality send such request to headquarters at Clinton, Mo. God speed this new salvation army!

WE rejoice that rumors of war in the East have ceased. The outcome of the Siamese difficulty intensifies our belief in the near approach of the reign of universal peace. A satisfactory settlement of questions involving the interests of more than one great power (aside from the principals in the affair) could hardly have been brought about without the shedding of blood half, or even a quarter of a century ago. We hope to see the day when those nations which favor arbitration methods shall form an alliance for the maintenance of world-wide peace.

THAT "the way of the transgressor is hard," is again illustrated in the case of the World's Fair Directory. When the headlines, "Sunday Fair Again," greeted our eyes in Saturday's papers and we read that an injunction had been served upon the Fair officials by a Sunday-opening judge, we were forcibly reminded of the old woman who "wouldn't when she could and who couldn't when she would." However, we doubt not that the acute Directory, which is so desirous to meet the demands of public sentiment, will find some way out of its dilemma, and that the Fair will be closed "once and for all" the coming Sabbaths.

THE temperance meetings inaugurated by Mr. Moody in the Empire theater, on the West side, Chicago, are announced to continue five weeks. At the first meeting, led by Merton Smith, of Chicago, 200 of the 1,200 men present signed the pledge. The special object of this series of meetings is to reach out a helping hand to the great mass of hard drinkers, and led by this consecrated gospel messenger and his able corps of Christian workers, must be productive of great good. This work of rescuing the perishing must go on as long as saloons exist, and one of the encouragements it offers to the foes of the liquor traffic is that every man thus saved will bring his sympathies and his vote to the prohibition side.

THE little "unpleasantnesses" which have arisen to mar the harmony of the Board of Lady Managers occupy more space in the daily newspapers than their importance really warrants. No doubt the reason for this is that contention and quarreling is the exception rather than the rule in women's assemblies. Bodies of men may wrangle and dispute in a most undignified manner, and as long as they refrain from fisticuffs no special notice is taken of it, but let a body of women forget in a wordy battle the usual amenities and it is forthwith given prominence as "news." When the world makes great ado over the wrong-doing of a church member, it unconsciously pays tribute to the truth and purity of church teachings, and on the same principle it is to be regarded as a high compliment to women in general that these disagreements among the members of the Woman's Board should call forth such general comment.

WE have to record the birth of a new organization. Its name is the National Retail Liquor Dealers' Association, and its birthplace is Chicago. Mayor Harrison in giving the welcoming address to the delegates commented upon the timeliness of this action of the retail dealers in organizing for "mutual protection." The association thanked him for his "words of wisdom" and then and there dubbed him the "grand old man" of Chicago. A remarkable resolution informs us that the liquor sellers believe in "contributing largely to the prosperity of our country and to the advancement of all classes of business," and declares further that "God in His creation of man endowed him with the unalterable right to eat and drink whenever his appetite required, so long as the exercise of this human privilege does not interfere with peace or happiness." We think that even the retail dealer himself will hardly attempt to gainsay the fact that this "privilege" does very seriously interfere with the peace and happiness, not only of the drunkard, but of all who come in contact with him—and that means everybody.

THE result of the Educational Congress just closed at the Art Palace must be to strengthen public sentiment in favor of compulsory education. The progressive and ably-presented views of leading educators the world over, could but impress the listener, not merely with the advantages, but with the absolute necessity of a systematic, all-round development of the individual, and further with the importance of beginning early. It may not be possible for society to secure to every child its right to be well born, but it is within its power to provide for it such education as shall in great measure counteract inherited tendencies to evil, and both justice and expediency demand that it do so.

REPUBLICAN and Populist Prohibitionists in Kansas are justly indignant at the action of the Populist administration in refusing to enforce the prohibition law. During the campaign preceding the last election Prohibitionists were given to understand that the nominees of the People's party would faithfully sustain the constitution in this matter. They began to lose confidence, however, when it was observed that the police commissioners appointed by the new governor, were almost invariably known opponents of the prohibitory law, and the smoldering discontent has been fanned into a flame by a recent letter of the attorney-general, in which he refuses point-blank to grant petitions asking for enforcement. This defiance of constitutional law indicates that this young party, from whom many people hoped so much, has begun to follow in the footsteps of the old parties, and surrender to the rum-power.

A PETITION for the enforcement of the laws relating to Sunday closing of saloons, which has been presented to Mayor Harrison, was carried by a committee of ten, among whom we find such weighty names as J. V. Farwell, P. D. Armour and T. W. Harvey. It was signed by eighty thousand law-abiding citizens of Chicago, secured through the efforts of the Christian Endeavorers. In reply the mayor said that he was "opposed to intoxication" as much as anybody but that he did not consider himself bound to do more than enforce the city ordinance providing for the closing of front doors and the drawing down of the blinds on Sunday. He was not obliged, he said, to enforce either state or national law. He particularly inquired how many of the eighty thousand signers were voters. This furnishes food for thought. Had every name of that petition been that of a voter would the answer have been the same, think you?

WILLARD HALL was honored last Tuesday by the presence of Rev. Joseph Cook, of Boston, who stood for the first time within its walls to lead the noon meeting. It takes rare stenographic speed to "catch" Mr. Cook's rapid utterances. Among others that "brought down the house" was this statement: "I am an independent politician, but let me declare here and now that I never support by ballot any party that legalizes the liquor traffic. No American party can be permanently preserved in whisky!" Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, of Boston, brought encouraging news of her work for scientific temperance education. A large map of the United States, prepared by her, shows in white those states and territories having temperance education laws, those not yet so far advanced being covered with black. Mrs. Hunt told the glad news of a ceremony which was performed recently in the educational exhibit at the World's Fair. Two little girls, one from Kentucky and one from Texas, removed from their respective states the defacing black cambric, thus announcing the fact that these two states have enacted laws which place scientific temperance instruction upon all public school schedules. In this time of "rapid transit" on the road of national progress we have faith that Mrs. Hunt will not have very long to wait and work ere her labors will see the abundant reward of no black states in the Union.

HILLSBORO.

BY MRS. LAURA A. RANDALL.

Lovingly dedicated to Mother Thompson.

"Not by might nor by power," were the women led,
"But by my spirit," the Saviour said—
Who long had noted the tear-drops shed,
The groans that were uttered from hearts that bled.

He, slow to anger, and who had waited long,
Now chose the weak to confound the strong.
The ways of the wicked turned upside down—
As the little band marched through Hillsboro town.

Sweet faces illumined by grace from on high,—
They feared not the storm, their Saviour was nigh,
And gladly they flung to the winds their fears;
Their songs and prayers echo down through the years.

Oh, brave, loving workers, how little ye thought
Of the wonderful work the Lord hath wrought!
Of a whole world belted with ribbon white,
Souls lifted from darkness to heaven's own light.

And now, like the white-soulèd saints of old,
They are gathering home for their crowns of gold;
But the Lord of hosts still leads the way,
And victory sure will crown the day.

To-day and forever the same God pours
His spirit on handmaids willing and by the scores;
So they outward and onward gladly go
And question nothing,—for He wills it so.

JOE.

BY MRS. S. M. I. HENRY.

Among the men of my acquaintance who have found the "gospel cure" the one remedy for a spoiled life, Joe comes vividly before me.

I first saw him in a printing office, at the case, setting type. I had occasion to get some work done for the Rockford W. C. T. U.; while waiting for the foreman I had noticed the bright face and wonderful eyes of the young fellow, and determined to make his acquaintance, especially as I was sure he was a stranger, and had already the marks of vice on his face. I stepped up alongside the case where he stood, and said:

"Good-morning."

He glanced up, nodded, smiled a rather cynical smile, shifted a quid of tobacco to the other cheek, spat on the floor, and went on fingering the types. I concluded that he wished me to understand that he was too busy to talk, but I was unwilling to leave my message unspoken, and began again.

"I see that you are busy; I will not disturb you long: but I would like to watch you a moment. I am interested in the types. It is a wonderful trick you have in your fingers."

"Not much of a trick, this ain't, it's work."

"Yes, I know, but to be able to pick the right letter from its box every time so deftly, and set it in the right place in the stick; I always wonder at it; then it means so much, you know." He shifted his quid again, and smiled that knowing smile, which I was not experienced enough then to interpret. I went on:

"I think you are a stranger here—a new hand." He nodded.

"I thought so. I often come here to get work done, and never saw you before, and now I want to invite you to come to our temperance rooms, up one flight, just this side the bridge."

"I know where 'tis."

"Ah, do you? Ever been in?"

"Naw!" contemptuously.

"Well, then come! You will find papers, men, young and old; make yourself at home. You can sit in a corner and sulk if you feel like it, and no one will disturb you."

"I'll have to sign your pledge, though."

"No you will not, unless you want to do so."

He jerked a look at me from those eyes that one could never forget, grinned, gave his head an odd little shake, and went on with his work. The foreman was coming with a paper and pencil in his hand and his "all-settled" look, so I turned away, saying:

"Now, remember, those rooms are for you, and I shall expect you."

I caught a sly wink from his eye, aimed at the foreman, as he chuckled to himself, and I felt sure that he would laugh at me as soon as I was out of hearing; in fact, he might do so any minute.

But I was greatly interested in him. Besides those remarkably fine eyes, of almost Italian softness, he had a face of regular New England intelligence, and not lacking in refinement. There was that in his manner that piqued my curiosity. He seemed to be "knowing," about what I had been saying even, so much more than he chose to express—to have so much in reserve somewhere, and to take such delight in it, that I wanted to be let into the secret.

Returning, walking rapidly toward the temperance rooms, I had nearly passed the printing office entrance, when, glancing in that direction, I saw my young friend standing idly in the lower stairway, chewing fast, and looking at me with a noncommittal expression that was evidently assumed. I bowed, when suddenly came the suggestion to stop and repeat my invitation. I turned just as he, with that same cynical smile, was swinging himself around to run up the stairs. He saw me, however, and stopped until I came up to him. I reached out my hand and said:

"I am glad to see you again. I am on urgent business, but I must repeat my invitation to the temperance rooms. They are for you and young men who, like you, are strangers in a strange city. Come and try them and see if you do not like it for an evening, and on Sunday. You will find them an improvement on a boarding-house, I am sure."

While I had been saying this, holding his hand, a great change had come over his face. The cynical expression gave place to a pleased interest; his manner became respectful so suddenly as to almost amuse me, and it was with a hearty tone that he answered, "I'll come."

I wondered more at this change than I had at his first appearance. But this was a matter that it would not do to investigate; I only said:

"Then I shall expect you."

"I'll be there, you bet," he cried eagerly, and ran up the stairway.

He did come—that very evening early—with a carefully arranged toilet and those eloquent eyes wide open, brimming with good-will. I never saw that cynical expression again on his face and often wondered what had become of it, what it had signified when he wore it and what it meant.

Joe attended strictly to everything announced to take place under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. from the first; but for a long time did not seem to personally apply the truths he heard. He was not individually urged to sign the pledge. The entire trend of influences about him was in the direction of the pledge and salvation; he knew that he was prayed for by many and that we were waiting for his signature. But as was our custom he was left to the quiet work of truth and the spirit of God and indirect appeals. After awhile, however, he seemed to awaken to his surroundings and then how his face took on light. How eloquent were the eyes that followed those who gave evidence of a change of purpose and life! How he listened to the truth of God's word, and drank in the testimonies of the power of salvation; and how quickly he warmed to those who expressed any personal interest in him; how sad would grow his face as he would realize that he was being left behind by those who were more ready to accept the help of the pledge and the invitation of the gospel.

I prayed for him during these days with intense desire, and scarcely a day passed that I did not give him some verse of Scripture that had come to me or that I had found for him. And at last I was made glad by his coming for the pledge.

"Are you really going to sign it at last, Joe?" I cried, taking his hand.

"Yes'm, I'm going to try it on."

I shall never forget that event. It seemed almost like giving a sacrament, because of the solemn earnestness with which he received it. His eyes grew misty, and as he realized that the irrevocable vow had passed, his face grew pale, and he said hurriedly:

"What if I shouldn't keep it!"

"But you will," I said, "with God's help."

"Oh, I don't know," he replied. "You see it is different with me, I never had no training."

"Joe, tell me about it," I said, "how did you begin?"

"Begin! I begun as a New York rat, that's how; 'slong ago's I remember I slept in drygoods boxes, old cars, or under the sidewalk, any where't I could hide from the p'lice. I was taught to steal handkerchiefs and such. When I got big 'nough I sold papers and blacked boots; that was a cover to the stealin,' though, all the time, I know now."

"Had you no one—no mother, Joe, to teach you better?" I asked with my heart in my throat.

"Nobody! Couldn't afford a mother; where'd I a-put her? There was an old fellow who took the swag I brung" (Joe could follow copy in the office, but could not yet command choice English in conversation) "'till one day, it must ha' been Sunday, I was a-saunterin' 'long with my papers under my arm, 'n my blackin' kit on my shoulder when I come out on the avenue where was a splendid great building, and such singing coming out o' the windows an' doors! First I knew I was inside, and there was the greatest crowd o' white, clean kids, such as I never seen before in my life. My! but it was a pretty sight! And they was singing like birds; never heard anything like it 'fore or since. I know now 'twas a Sunday-school; but then I didn't have nothin' to name it by. Nothin' can ever 'stonish me 'gain 's I was 'stonished that time. I slunk down and watched 'em. They stopped singin', and then such whirlin', an' fixin' seats, and buzzin'! It was all a howlin' mystery to me, but I was spellbound. Those little girls; gracious! How it comes over me now; and the boys—no bigger'n me, but so different! Say, don't you think 'f I could a been like them little fellers then, I shouldn't be what I am now?"

I reached out and took the hand that was clinched tight on his knee, straightened out the fingers, and got my hand inside of it, but I could not say a word. He went on:

"I do. I know I should ha' been different. I think I was cheated. I've thought so a long time, but it can't be helped now. Somethin' happened, though, that day that did make a big change in me. After a while a man that looked like one o' them little chaps growed up, he was so clean and handsome, got up and begun to talk and explain and write on a blackboard with chalk, all colors. I didn't make out any of it, till at last he begun to talk about me, as I thought then; he told just how I had took the handkerchiefs and things, and he called it stealin', and said that the great God had said, 'Thou shalt not steal'; that it was low and mean and wicked. His voice and look told me more than his words did about what he thought of such doin's. I got afraid, and slunk out, sayin' to myself: 'No more o' that for Joe; I won't be talked about like that again, see if I am,' and I never did steal again. There was no end o' hard knocks for me, though, whenever I came across the old fellow, 'cause he got no more swag from me. I wouldn't stand that, though; I had my legs, and the world was wide. I sold papers an' blacked boots, 'n' bimeby I got to be an office errand boy, then a little while ago I took up the printin' business—a tramp printer, you know. You know it's the drink keeps me trampin', though."

"How did you get to drinking, Joe?" I asked. "You are young to be a drinker. I have often wondered about that."

"How did I? young, am I? Why, I took to that natural's a suckin' pig. I always drank. I could always get a warm corner in the rum-shops; the men are always ready to give a little chap the bottom o' the glasses. Sometimes I'd get a whole one, for some trick or other. I learned early how to win my way, I tell you, and drink was the easiest thing in the world to get. I've seen the time when it was vittles and drink and fire and bed and clothes to me. I could always get somethin' to eat in the free lunch shops, if I could rake enough pennies together to buy a glass of beer. It's second nature to me to drink. Honest, I begin to feel dry now 'cause I've promised not to drink again—I've been slow 'bout promisin' to quit, for I don't want to break no promises. I 'spected it was one thing for me to sign the pledge, and 'nother to keep it, and I know it now."

I held his hand hard and prayed God to help him, while I said: "But you will not drink, Joe, you have promised. You did take a long time to think it over, you know about the help that comes from God, through prayer and faith in the Lord Christ. You have been faithful in coming to learn about it, and now you must accept this help, you must not fail. It is the same kind of help that took you that day out of the life of a thief; and it will make you a sober, clean, true, Christian man."

"I've thought that too," said Joe, "an' I've been doin' a heap o' thinkin' since that day in the office, you remember?"

"I remember, Joe."

"An' when I found out that you really meant what you said—say, you didn't know what I was thinkin' when you stood talkin' to me, did you?"

"No; but I have often wished I did."

"Well, I'll tell you; you see, I'd learned to suspect that if anybody was interested they had some job or 'nother to work and I thought—you won't mind, will you?—it's awful mean—I thought now she's come to get a job done and thinks she'll get it done cheaper or extra fine if she soaps the printer. Much she's interested in me! She'd never know me anywhere else. But somehow all the time I wished you was in earnest and I thought, 'Mebby she is.' So when I saw you from my window, coming along our way again, I thought, 'Now I'll run down and meet her, an' see if she knows me. If she does and speaks to me I'll know she meant it and I'll go to them rooms and try to stop drinkin' and be better every way.' You see, I knowed drink was getting the best of me, and some o' the fellows 't I knowed had quit. So I ran down and stood there—I hadn't the face to go and meet you. I was just tremblin' and weak over it; and when you was a-goin' on by I felt hard, I tell you. But I said, 'It's only what I expected.' Then when you turned, and come and gave me your hand and spoke so kind—I—I felt more's I did that time when I heard the kids sing and the man talk, than I ever had since, 'n I thought, 'I've never stole since that day an' now I'll go to them temperance rooms and stop drinkin'.' This is a little different from t'other. 'N mebby I can't stick but I'm goin' to try awful hard for it; but while I like all you say to me, I ain't no Christian, you know."

"I know, Joe, and that is why I say what I do to you. You must be a Christian; that means a true lover of Christ and God's obedient son."

"Can't, don't know how; didn't get the right kind of a start."

"That makes no difference to your Heavenly Father. He knows just what has to be done to make you into a good Christian man and He is able to do it. And it is His right, Joe. He has done a good deal for you already."

"No quarrel with that," and Joe shook his head sadly. "Folks can't always get what's owin' 'em in this world or the next, either, I guess. And He's able to get along 'thout what I owe Him better'n I was 'thout what was owin' me, all along. I'm bound to do all I can in reason, but 'taint reason to expect me to pay that debt right off."

"Jesus paid it for you, Joe; you simply owe it to Him, and He is willing to take you, just as you are, for the whole amount, and then make you more free than you could possibly be by owing yourself."

"I can't see it," said Joe, gloomily. "Sometime I will, mebby."

He looked dubiously at the pledge card as he put it away in his pocketbook, giving his head that peculiar little shake. He evidently had but small faith in the success of his venture. Of course he failed. It was not long until he came with the odor of drink on his breath, confessed his fall, and asked me to take back his pledge.

"I might take the card," I said, "and destroy it and scratch your name off the roll, but would that take back your word? It has gone forth, and cannot be called back. If you have failed, your word is still there with God. You must learn how to make it true, or you are a lost man."

"I'm lost fast enough," he said.

"Then you are the man Christ came to save. You remember the text, 'He came to seek and to save that which was lost'?"

Joe was in great bitterness of spirit over this failure, and the fact that his promise could not be undone. The irrevocable character of a human transaction, either good or bad, was revealed to him with tremendous force, as well as the ruinous tendencies of his own nature, and he cried out:

"But what can I do?"

"Believe on the Lord Jesus and thou shalt be saved."

"But how to believe!"

"Believe Him as you would the best and truest friend you have, one who cannot fail you ever."

"But I don't see how He can save me."

"No, He does not reveal the process, only the fact. He has His own way of saving a man, and His own way of making you know it when it is done. You have just to put your case in his hands, as though you were sick and He the doctor. He is the great Physician, you know. Your part is to trust Him and obey Him, and He will do the rest."

"But how will that cure me of drinking when my feet will go into the places, and I will get the liquor and drink it in spite of the best I can do? I have done my best, honest."

"It is the new heart that you want. The new nature that He will give you will be able to take care of your feet and keep them from going into the saloon. God does not expect a man brought up as you have been to keep sober, until your heart is made right. I am sure that nobody could appreciate what you have made of yourself, out of the material you had to work with, more than Jesus Christ, your brother, does. He knows what strong temptations mean to a young fellow. He knows just how to get through them, too. And if you, all alone, could do as much as you have to make a man of yourself, what can not you and this Almighty One together, do?"

Joe could not seem to "see it" yet, however. He learned slowly, yielded with difficulty. He had a long controversy with the Spirit of God, and fell again and again. But at last, when he was nearly giving up all effort in despair, when we were becoming nearly hopeless about his ever becoming sober, he suddenly dropped into the hands of Christ and surprised us by being saved, wholly and sweetly saved.

He at once began to prove the reality of the great victory over his enemy, drink, which is assured in an uttermost salvation, and has gone on in a life of triumph to this day.

Every weekday evening, at about half-past six, he may be seen passing through one of the gates that leads from the city of Chicago to a suburban train which takes him to his own home, all paid for, where his wife and five children wait to receive him with that kind of love that will bless any man and make his home a little heaven. He is still a printer—and has proved that a printer may be a Christian. And out of the memories of his neglected childhood, and the degradation of his young manhood, and the blessed salvation which he found in Christ, he brings to his children daily that which makes them rich in their father.

"THE EIGHT HOURS' DAY AND THE UNEMPLOYED."

BY REV. C. H. ZIMMERMAN.

Mr. John Rae, author of that fascinating book, "Contemporary Socialism," has an article with the above title in the Contemporary Review for June. Its object is to show that the common belief is a mistake that a reduction of the work-day to eight hours would diminish the number of the unemployed.

He begins by quoting the statement of Mr. W. Abraham, M. P., that "the general adoption of the eight hours' day in England would provide work for seven hundred and fifty thousand new hands." He also quotes Mr. Gunton, of New York, author of "Wealth and Progress," as follows:

"The direct and immediate effect of the general adoption of the eight hours' system in the manual trades of the United States, even excluding the great occupations of agriculture and domestic service, would absorb not only all the unemployed labor in this country, but all the unemployed labor in England, Wales, Scotland, France and Germany. It would create employment for 3,555,959 more adult laborers. This is not a fanciful speculation, based upon an imaginary expansion of the home and foreign market, but is what would necessarily result from the natural operation of economic forces in the effort to supply the normal consumption."

"Now all this," Mr. Rae says, "is illusory; first, because it overlooks the important alteration which the introduction of shorter hours would make in the productive capacity of work people; second, because it expects the great absorption of the unemployed to flow from a general reduction of products."

Mr. Gunton may be extravagant in his estimate of the number of the unemployed who would find work as the result of the adoption of the eight hours' day, but Mr. Rae goes to the opposite extreme in saying, "It cannot make any serious impression on the number of the unemployed." His argument in support of this proposition is drawn mainly from the operation of the English Ten Hours' Act of 1848, which he shows did not result in the employment of more laborers in the cotton, silk and worsted factories of England. He says: "It came into force when there were thirty thousand cotton workers out of employment, and so far as we can see, did not make work for one of them." Mr. Rae overlooks, or at least does not mention the fact, which is very pertinent and against his argument, that the period (from which he gathers his data) of the earlier operation of the Ten Hour Act was one of great increase in labor-saving inventions for the textile trades, and that with the new machines, nearly the same amount of product could be turned out by a laborer in ten hours, that he before produced in twelve. Since that time there has been still greater advance in the invention of labor-saving machinery insomuch that Mr. Wells, in his "Economic Changes," shows that in ten of the leading industries using machinery, it has displaced an average of sixty-four per cent of the labor formerly required for the same product. Another fact overlooked by Mr. Rae is that prior to the Ten Hours' Act English labor was at its lowest stage of degradation through miserably inadequate wages and consequent want, discouragement and inefficiency, and that about that time it began to be organized and to acquire self-respect, esprit and ambition. The Ten Hours' Act was a further encouragement to hope and energy; and it would not be strange if these influences would cause laborers to do more per hour in a ten hours' day than they did before in a twelve to fourteen hours' day.

Coming down to the time when the eight hours movement was inaugurated, Mr. Rae makes what he confesses to be an astonishing statement that "a reduction from twelve to eight hours has again and again been made without reducing the output." Such reductions have been very rare. The history of labor shows that changes to shorter hours have been gradual—from fourteen to thirteen, or at most, to twelve; then to eleven and ten; then, as labor became better organized, to nine and eight. The instance Mr. Rae gives of the South Yorkshire coal miners who, in 1858, obtained a reduction from twelve to eight hours, and the day after the change was made, "sent out more coals than they did before," is far from proof that an honest miner can, day after day the year through, get out as much coal by working only eight hours a day as he can in twelve.

When men are dissatisfied, as these miners probably were, on account of too long a work day, or inadequate wages, or for any other reason, they generally do as little as they can for their wages, "kill time," as part of their argument for a change. When their requests are granted gratitude, or the wish to prove that the change was wise stimulates them to greater exertion. Of course, when men have been overworked and enfeebled by an excessively long work day of from twelve to fourteen hours, they cannot do as much as men in normal vigor could in eight hours.

But a ten hour work day is not excessively long, and the argument for reduction to eight is not that the men can do as much; but first, that they ought to be willing to work a less number of hours, even if they earn less, in order to give the unemployed a chance; and, second, that wage-workers need more time for self-improvement.

Other things being equal, that is, with workmen in equal vigor, and content with their condition, and with equally efficient machinery, a reduction of hours causes a reduction of product, and if only the same amount of product were to be maintained under the eight hour system, more men must be employed.

But with more men at work drawing wages to be used in consumption, a larger product is necessary. Mr. Rae rightly says that "the only thing able to keep up the normal consumption of individuals is their means of paying for it." He quotes Mr. Gunton as saying there are one million men out of work in the United States. There are probably more now, or soon will be, if present financial conditions continue. Men out of work and their families do not consume as much food, fuel, clothing, etc., as when working and receiving wages to pay for these things. They are forced to consume very little. If by any means, and I know of none so obvious as a reduction of the hours of the employed, the million unemployed men could be put to work; their wages would enable them to purchase many times more than they now consume, which would greatly increase the demand for all staple products of industry. Therefore, the statement that shorter hours make work for new hands does not, as Mr. Rae says, "expect the absorption of the unemployed to flow from a general reduction of products." It expects just the reverse—that there must be an increase of the product to meet the demands of the new hands who have work and wages to pay for what they need.

The ever-increasing multiplication of labor-displacing machinery makes a shorter working day the only solution of the surplus labor problem.

DISESTABLISHMENT IN WALES.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

The following points, illustrating the present position of the Established Church, were culled at pencil point from the speeches of the Welsh women at the recent meeting of the Woman's Liberal Association.

WELSH LIBERAL WOMEN'S VIEWS.

We want to end the strife, to let Catholic, Episcopalian and Non-conformist stand on an equal footing of justice, freedom and equality. Ruskin says: "There is no true mother church save one which gives a helping hand to all." We have unwillingly contributed to support an alien church. Roger Williams was a Welshman, that brave soul who stood for religious freedom in the great new country, as were Barrow and Greenwood, who in the days of Queen Elizabeth, after seven years' imprisonment, were executed at Tyburn because they said religion was a natural, not a compulsory thing.

There was a church congress in London recently which made a demonstration against Welsh disestablishment (please take notice there were no Welshmen present); they partook of the sacrament three times and said their church was founded on Jesus Christ, the Lord. We say that ours has just the same foundation, and that is Christ, not a state church to which we never go, but to which we are legally bound to pay tithes, besides supporting a church that we love. The Church Defence party, as it is called, is the Tory party; Liberals have no desire to choke their creed down everybody's neck. They talk to us of the antiquity of the church. Yes, we remember it to our sorrow; its yoke was on the necks of our ancestors even heavier than it is on ours.

How did this legal status ever come upon us? What is the origin of church endowment in our gallant little principality? The land ought to be the inheritance of the people; cultivating the land is the one industry that the more you take from the soil the more you get. Hundreds of years ago a man who had murdered his brother willed so much glebe and so much pasture land to the church as a recompense for his sins; another did it to atone for the impure life that he had led, and so it went on; for one reason and another land was made over to the clergy, but by a later law it was determined that the tithes we pay for the use of the soil thus willed shall be devoted to the education of the children, the care of the poor and to secure prayers for wandering souls. In those old days doubtless the monks prayed for those souls departed, but now the church itself does not believe in prayers like that. Now we have school rate and the poor rate entirely separate from the tithes, so we are doubly hampered, and the truth is, the clergy get the tithes, and our people do not attend their church and will not; there is nothing they hate worse.

The clergy have built great churches but where are the congregations? Compare their statistics with those of the Non-conformists; they had it all their own way until the religious awakening of 1715, during which meetings were held in farm-houses, and out of which grew thirty-five chapels, but in 1879 the Non-conformists had over thirty thousand in Wales; we could not be crushed! They tried to take away our language, but though our children learned English in the schools they spoke only Welsh in the playgrounds and at home.

In Wales only three out of sixteen possessors of livings reside there. The people knew that the interest of the clergy was in the money they got, and not in the welfare of the people. Oftentimes the choice of a young man of high family was between the army and the pulpit; the sword and the New Testament. Such men could not win the people's hearts. Who will you find in the Established Church in Wales? The clergy and their families, the bell ringer, the pew opener, a few county families, as they are called, and a stray farmer or two. If ever there was a Scripture fulfilled it is this: "Behold your house is left unto you desolate."

Much is said of the petitions which have been circulated in Wales in favor of the State Church, and the great number of signatures that have been secured from the town of Carmarthen is an instance. They had a little congregation at ten o'clock, another at eleven o'clock, another at twelve o'clock; these were made up of the same persons almost to a man, but a vote of each of the three audiences (?) was counted separately. The landlord goes to the tenant and makes him sign the petition or else his farm is taken from him; the mistress goes to the maid who has served her faithfully all her life and says, "I will dismiss you if you don't sign the petition." In hospitals and poor-houses the names are demanded and secured, and the petitions have been carried even to the infirmary and to the workhouse, including the deaf and dumb one finds there. But to offset this number the principality of Wales has spoken; at the last election out of thirty-one constituencies twenty-nine Liberals were elected, all of them pledged to disestablishment, which but for the secrecy of the ballot could not have been accomplished.

Masses for the dead are now illegal; tithes are got from the sweat of the farmer's brow, and it is not fair to make people support the religion of the wealthy within whose courts they never go. The church when no longer an "Establishment" will do far better than now when she is hated by the great mass of the population. Take her off her stilts—let her enter the lists along with Non-conformists, Baptists and others of our sort—and then, Non-conformists, you must look to your colors.

There is a church richly endowed which has one service a month and two or three attendants besides the clergyman. He told me that one day two tourists came in and he was horrified for he had not on a clean surplice! This is a fair index of the amount of interest and enthusiasm that a State Church has aroused in Wales after centuries of opportunity and state protection. They have a law which says dissenters cannot lay their loved ones in their cemeteries, because they have been consecrated; another says a clergyman must be at all funerals and be assured the survivors are not allowed to forget his fee. Ecclesiastics do not seem particularly careful lest religious life should decline, but they are busily concerned about the money. Welsh Liberals do not want church property, far from it, but ask that the state may have it and use it for the people's good. Poor artisans and miners have built all the chapels that are in Wales; these are sacred to them as the products of their honest toil, far more dear than any church that Wales contains. A rector in one place works for his people, and does not leave them to his curate, but goes among the poor and helps them bear their heavy lot. His church is never empty but packed to overflowing.

Among the Irish ten to three desire Home Rule; among the Welsh ten to one ask for disestablishment and disendowment of the Welsh church.

Our hearts beat with the Irish; we, too, are Celts. The Tories need not think we shall desert Ireland, but we wish our bill to come up as soon as Home Rule has been secured. The church should not be like a fretful and infirm old woman leaning on the crutch of the state, giving a stone to them that beg for bread. She should be a gracious mother nurturing those who are depending on her for their spiritual life.

Wales is the backbone of the Liberal party. The hearts and hopes of our countrymen are waiting anxiously for your verdict. Earnest, thoughtful and sympathetic women of the Liberal Federation, you are asked to stand with us.

COLUMBIAN CRUMBS.

BY B. V. CUSHMAN, M. D.

American day was such a revival of Fourth of July as devoutly patriotic souls have long prayed for. The national emblems were not monopolized by the liquor trade as heretofore. The White City was aflutter with the precious colors in every fabric, from richest silk to cheapest cambric. The great event of the day was the raising of the original Paul Jones flag. One of his descendants, Mrs. Harriet Stafford of Martha's Vineyard, is the present custodian of the priceless relic. The venerable lady carried it to the platform and held the hoist ropes during the exercises. Tears rolled down her cheeks as Mayor Harrison told the thrilling tale of its rescue by her brave ancestor. After the hoisting, Isabella Beecher Hooker made her way to Mrs. Stafford's side and the two representative women sat with clasped hands under the precious bunting.

Dear old Liberty Bell was "at home" in the Pennsylvania Building all day, and thousands called to pay their respects. It was banked with flowers from many states. New Liberty Bell in the foundry at Troy, responding to the touch of a woman's finger in Chicago, sent forth its maiden peal; a telegram from Troy read: "You can announce to the two hundred and fifty thousand who have made such splendid offerings to this bell that their gifts have crystallized into grand form and that the new Liberty Bell has been set ringing to aid peace and good-will throughout the whole world." Then the crowd went off in a great, sky-rending shout. I must give you the peroration of that eloquent address by Hon. Mr. Carson, of Philadelphia, as he turned from the history of the old cracked bell that is his city's pride, to the new: "Thou great bell, cast from the chains of liberators and the copper pennies of the children in our public schools, from sacred relics contributed by pious and patriotic hands, baptized by copious libations poured out upon the altar of a common country by grateful hearts and consecrated by the prayers of the American people, take up the note of prophecy and of jubilee rung out by your older sister in 1776, and proclaim around the globe such tones as shall make thrones topple, and despots tremble until all peoples and nationalities, from turbaned Turks and Slavic peasants to distant islanders and children of the sun shall join in the swelling chorus, and the heaven born light of civil and religious liberty shall shine in every land."

Meanwhile a celebration was going on in the Woman's Building. The pillars of the colonnade were wound with bunting, and the whole interior was aflame with national colors. Mrs. Eagle presided, while her husband, Governor Eagle, of Arkansas, sat by and congratulated himself on how well she used the gavel. Governor Hoyt, of Wyoming, was present, and read the opening ode, "Columbus," by Mrs. Messenger, of Washington. Faust's Jewel Song was most beautifully rendered by Miss Blanche Foulke. An oration, "The Land we Love," occupied most of the hour, and Miss Foulke's charming voice in "The Maid of Cadiz" closed the program.

Our foreign guests helped us celebrate in right neighborly fashion. Turk, Arab, Siamese, Dahomeyan—everybody was out, waving his own flag, paired with ours. Most touching was the part of the Indians, all the more that it was spontaneous, arranged by sixty pupils of the Lincoln Institute of Philadelphia, a school for Indian boys and girls. Their rendering of "Star Spangled Banner" and "My Country, 'tis of Thee" left no doubt as to the citizenship of their hearts.

AS ITHERS SEE US.

No criticism could have more value than that of Dr. Julius Lessing, director of the Royal Museum of Practical Arts in Berlin. He expresses only delight, heightened by surprise. He finds here a "city of palaces of vast proportions and most artistic architecture." The great man is swamped in surprise, because it is so at variance with the old world conception of "American chaos." It is a mark of his own greatness that preconceived prejudices do not blind him. He declares our White City beyond the dreams of Europe's greatest artists. Considering the size of the buildings, he expected them to have a shedlike appearance, but he finds nothing in the architecture betraying exhibition purposes. "America declines for the ornamental attire of the Chicago Exposition all that in the least might bear the stamp of the forge and the machine," which has characterized European expositions. "Instead, Chicago has dug with giant hands from the store-house of ancient art. If applicable, a fac simile of the old model is introduced. Either in equal or double proportions you will find a reproduction of the monument of Lysicrates, of the temple of Vesta, or of the Parthenon." To him the remarkable thing is that this "wild selecticism" has achieved such perfect architectural results. He is reminded of Florence. Finally, in despair of expressing his delight, he declares that "it must be seen in order to be believed how these audacious designers of the West have been able to transform their colossal sheds into gorgeous palaces of architecture." This tribute from so high source is very gratifying to us who have watched the wonder as it rose. As I stood in the Forestry Building last winter and saw the melee of angel wings, horse heads, and limbs, human and brute, I wondered what could come out of it. Now I see. Strolling by the peristyle one night, I met a young farmer, known to me from his babyhood. He was standing there in rapt admiration of "the stock figures." A horse, seemingly just unhitched from the plow, and turning his head to caress his master, delighted my young friend. A magnificent bull, poised upon another pedestal, came in for his praise.

LECTURES IN THE WOMAN'S BUILDING.

Next to the cup of cold water, at all times on tap in the W. C. T. U. exhibit, nothing is better than the daily lecture idea carried out in Assembly Hall of our building. One by Mrs. Wesley Smith, entitled "Symmetrical Womanhood," was particularly hearable. Mrs. Smith urges an all-round experience and development for women, and cautions against the tendency toward some single absorbing fad. "The perfect woman shall cherish all, hold fast that which is good in each, and remember that she owes equal allegiance to every part of her being." She warns against cynicism: "The woman who slays love does ill, for like the wounded lion it shall turn and rend her and leave her at last desolate and stricken and alone, while for her who knows the grace of a heavenly spirit, 'her deeds shall drop as the rain, her speech shall distill as the dew.'" We are reminded that "charity means loving kindness to the maid-servant and a gentle word to the man-servant." She recommends that we borrow the motto which the Greeks put upon the arch of their academies: "Do nothing too much." It is a good thing in these noisy times that our young women see that it is better to be than to do, that a rounded, symmetrical character is of more value to themselves and the world in which they live, than to be much heralded. "To all of us it is not given to climb the mountain, and few of us may wear the laurel, but who shall say what constitutes success—who deny that she has achieved her highest mission who has been simply a good woman?"

Not less interesting and inspiring are the cooking lessons in the corn kitchen, supported by the Illinois lady managers. The lecturer and teacher is Mrs. Rorer, a charming little lady who appears these hot mornings in a dainty blue gingham, cut "V shape" at the throat. A snowy white apron and mull cap complete the charming costume. She informs you that every recipe must contain corn meal, corn flour, or some product of the maize, for her motive is to advance corn and bring wheat down in the market. This will affect the wheat farmer much less than the speculator in bread-stuffs, with whom she has little sympathy. The colored attendant has already brought the accoutrements required to demonstrate what the speaker says. A gas stove stands beside the table, to receive the mixtures so deftly put together before our eyes, and soon returns them to the audience to be "tasted." Every housewife visiting the Fair should plan to spend the hour beginning at 10:30 in the corn kitchen at the Woman's Building.

HILLSBORO CRUSADE SKETCHES.

XIII.

BY ELIZA J. THOMPSON.

In view of the increasing business that seemed to be opening up before our association, a meeting of the executive committee was called, and the appointment of two vice-presidents resulted, Mrs. John A. Smith and Mrs. Judge Evans, and our women felt greatly strengthened by the addition of two such aids for future conflicts.

When we assembled the following morning for the appointed prayer service in behalf of our brave, but persecuted Cincinnati sisters, it so turned out that the Pittsburg Crusaders were in like peril, and although their names were then less familiar than since, sympathy in the same glorious cause made us one in the Master. Further reports gave the assurance that these noble women were persecuted even more cruelly than Cincinnati's martyrs! And so our tears and our songs, our prayers and our rejoicings in being among those who were counted worthy to suffer persecution for Christ's sake, caused us to sit together in a heavenly place that morning.

Much enthusiasm was felt and expressed by ministers and laymen. The sisters were speechless with emotion, but heartily endorsed sentiments of condemnation against the city authorities in regard to their action, favoring the wickedness of the wicked, and insulting pure, good Christian women. Dr. McSurely on that morning expressed his opinion as to the political drift of the movement. He seemed to believe that "the contest would finally be between American ideas of liberty and right, and the German infidel idea of uncontrolled license, not only in regard to temperance but to all the principles of truth for which our Puritan ancestry braved the terrors of the New England wilderness, and which they sealed and established with their blood!"

After a lapse of nearly twenty years these words of our faithful Crusade friend and brother seem prophetic, as we scan the existing struggle (political) between right and wrong, and witness the "Sunday closing" experience of American statesmen against the uncontrolled and "infidel" ideas of foreign powers, the worst element of which has the privilege of the ballot on American soil. It is well that the women still "cling to the promises and look up" as the old colored Baptist brother said he did when he fell, for our God's promise is sure and steadfast. "The way of the wicked He turneth upside down." And "though it tarry, wait for it because it will surely come."

There was much accomplished during the weeks following. Boxes packed and sent to flood sufferers, meetings for the young people and the children, visitations to the prison by our faithful committee, Miss Julia Brown, Mrs. Stevenson and Mrs. Pickering, and others. But above all the county meetings at church and school-house were vigorously sustained.

About the 23d of June it was suggested and approved, at the morning meeting, that arrangements be made for having a grand temperance picnic at the fair ground on the Fourth of July, and that a notice and general invitation be published in the town papers and by posters, so that all good friends of the cause throughout the county might have ample time to make their plans to join us. After much labor and great executive ability on the part of the officers in charge, committees were decided upon as follows: Arrangement, speakers, music, program, reception of delegates from townships, marshal of the day, chairman, secretary and reporter.

The day's success proved to many a doubter the coming, quiet, orderly beauty in store for humanity, when "righteousness shall cover the earth" and "the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us." There were fine music, gratis, from the Hillsboro orchestra, "good speaking," large spreading oaks, shading the beautiful greensward below, on which each township delegation was received by a committee of Hillsboro Crusaders and welcomed under their own marked bower. Many smiling visitors from the village, also, who had failed to join in the saloon feature of our work, were free to appreciate and commend the "lovely effects of the Crusade in the Fourth of July celebration," especially when they saw the honest joy it gave the Crusading ladies to provide the best they had for the refreshment of the wives and children of the ex-saloon-keepers.

The first business of note after the successful "Fourth" was the resignation of our valued recording secretary, Mrs. D. K. Fenner, who had served us so faithfully from the first day of our work and had kept the record so much in the spirit of our Crusade that no word of bitterness or malice could be found upon the "minutes," although diligent search was made (as confessed by Mr. Dunn's attorneys), hoping thereby to establish the plea of persecution against their client. Mrs. Fenner's needed absence from home made her resignation a necessity, hence we submitted. But in the good providence of God, who "sets one thing over against another," we were greatly rejoiced to find that Miss Virginia H. Wever was willing to serve us, and her name being duly presented, she was elected unanimously by a rising vote, and from July 13 to October 29, 1874, we rejoiced in her prompt, efficient aid and in her unusual ability as a parliamentarian, which at that early date of our Crusade was rare.

The absorbing theme in hamlet, county and town now was the approaching test vote—license or no-license. To this end Rev. Dr. Leonard, then of Cincinnati, had been invited to Hillsboro, and on the evening before the election made one of his masterly efforts in Music Hall, which had a very fine effect upon the minds of our people. As usual, the amiable Crusaders had worked hard all the weeks of the past "no-license campaign," and now at the crisis they could not use the only effective weapon in such an emergency; but they felt assured that their cry would be heard at the court of heaven; hence, an all-day prayer, song and conference meeting was held on the day the men voted; the burden of the prayers that day was: Oh, Lord, help the men to vote right in Thy sight, and hasten the day when the curse of home may be banished from this and every land! and all the Crusaders (women and men) said Amen.

At the evening service, after learning of our victories, General McDowell, the uniform friend of the ladies in their efforts in the temperance work, paid a high tribute to their efficiency in the late conflict, and said emphatically: "It is my opinion that the work and speaking of the women saved the township and county on the 18th." Thereupon the Rev. S. D. Clayton arose and said: "Yes, General, when I heard of the victory in Liberty township and Highland county, I said, and now repeat it, 'May the Lord bless these earnest, noble women,' and He will."

OCEAN GROVE W. C. T. U. SCHOOL OF METHODS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—As usual, the white ribbon women took the initiative at Ocean Grove this summer, being the first society to hold a series of meetings here. For a number of years the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of New Jersey has held a summer school of methods at this popular religious resort.

The school of methods of 1893 opened on the morning of July 6, in the Tabernacle, Mrs. Emma Bourne, state president, presiding. The interior of the building had been appropriately decorated with flags and banners; a picture of the former dearly beloved president, Mrs. Sarah J. Downs, who has gone to her heavenly reward, looked kindly down from the wall above the platform, on the white ribbon workers gathered from every part of New Jersey and many other states. Above Mrs. Downs' picture were her last words: "The liquor traffic will be outlawed. Blessed is he who helps."

Mrs. A. M. Hammer, of Pennsylvania, gave a beautiful Bible reading on "God's Fear Nots," which was very comforting to those in affliction. One of the needy souls in the audience was Mrs. Mary Grant Cramer, the sister of General Grant, who is suffering deep anxiety on account of her only daughter, now seriously ill in Paris, amid the excitement incident to the Commune insurrection.

A very interesting paper was on the question, "Is Cider Drinking Prohibited in the Bible?" written by Mrs. Frank Le Bar, and read by Mrs. Barber. The writer took the position that cider drinking was an evil that should be avoided. That as cider made from even sound apples fermented in twenty four hours after it left the press, it was a dangerous beverage, and its very insidiousness made it all the more harmful. The only safe cider mill, the writer stated, was the mouth.

It was moved and carried to send a telegraphic message of sympathy to Mrs. Ellis, Mrs. Denman and Mrs. Sharps, prominent white ribbon workers of New Jersey, whom illness had prevented attending the meetings. One of the pleasant features of the occasion was the singing by the children from the Newark Home of the Friendless. The music during both days of the meeting was in charge of Mrs. M. W. Gwindon, of New York.

When Mrs. Bourne, the presiding officer, announced Mrs. N. L. Caminade as speaker, and her subject, "America's Uncrowned Monarch," she stated that she had asked a number of persons who was meant in this title but that not one gave the right answer. Mrs. Caminade, however, soon explained America's uncrowned monarch to be the love of money. The money invested in the liquor traffic was the terrible foe that must be fought; "eliminate," said the speaker, "the profits and you have overcome the liquor traffic. Concentration of wealth is the great evil in this country."

Dr. E. H. Stokes, president of the Ocean Grove Camp Meeting Association, made an address of greeting in which he welcomed the white-ribbon women, and expressed his appreciation of the work they were doing.

Mrs. Mary T. Burt, president of the New York W. C. T. U., and who has done such a great work for temperance in that state, delivered an interesting address on, "The Progress of the Work and the Encouragement to be gained from the present outlook."

The free parliament was one of the features of the morning in which papers were read on the "Duties of Officers," by Mrs. T. H. Tomlinson, Miss Jennie Clark, Mrs. J. H. Demarest and Mrs. S. M. Krom.

Mrs. L. Downs Quigley read an ably prepared paper, that was listened to with great interest, on "The Public Meeting—Why?" She said, among other valuable things:

"The public meeting is the test of a union's courage and grace. The temperance question is so closely connected with business, politics and religion that if a speaker cannot perform her duty without hurting somewhere—it's time some one is hurt. Too many unions are firing into the air for fear some one will be struck. Before God, I believe that the union killed by the truth is better dead—let it rest in peace; built upon the sand, it has served the W. C. T. U. and the world best by its death. Somewhere in that town God has His woman who will build upon a rock.

"The boulder on the track to-day and the greatest hindrance to the public speaker is the failure of the local union to stand by the St. Louis resolution. What hinders the victory? The church passes resolutions and fails to act up to them. What hinders the victory? The W. C. T. U. passes resolutions and fails to live up to them. All that can be said of the political question is true of suffrage. One of the large unions in this state said to Rev. Anna Shaw: 'Miss Shaw, we thought that the Reverend in your name might antagonize some opposed to woman's work, so we advertised you only as Miss Shaw.' Now, some would call that tact; some would call that policy! I call it cowardice. God grant that every union in New Jersey may move on to the solid rock beside Christ Jesus, where there is no such compromise.

"The W. C. T. U. has a message to the church from God, must enter, and hold its meetings in our churches; I believe the duty of the hour is to carry our principles into every pulpit in the land and make no concessions. It is sometimes said that our speakers criticise the church; we expect to criticise the church until its actions agree with its utterances, until women on its membership roll can answer God's call to preach His Holy Word as revealed by His spirit."

Among the most valuable papers and addresses were the following: "Necessity of Organizing Y. W. C. T. U's in Every Locality," by Miss May Campbell; "What a Y Can Do," Mrs. J. N. Harris; "How to Rest," Mrs. Dr. Upham, of Asbury Park; "Mothers' Meetings," Mrs. Deborah Leeds; "Franchise for Woman," Mrs. J. M. Pullen; "The Situation in Kansas," Miss M. Hussey, M. D.; "Scientific Temperance Instruction," Miss M. W. Osborne; "Bible Reading—Currents and Counter-Currents of Life," Mrs. A. E. Bennett; "Loyal Temperance Legion," Miss Peck. Among other notables present were Mrs. Clinton B. Fisk, Dr. Dorman, of Connecticut, Mrs. Ida H. Reid, president of Vermont W. C. T. U.

The closing meeting was on Friday evening, in the great Auditorium, where a large audience had gathered. Miss Henrietta S. Moore, of Springfield, O., made the address, on "Prohibition by Woman's Vote." She stated that the public was ready for the great political movements of party Prohibition and Woman Suffrage, but it was the unions themselves that were too apathetic and fearful.

A NOBLE AND NEEDFUL WORK.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Under the above heading the English Woman's Herald, of May 18, thus writes of the tenth annual meeting of the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children:

"It is an extraordinary thing that till lately—till Rev. Benjamin Waugh undertook to stir up the hearts and minds of English people—the question of justice to children had scarcely ever been raised. His efforts have brought out to surprised and pained recognition the needs not of charity alone, but simple justice to hosts of these little ones.

"Dr. Riig spoke of the terrible cases of cruelty and neglect—principally parental cruelty and neglect—revealed through these efforts, at the same time giving the encouraging assurance that ninety-six of the cases brought into court had been successful, proving thus how wisely and efficiently the affairs of the society had been conducted. After the meeting at the Lord Mayor's, presided over by him, a reception was held at the Shelter on Harper street, where the large company could see how the children fared at headquarters."

The same testimony is given to the work of our own society of that name, or as it is called in New York where it was first organized, by all who knew its president, "Mr. Gerry's Society," who holds the same relation to it that Mr. Waugh does to the English society. The New York society was first in this beneficent field of labor, it being now in the twentieth year of its existence. The pathetic incident which led to its organization is graphically narrated in the January Review of Reviews for 1892. Through its example and effort similar associations are in operation in ninety of our cities and towns, and these are all united under the name of the American Humane Association for Annual Conference and Coöperation.

Through the persistence of the society, a most carefully revised penal code of the state now presents a uniform, compact, harmonious law for the protection of children which has been eagerly sought after and copied by many other countries.

A thoughtful study of the details of the work of these two champions of the children will give added courage and enthusiasm to our own workers in our Woman's Christian Temperance Union department for securing homes for homeless, abased and neglected children. Our president advises coöperation with existing Children's Aid Societies whenever and wherever possible. They are actively efficient in many states. In Massachusetts, the Boston Children's Aid Society is of thirty years standing. In Illinois the Children's Home Society has its auxiliaries in eight states, and notably the Pennsylvania Children's Aid, with its fifty auxiliaries has placed its hundreds of little ones in judiciously selected homes, without resort to institutional care. This cannot always be done, but wherever possible the childless and bereaved homes and the homeless little ones are brought together.

This is the plan, "so simple," practical, so just the thing. Why have we not thought of it long ago? It is to remedial philanthropy what the discovery of perpetual motion would be to invention.

WHAT I WOULD HAVE.

BY MRS. M. O. PAGE.

I'd rather have the charming grace
That nestles in the lustrous eye;
The beauty of a happy face,
Than all that riches e'er can buy.

I'd rather have a heart that's warm,
That constant burns with true desires—
A sure retreat in every storm,
An altar lit with heavenly fires.

What beauty can compare to this,
What need of outward charm to vie?
The inner soul that holds the bliss
Will leap from cheek and brow and eye.

The heart that knits itself to God—
That draws from fountains high as heaven,
Can never grovel, groan nor plod
Nor sigh, for all to Christ is given.

MRS. BRUCE'S LESSON.

BY NORA MARBLE.

(Concluded.)

And so after that night in which Uncle Si pictured the bleeding Lamb, in the child's mind was love ever associated with suffering; with a lamb's soft, appealing eyes upturned in mute agony; an innocent, spotless lamb, moaning, bleeting in pain. Evening after evening his golden head reclining on the old man's shoulder, would he ask for that hymn, while opposite, her mind engaged with another matter, sat Mrs. Bruce apparently unconscious of it all.

"I must get rid of him," was her one thought when contemplating Uncle Si. "I must get rid of him, unless —" and so one night, by deft questioning, she drew from him the reluctant admission of a snug sum laid by, "a snug little sum," in a tone strongly suggestive of a merry twinkle behind those hideous blue glasses. But week after week went by, and no substantial evidence presenting itself of that snug sum, Mrs. Bruce hesitated no longer to revive the subject.

"Enough to bury him!"

Ah, the hours she had wasted in speculating upon the possible result of the old man's tender affection for Jamie.

Enough to bury him, indeed! Well, not from beneath her roof—she was resolved—would the old man be carried to his last resting place, and so Mrs. Bruce, the following evening, coolly intimated to Uncle Si that, inasmuch as several years of his life had been given to his country's cause, he had, to her mind, most justly earned a home in one of its institutions.

"The Soldiers' Home," he faltered; "aye, Mary, a blessed institution, indeed, but I had hoped—had thought, that—" his broken words were here interrupted by childish sobs, a tightening of a pair of slender arms, for Jamie well comprehended that as he had lost the father who had loved him, so was he now to lose the comforting presence of this new-found friend.

With wide open eyes in his solitary bed that night Jamie lay, and not until a childish resolve had taken possession of his mind did the unhappy little fellow sleep.

. . . . . .

Through the hushed air at nightfall of the following day a whitening shower descended. From her window, as the evening wore on, Mrs. Bruce watched with an envious eye and a sickening longing of heart, the gradual illumination of the mansion across the way.

To-night, the eve of New Year's, Mrs. Craft gave a reception.

Hours passed. Carriage after carriage rolled over the pure white carpet; fur enwrapped forms alighted, and as the ponderous doors swung upon their silver hinges, Mrs. Bruce caught what to her seemed occasional glimpses of Paradise.

Eleven o'clock from a neighboring steeple!

"Mary," it was Uncle Si's voice, "Mary, I'm waiting for Jamie to come down and bid me good-night."

"Jamie!" indifferently, "why I thought he was down stairs with you. He has crept to bed most likely. Don't trouble yourself, Uncle Si."

Nevertheless Uncle Si did trouble himself, but no childish voice replied to his tender call, no golden-ringed head lay upon its pillow.

"Out in the storm," cried the old man after a fruitless search; "think of it, Mary, our little Jamie out in the pitiless storm."

Mrs. Bruce shuddered as she looked out upon the snow-shrouded streets. What now to her were the brilliant lights, the swelling music, the fashionable throng across the way! Her mother's heart so long dormant, in this hour of trial awoke to life again. Nothing so precious, nothing in all the world as that little form wandering at this hour about the snow-clad streets; that golden head whitened by the fast falling flakes; those sad eyes, heavy with childish despair.

"'I love you, Uncle Si, won't you—won't you please love me?'"

She realized now what that starved little heart had suffered; felt all the sorrow contained in that plea.

"Help me to find him," she entreated, "help me, Uncle Si—for—for John's sake."

"At last!" murmured the old man, reading in this self-renunciation a blessed hope. "At last!"

Through the town and outlying country, Uncle Si—the emergency seeming to straighten the bent form, to lend new vigor to the shaking limbs,—led the search for the lost child, while the conscience-stricken mother upon her knees by the window, marked not the tripping of feet across the way, the crunch of returning carriage wheels, the noisy departures, the welcome silence.

Wan and pale broke the morning. Snow still fell, steadily, relentlessly, she thought, if that bright head 'neath some shapeless drift this day lay buried.

Upon the quiet street at length came hurrying footsteps, the sound of hushed voices as though—oh, she could not think of it, she would not! Cowering there she knew of a burden being carried into the room below, heard the sound of retreating footsteps, and then—yes, a childish voice, the sound of a strong man weeping, a half inarticulate prayer.

"John!"

Gone were the blue glasses, gone the stoop, the simulated age, the rheumatism. Uncle Si had played his part, and though no richer than when he went away, it was with a glad heart Mrs. Bruce now clung to her husband.

"And my Jamie," said she, after a moment's silence, "where has my little boy been wandering this dreadful night?"

"In the country, mamma," gravely replied the child.

"In the country?" wonderingly.

"Yes, I was—I was lookin' for a lamb, mamma, a wounded, dyin' lamb."

An expression upon the husband's face rendered the mother's lips dumb.

"I thought—I thought," hesitatingly, his eyelids heavy with sleep, "that, if you could hear it cry and see it bleed you'd—you'd be good, and love me and Uncle Si, and not send the poor, old man away."

A long silence was broken only by the repentant woman's sobs.

"Don't cry," drowsily, "don't cry, mamma, 'cause—'cause, you know Uncle Si—papa—says, the Lamb that was slain lives again, and so, and so—" lower and lower drooped the shining head, a smile, a sigh of sweet content, and innocent Jamie was in the land of dreams.

NEW TIMES AND NEW MANNERS.

BY ELIZABETH CUMINGS.

When I was a child, I used often to be told with homely but epigrammatic terseness, that I could not have my cake and also eat it. Now when each new day seems to open a new opportunity to women, and the world asks more and more of the sex, I am moved over and over to rise in my place and hold forth upon the old saying above quoted.

Every woman who has special work of any sort to do finds the hardest part of her day is spent in a struggle with the webs of hindrances woven about her by old conditions. If she is a dressmaker, or milliner, she will find her customers do not as a rule keep their engagements to the letter, and after having her time and patience frittered into fringe, she too, will break her promises, and join the great army of dressmakers and milliners who have the name of "never keeping their word."

The woman teacher has the advantage of working within set limits, but even she has no such privileges of retiring from social obligations, as do men. "What, not see me? Not come to my tea-party, or dinner?" cries her chance acquaintance with a spare half hour, or a place to fill at table, and straightway is offended. As for women who from the nature of their work, often labor at home, as authors, artists, and teachers of music, their afflictions are legion from their sisters who yet look upon special work by women as something insuring pocket money without asking a male relative, but as in no way cutting off abundant leisure for waiting and visiting. The woman whose activities have always been confined to her home, knows absolutely nothing about the tyranny of order under which work done outside must go on. The article or story, the sketch or drawing, bonnet or gown must be ready at a certain time, the concert or lesson must be given at a fixed date, whether the heart is worried, or the head aches. If from necessity or choice, one becomes a tiny part of the world's machine, one must keep up, or drop out altogether, there is no middle way. But for this woman who fights the wolf, or who chooses to enter a profession or trade as a life work, society has absolutely no consideration, and small charity. If her domestic says, "Not at home," to save her time she is called insincere, and if she sends word that she must be excused, she is not excused. Far from it! The visitor resolves "to wait one while" afore coming again. Yet this woman worker craves good fellowship far more than the woman of leisure.

The time has come when we as women must treat the woman who works with at least as much consideration as we accord to men. That an appointment with a dentist must be kept, goes without saying, but his time is no more his little all and possession than is the time of the dressmaker whom we too often disappoint. We ask no excuse from the butcher or baker, the physician or lawyer, when he rises abruptly and says, "I must go," or when he declines an invitation. The only man to whom we show small indulgence is the clergyman, but even he can escape to his work by retiring "to his study," and we are neither angry nor hurt. There is a finer charity than that dispensed at the kitchen door, the exquisite charity of consideration. It is simply a lack of comprehension on the part of the women who work at home-keeping, spending and saving money, instead of going forth to earn money, that causes the present hardship.

The women who must earn money or starve increase in number in every year. Opportunities multiply every year, but women as a class do not yet recognize the fact that the successful performance of work means helpful conditions. We need now, not pioneers to open new doors and new paths, but comprehending sympathy at home, in our neighborhood, in our set. It must be accepted that the woman who must, or who chooses to spend herself in special work, be it trade, profession or art, is spent and if her ways are not the ways of the woman who simply keeps house, they are not to be criticised, but to be accepted as conditions vital to her work and so entitled to consideration.

DOES IT PAY TO USE TOBACCO?

BY H. L. BENNETT.

We will suppose that a person smokes two five-cent cigars per day (and being a good man does not use it on Sunday). This would amount to sixty cents per week or $31.20 per year.

For convenience in calculating say thirty dollars per year, this makes about eight cents per day the year around counting Sundays. Now should this person in the place of spending his money as indicated place thirty dollars on interest each year at six per cent payable annually.

At the end of five years he would have.....	$ 169.00
At the end of ten years he would have.....	395.29
(In many places this would buy a poor man a very nice home.)
At the end of fifteen years he would have.....	698.02
At the end of twenty years.....	1,003.203
(Enough to buy out many a good business house and pay all cash.)
At the end of thirty years.....	2,371.0
At the end of forty years.....	4,641.51
At the end of fifty years.....	8,707.61

To get a little idea of what this same amount of money would do, if spent in some other direction, we will suppose that the thirty dollars was spent for bread, six loaves for twenty-five cents; we find it would buy 720 loaves, or make one continuous loaf 720 feet long. The amount spent in five years, if it was invested in bread, would buy 4,225 loaves, or make one nearly a mile long. Think of a man smoking or chewing up a loaf of bread a mile long, and possibly at the same time his wife taking in washing to get bread for the rest of the family!

The amount spent in ten years, invested in the same way, would buy 9,881 loaves, or make one loaf almost two miles long; twenty years, 25,080, or one loaf almost five miles long; thirty years, 59,288, or make one loaf over eleven miles long; forty years, 116,040, or one loaf over twenty-two miles long; fifty years, 217,690, or one loaf over forty-one miles long.

If you are a tobacco user examine the above statements carefully, and then decide whether you would prefer to have after a term of years the amount indicated by above figures, or the small end of an old pipe with a tobacco habit securely formed.

NEVER CEASING.

BY JENNIE A. STEWART.

First a streak of white,
Then a band of brown,
Changing into darkest blue,
Where the sky comes down.

Follow with the eye—
See the white ships go
O'er the deep blue lake
While the fair winds blow.

Rippling, laughing waves
Sparkling in the sun,
Where do you find rest
When your day's work's done?

DOORS.

How many doors are there in your house? Jimmy guesses ten, Florence fifteen, Tom twenty. Tom lives in a large house. How many of these doors work perfectly? How many rub at top or bottom or side, or creak, or refuse to latch without a big bang, or won't lock easily from both sides or have lost some internal arrangement, or have rattling knobs or have lost a knob?

I thought so. I rarely examine a house without finding something wrong. Now, I want you to make it your personal business to repair every defect you can find in doors and perhaps add some extra touches. First, let me tell you what to buy or not to buy in the way of fixtures or when you build for yourselves. Get loose hinges or butts, as they call them at the stores. Then you can lift a door off. The pin-butts are more troublesome and the pins get fast and you break them, etc. The only trouble with the loose butts comes when you try to put the door on and find that you must start both hinges at the same time. Get some one to help you, until makers learn to make one pin longer than the other. I wonder they do not do it. If I had to take a door off two or three times a year, I think I should cut off half an inch of one pin.

And be not deceived by springs. When you pass through a doorway you want the door to swing back and let you move with your native ease and grace; but a spring door slaps you in the face, because the force is greatest just where it needs to be least. Hey, Dick, have I a substitute? Certainly I have; weight and pulleys. Take two screw pulleys for each door. These you see are brass three-fourth inch in diameter. They cost ten cents each, but for all except front doors you can use iron ones that cost less than half as much. Screw one into a 1x1x3 pine and fasten it by two nails in the top of the doorway, about a foot from the hinge side, and so the pulley will almost touch the door when closed. Use a large cord, so it will not run off. Fasten cord to door by a screw-eye, or, in screen doors put it through and tie a knot. Be careful to get the right spot, not a hair's-breadth higher or lower than the pulley. And be sure the pulley is exactly level. Now carry the cord to the jamb, holding it parallel to everything, and determine the place for the second pulley. This in, hang a weight to the cord and the work is done. Use a bag of sand about two inches in diameter and from six to twelve inches long, as may be needed. This will make no noise and will not injure the woodwork, and can be ornamented to suit the taste. Don't forget to oil the pulleys; and for outdoor work, soak the cord in oil. When the door is closed, the cord pulls at a right angle; when open, at an acute angle; whence we have the greatest force where we want it. And when the door is opened wide, it will stay there—which is the opposite to springs.

But you'd better have some way to fasten doors open, some wide and some part way. Come through the house, and see how I have ours fixed. This one we never want left open more than six inches, and so I have a hook of heavy wire hanging from a screw-eye in the outside of the casing, where it is out of the way, and almost out of sight, and catches into this screw-eye on the inside of the door, close by the edge. This one strikes that corner, and will open no further, and there is nothing to fasten it to. So I fasten a string to the window-casing, two feet away, and a hook to the string, with a screw-eye in the door. Yes, I might use a long wire, but I like the string better. You see I have made some sharp bends in the hook, so as to give it a little elasticity. So you must adapt each plan to its own door, but you will find a constant convenience on windy days.

What are you pointing at, Jimmy? Oh, I see. Well, we shall have to go on with doors next time, for I am not half through.

THE DIFFERENCE.

The fruit of the vine was made by God, and it is always good; the intoxicating wine is made by man, and it is bad.

The fruit of the vine is perfect and nutritious; the intoxicating wine is imperfect and very innutritious.

The fruit of the vine is the wine of God; the intoxicating wine is the wine of man.

The fruit of the vine has always been a blessing; the intoxicating wine has been, is, and will be a fearful curse.

The fruit of the vine is convertible into blood, flesh and bone; the intoxicating wine is convertible into neither.

The fruit of the vine is cheap and safe; the intoxicating wine is dear and dangerous.

The fruit of the vine is the wine which wisdom has mingled; the intoxicating wine is a man-made mixture.

The fruit of the vine is proved by analysis to be good; the intoxicating wine by the same means is proved to be not good.

The fruit of the vine never kills; the intoxicating wine does.

The fruit of the vine never creates thirst; the intoxicating wine does.

The fruit of the vine contains not one drop of alcohol; the intoxicating wine is very alcoholic.

The fruit of the vine is a blessing; the intoxicating wine is a mocker.

The fruit of the vine has never injured any church; the intoxicating wine has injured many.

The fruit of the vine is the emblem of the Saviour's shed blood; the intoxicating wine bites like a serpent, and stings like an adder.

The fruit of the vine has a history of peace and joy and gladness; the intoxicating wine has a history of woe and death and madness.—Jabez Inwards.

FARRAGUT'S CONVERSION.

When a boy once learns that there is nothing manly in imitating the vices of men, he has made a long stride in wisdom. Moreover, he may count himself among the fortunate if he learns it so early in life that the pursuit of foolish and wicked pleasure does not practically injure his future career.

Admiral Farragut told this story of his own boyhood:

"When I was ten years old," he says, "I was with my father on board a man-of-war. I had some qualities that I thought made a man of me, I could swear like an old salt, could drink as stiff a glass of grog as if I had doubled Cape Horn, and could smoke like a locomotive. I was great at cards and fond of gambling in every shape. At the close of dinner, one day, my father turned everybody out of the cabin, locked the door, and said to me:

"'David, what do you mean to be?'

"'I mean to follow the sea.'

"'Follow the sea! Yes, to be a poor, miserable, drunken sailor before the mast; be kicked and cuffed about the world, and die in some fever hospital in a foreign land. No, David; no boy ever trod the quarterdeck with such principles as you have, and such habits as you exhibit. You'll have to change your whole course of life if you ever become a man.'

"My father left me and went on deck. I was stunned by the rebuke and overwhelmed by mortification.

"A poor, miserable, drunken sailor before the mast! Be kicked and cuffed about the world, and die in some fever hospital! That is to be my fate, thought I. I'll change my life and change it at once. I will never utter another oath; I will never drink another drop of intoxicating liquor; I will never gamble. I have kept these three vows ever since. Shortly after I made them I became a Christian. That act was the turning point in my destiny."—Selected.

GOOD TIMES FOR POOR CHILDREN.

A neat little book has just been printed, telling in very exact figures just how much it costs to take poor children out in the country for a day's airing, or what it costs to take a steamer full of little ones down the bay on a holiday excursion, or how much money is necessary for a children's "tea party."

Isn't that a pretty idea—to know exactly how much money you must raise in your church or Sunday-school, if you are going to give holidays and good times to poor children? The man who wrote the book is a Mr. Pitcairn, and it is to be hoped that a great many people will buy his book as a reward for having thought of so pretty an idea.—Exchange.

RUM.

Rum is one of the poisonous liquids which send souls to their unexpected home. And before it sends you home you will suffer first in this world and then in the world to come. When rum is first taken to the body it does not harm you at once. But it will commence little by little until it will bring you to the lowest degree. First, when the drinker takes it, he thought himself all right. He don't think about the power behind the throne. Sometimes I usually think how men and women see with their own eyes that this thing can put them to destruction and then take it to their bodies. However, some take it for pleasure sake. Some because they have the money. But if I have such money as they had, I would put it for God's people and for missionaries' work. One thing I will say again, that Europeans have done Africa a great harm for their sending such poisonous liquid to our country.

DAMARIS THORNBURG.

We all agree with this little writer that it is a great wrong to undo the good missionaries' work by sending so much rum from our Christian country to Africa.

ALCOHOL.

I will not undertake to tell you what they take to make alcoholic liquors. I think you all know about it. I want to tell you the evils that it does to the body, homes and society. Alcohol has no color but it is a poison. It destroys health and if taken in too much it will kill a person, at the same time. Alcohol drinks up the water in our bodies and makes us drunk and then causes troubles in our home, makes our mothers poor and our sisters. And if your father is a drunkard he is not able to feed his children. Then it cost the society to keep them. Thus you see that alcohol spoils every thing in our lives and the safe way is, don't drink at all and you shall be free from all this troubles. CHARLOTTE B. G. READER.

The path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day.—Prov. 4:18.

THE LIGHT INCREASES.

Verily the world "do move," and

"Step by step since time began,
We see the steady gain of man."

We do not need to look back to the beginning of time to see the steady gain of the temperance cause. Nor does it need the art of the clairvoyant to discern what the future has in store for the drink business. The signs of the times are so portentous, the handwriting on the wall so distinct, that he who runs may read.

From the days of Noah down to the present enlightened age intemperance has been regarded as an evil; but until recent times it was the drunkard alone upon whom fell the odium of the liquor traffic. To-day one of the many encouraging indications of the efficacy of the temperance battering rams is the fact that public opinion is beginning to shift the blame from the drunkard to the drink-seller.

Only a few short years ago it was complained that temperance people "wasted" too much sympathy upon the drinking man. The drunkard was a person to be scorned and despised, and treated as a criminal. His misery and degradation, his physical and moral degeneration, said public opinion, "served him right." One leading western newspaper, less than a decade ago, went so far in its righteous indignation as to advocate the whipping-post for the man who was so "mean" as to get drunk; repenting, however, of the rash suggestion when it was insisted that the law be no respecter of persons, and that rich and poor, the high official as well as the humblest citizen, suffer alike the proposed penalty for the "crime" of drunkenness.

It is not very long since, in one of our large cities, a man under arrest for a misdemeanor pleaded in extenuation of his guilt that he was drunk at the time the offense was committed. "That being the case," the court replied, "it is so much the worse," and forthwith doubled the amount of the fine. This action of the judge was highly commended at the time by both temperance and anti-temperance papers.

But there has come a change. The tide of public opinion has set in a strong current of sympathy toward the "victim" of strong drink. Medical science discovers that drunkenness is a disease, and confers upon it the more respectable name of "alcoholism." Pulpit and press, representatives of the public mind, allude to the erstwhile drunkard as the "dipsomaniac" and the "inebriate." He is classed with the insane and the feeble-minded, is viewed as a proper subject for medical attention, instead of prison discipline, and the state is asked to provide inebriate asylums and gold cures.

It is a matter for rejoicing that the victim of the drink habit sees through the darkness a glimmering of light, held aloft by the masterful hand of science—a light which grows brighter and brighter as the world travels onward and upward, and which will one day irradiate the pathway of all reforms, social, political, religious.

And who has brought about this change in the attitude of the popular mind toward the drinking man? The temperance crank. It has been largely through the efforts of Dr. Richardson, of England, Dr. Davis, of this country, and other pioneers in the field of scientific temperance, that the name of the drunkard has been stricken from the criminal calendar and entered upon the sick list. It is due to the "impetuosity of the radicals" that public sentiment is now busily transferring the responsibility of the "necessary" evils of intemperance from the rum-drinker to the rum-seller, and that the latter is rapidly losing caste in respectable society. People are beginning to grasp the fact that there may be somebody more to blame than the man who gets drunk and abuses his wife and children; somebody "meaner" even, than the Chicago man who, crazed with drink, murdered his baby and then used its dead body as a weapon to beat into insensibility the sick and helpless wife and mother.

But the man who stands behind the bar, culpable as he is, must not in justice bear all the stigma of the liquor curse. Let not any intelligent man or woman attempt to place the whole responsibility upon either the drink buyer or the drink seller. Comparisons are odious, and we do not propose here to apply the superlative of the adjective by which the whipping-post advocate designated the drunkard. Every thoughtful mind cannot fail to do that for itself.

The radicals—may their tribe increase—have already transferred the proper proportion of the burden of blame from the saloon to the power behind the saloon. Whenever public opinion—that lever for moving the world—shall set in the same direction (as it is bound to do before long), the key to the solution of the liquor problem will be found.

As aggressive and progressive Prohibitionists let us not hesitate to place the guilt where it justly belongs, for only by so doing is it possible to strike at the root of the liquor evil.

HAVE WE REACHED THE LIMIT?

Whoever will consider the length of time we have been reckoning ourselves, "in round numbers," as two hundred thousand strong, will see the pertinence of this query. It is true that, within that period, there have been various losses through death, disruption, disaffection, or whatever else may have conspired to decimate our ranks. But it is also true that each year at annual convention, several of the states, if not the large majority, report large gains in actual membership; and yet we seem to find it impossible to rise above that two hundred thousand high water-mark. There are, doubtless, various causes contributing to this; one being that the membership of the W. C. T. U. has never been accurately reported; we doubt if it ever can be. In each one of the states some of the unions fail to send in their annual dues in time to have the per cent forwarded to the National before the treasurer's book must close. This delinquent sum, though reported upon the next year's books, does not count in the estimate of membership. Therefore the responsibility must go back to the local union, and, back of the local union, to the delinquent member, whose failure to pay her dues properly is telling in the annals of the state, the nation and the world.

But aside from this unassailable proposition that the reported membership of our organization would be vastly increased if only each member paid with sufficient promptitude, can it be that we represent a picked army like the one Gideon took against the Midianites, and that we need never hope to increase the number of those who shall rightly meet the requisition of membership? We cannot believe that this is so; we believe, rather, that the fault lies in the fact that we are coming to trust too much to general and not enough to individual methods for carrying on our work. At a county convention attended not long since, there was an hour devoted to the question, "What induced me to join the W. C. T. U.?" Ninety per cent of the reasons given were like the following: "Because Mrs. —— asked me to." "Because Mrs. —— teased me so." "Mrs. —— sent me her UNION SIGNAL." "Mrs. —— coaxed me to go to hear Miss Willard speak." "Mrs. —— coaxed me to go to a convention." Hardly an instance was given where the element of some one's else personality and earnest effort had not proved the predominating influence in the determining choice. We believe this hour could be duplicated in nearly every convention in every state. It is the old gospel method, "Philip findeth Nathaniel," and "Andrew first findeth his own brother Simon Peter." The religion of the Lord Jesus Christ was established in this earth by each man saying to his brother, "Come and see." Would it not be well for the W. C. T. U. to attempt a revival of simple gospel methods?

So firmly do we believe that the great heart of womanhood is really in touch with our work that we feel sure, in the majority of instances, the work has only to be presented to make its claims felt. "As ye go, preach." What better motto could the individual white-ribboner choose for her vacation days than this? What higher ideal could we each set before ourselves for our year's work than the winning of one new member to our ranks? We are sure that the effort has only to be systematically set about to be gloriously successful. One new member for each of our "two hundred thousand" means a coming up to Chicago in October with a grand sum total of four hundred thousand. How else could we so cheer the heart of our great chieftain? How else so broaden and strengthen our work? Who will take the pledge of "one new member a year" till God calls us higher?

KNOW THYSELF.

"The proper study of mankind is man," and the solution of all social, economic and political problems is only to be found through an intelligent, systematic and comprehensive study of human nature. The science of man is the supreme, all-inclusive science, and points the way to a satisfactory adjustment of all the perplexing questions which belong to modern civilization.

"Knowledge comes, but wisdom lingers," and the reason is, first, that knowledge of the human in its three-fold nature is not more universally recognized as the end and aim of all true education; and, second, that we have not yet learned how to apply the measure of knowledge we possess.

The recent educational congress in Chicago shows that prominent educators in our own and other lands are more than ever impressed with the importance, not only of developing the mental faculties, but also of bestowing proper care and attention upon the training of the physical and moral powers.

The hindrances we meet with in applying our knowledge of man to the interests of government and society are apparently due to the fact that we do not, as lawmakers or as social reformers, take sufficiently into consideration the reactionary influences of these three divisions of the human organism and of the power that binds them together.

We recognize the mission of the specialist, and realize that humanity owes a debt of gratitude to those whose researches and discoveries in the domain of physiological and psychical science have done so much toward the amelioration of human conditions; but we realize, also, that the most proficient specialist is the man who is first of all a thorough, all-round student.

To truly know any part of the human organism, he must know the relation that part sustains to other parts and to the whole; he must know Man, not as a machine, not even as an intellectual or a moral being, but as all three; in short, he must know man as man. The most successful doctor of medicine is he who best understands not only the mechanism of the physical structure, but also the make-up of the mental and moral nature of his patient, and the relation of each to the body. And he who would minister to a mind diseased, he who would become a true physician of the soul, must not ignore physical conditions, must not fail to consider the influences of mental and material environment.

Science and religion alike testify to the truth of the affirmation that "Reciprocity is the one comprehensive rule of life," whether that life be macrocosmic or microcosmic. The study of any one of the three sides of human nature will show that "we are fearfully and wonderfully made," but it will not reveal to us the divine image. Only by a proper adjustment of each to the other shall we be able to gain a right conception of that complex creature, man.

To know ourselves lifts us out of ourselves and discloses our relation to our kind, to the universe, and also to Him in whose likeness we are made, and in whom we live and move and have our being.

Without a right knowledge of himself the "chief end of man" cannot be attained. The measure of glory he ascribes to the Creator is necessarily proportionate to the estimate he places upon man, the highest manifestation of creative power. If he view an honest man as a "worm" he cannot consistently possess a very exalted idea of the Being whose noblest work he is.

"Wouldst know thyself? In others self discern.
Wouldst know the world? Then read thyself and learn."

The poet and the materialist are agreed upon this point, and the world has a perfect right to judge a man by his opinion of other men.

An intuitive perception of the upward tendency of human nature is universal among men, and whenever a man evinces downward tendencies he is called "inhuman" and "brutish." The aim of all human development is to "work out the beast, and let the ape and tiger die"; and the true philanthropist, the true statesman, is he who falls into line with the evolutionary forces, and sets his being toward that "divine event to which the whole creation moves."

The better we understand ourselves, the wiser and more righteous will be our conception of duty toward our neighbor; hence the study of man is especially important for those to whom are entrusted the making of laws and the administration of government. It is clearly the duty of government to bring about such conditions as shall best conduce to the destruction of the brutish elements in man, and give the human a chance; in other words, "to make it as easy as possible to do right and as difficult as possible to do wrong." It is the province of our statesmen to discover and put into operation the most effective methods for working out the beast. They should be as vigilant in the slaughter of the ape and tiger in man as our physicians are in the destruction of the microbe and bacillus. If we took as vigorous precautions against the development of the germs of moral disease as against cholera or typhus, we should soon have no "criminal population." Whether the case be one of crime or of cholera, prevention is better than cure, and to form than to reform.

The individual is a type of the whole, and it is through a study of the individual that we must learn the needs of society, of the nation, of the race. In man himself, as God's image, we shall find the pattern of a social structure, solid and symmetrical. Wrapped up in the human organism we shall find the plan for a system of government, perfect because divinely appointed.

The injunction to "Know Thyself," involves vastly more than the old Greek philosophers dreamed of—more even than nineteenth century scientists and teachers are prepared to admit.

THE GOSPEL OF SUNSHINE.

We all love the sunshine, and it is no wonder that in the far-off days of yore men did worship the sun. Think yourselves back into a world where there was no fire, no adequate shelter from the cold, and then, in that ignorant state of the human mind, imagine, at each new sunrise, a wonder birth out of the dark and cold, rising triumphant over the earth, and bringing warmth and life. When they saw how he was the giver of food on the earth and waters, when they saw, year after year, that all their life depended on the favor of the sun, is it any wonder that they gave him worship?

The sun is the source of all the light; yet how little we think of it. You doubtless remember Byron's picture of a sunless world; how dreadful it was. Picture to yourselves a world without sunshine, and then understand how the early men did worship to it. The sun gives us all our warmth, as well as light. We sit by our open grate and bask in sunshine which was stored up in the earth ages ago. Gas and electricity are only transformed sunshine. Light, warmth, life—all the life of the world, from grass blade to man—has its physical basis only in the light of the sun. And then the sun is the one great artist. Painters try to copy a sunset; they try to reproduce the beauty of this commonplace single ray of light, and they never can. The sunshine then, is it not the source of all the life of the world? And we shall find the spiritual counterpart of these great truths.

But the sunshine produces directly opposite results on different soils; too much sun on the sand is evil, and produces harm, while on more rich soils it produces good. One person becomes filled with doubts and rebellion by passing through a certain experience; another soul passes through the same trial, and comes out softened and filled with faith and charity. The different conditions of the heart have made the difference.

The sunshine makes the shadow, controls and uses it, and all these things, for the sake of shaping and fructifying the earth; and so we believe it is the sunshine of God's unchanging love that creates all that we call sorrow and heartache and death; God's love that shapes and ministers through all these.

If we attempt to conquer evil by good, we are playing the part of the sunshine that wipes out the darkness by a touch of light. The world is learning that sunshine is better than sorrow; that sunshine and comprehension are a mightier power than force.

A WISE PHYSICIAN.

A leading London physician recently related the following experience. He said: "I was in my office one day some years ago when a man entered who was written from head to foot with the record of his ruined life. That he was a drunkard was proved by his looks, his breath, his halting step and his open confession. He told me that he had tried many methods of improvement but all had failed, and he came to see me as a last resource. I was obliged to leave a few minutes after his arrival to meet an important engagement. His case seemed so utterly hopeless that I felt all the usual remedies would prove abortive, and simply left him with the words, 'You can let liquor alone if you like. I do. I never drink.' About a year later a man came to my office upright, reputable looking in face, figure and attire; he described the ragamuffin of whom I have just spoken, and asked if I remembered such a visitor, which I was enabled to do because I never in the course of my practice had a specimen of humanity so wretched and woebegone enter my door. The man then took from his pocket a photograph and handed it to me and said, 'Do you recognize the person I have described?' I said, 'I think it is this very man here in the photograph.' "Yes,' replied my visitor, 'and I am he.' This taxed my credulity to the utmost, but he went on to say that when I left him he walked along the street murmuring to himself, 'That doctor does without liquor; he says I can let it alone if I like, and he ought to know.' This was a gleam of hope, and he decided he would pass the next public house, a thing he had not done in years. He went by saying to himself, 'I can let it alone if I like.' In this way he went on passing many houses until he became quite sober, and succeeded in getting a little job of work; he took sixpence of the shilling he earned in this way and had his photograph taken by a traveling photographer. From that day he went on, not from bad to worse, but from good to better. A voice kept saying to him, 'You can let it alone if you like, the doctor does.' And he was now a sober, industrious, and successful man of business. 'I do not know,' said the doctor, with a smile, closing his story, 'that anything in my life has ever given me more genuine satisfaction than this incident.'" The World's W. C. T. U. women would like to say to every physician on the globe, "Go thou and do likewise."

London is soon to have its first municipal lodging house, a building arranged in three blocks, each block capable of housing one hundred and eight men. There is a large day or recreation room, well stocked with papers, and a library of a thousand volumes. In this room will be a temporary platform for lectures. There is a large dining-hall, and abundant accommodation for cooking in the adjoining kitchen. Each inmate is to be allowed the use of cooking utensils if required. There is an excellent laundry, a large drying-closet, a special room for ironing, and another for a linen store. Any man can do any washing for himself if he chooses. A shop is to be fitted out for the sale of provisions at the ordinary trade prices. There is abundant provision for washing. Seventy-two basins are supplied with hot and cold water, and two shower baths. Each lodger can have the use of a small chest, with a lock, by depositing sixpence for the key, the amount to be returned when the key is given up. There is a good covered-in space for a work-shop, where lodgers can complete any little jobs they have in hand. The whole outfit cost somewhat over eighty thousand dollars, and the London County Council is the landlord, who, by giving a good dwelling at a fair rent, will tend to drive out of the market the bad landlord, who offers a bad dwelling at an exorbitant rent. The charge for a bed is ten cents, as it is essential there should be a net return of three per cent on the outlay, this after taking into account ground rent, rates and taxes and all working expenses. The County Council hopes soon to erect a lodging house for women. This is a step in the right direction, and a prophecy of what will be universal—at least we think so.

Dr. Harry Guinness, grandson of the great liberator, and son of the famous missionary, holds social purity meetings in London for men only. At one recently convened twelve men fainted on hearing the terrible recitals that he gave of his work among depraved women; two hundred rose for prayers, and when he opened the inquiry room, they flocked in until not another could enter. Alas that we have not more young men of purity and power who will lift aloud their voices against the curse of their class and country. Heaven bless Harry Guinness! Miss Lucy Guinness, sister of the young doctor, is one of the most gifted speakers on the platform. She has been speaking in England to large audiences which were deeply moved by her account of the present status of the opium traffic and habit in China; she said that if the opium that is smoked were swallowed instead it would depopulate the world twelve times over every year, and all this opium is sent by the English nation to the heathen who compose one-fourth of the population the world over.

Faith in God is reason acting reasonably.

An English Bishop has devised a scheme in which he proposes that the local liquor traffic should be vested in a local company whose shareholders should receive not more than five per cent on the capital invested, and that such company should be constituted to limit the traffic and minimize its evils, and that any profits over five per cent should not be used to diminish the taxes, but applied to philanthropic purposes. The vagaries of the present time in which belated reformers are doing their best to help on the cause form a most interesting study.

Hardly credible is a story that comes to me of a petition formally drawn up, signed and presented to a license court in Philadelphia this spring, pleading for a saloon in the vicinity of the petitioners, since those who drank were compelled to cross the railroad tracks to reach the nearest liquor-seller, and thus were in great danger to life and limb! But the most surprising part of the story is that out of twenty-five petitioners, eighteen were women! "We feel sure," reads this strange document, "our men folks would keep better hours at night, drink less and work steadier if they did not have to go so far away from their homes for liquor of any description." Perhaps the harassed "wives, sisters and daughters" are of those who, thinking the saloon has come to stay, try, according to their light, to make the best of a bad bargain. However that may be, I trust that the great on-going wave of temperance sentiment may reach their doors and that when next they petition our law-makers it will be for the removal and not for the proximity of so dangerous a neighbor as the saloon.

A suggestion comes to us from over the seas that I doubt not will be gladly acted upon by wide awake temperance program committees. The last half of the page of the program folder is in the shape of an easily detached coupon on which is printed an "Appeal to those who are not pledged abstainers." This appeal is simple and brief and three lines are left blank below it for the name and address of the signer who thus testifies to his or her willingness to sign a pledge. The coupons may then be gathered up, dropped into receptacles placed about the room or otherwise cared for as ingenuity may recommend. The thought behind it is—make it as easy as possible by any and all means, for people to take the first decisive steps for the right.

A striking testimony of the power of Christ to save was given by a recent convert to Christianity in a paper read at a meeting of a religious association at Dacca, India, recently. This paper is now published under the title of "My Sin and my Saviour." That the writer has an experimental knowledge of what he tells, the following extract will show: "While engaged in writing this paper I was thinking over what sin and faith are, and a thought flashed across my mind and threw a flood of light on the subject. Sin, I thought, is the combination of Satan and 'I,' while faith is the combination of the Father and 'I.' I must tell you how the thought came to my mind. In English there are two ways of abbreviating words; one is putting the first and last letters, as Rs. for 'Rupees,' and the other by putting a few letters from the beginning of the word, as Marq. for 'Marquis.' According to this rule, Sn. is an abbreviation for 'Satan,' and when 'I' is joined to it, it becomes sin—s-i-n. And again, on the other hand, Fath. is an abbreviation of 'Father,' and when 'I' is joined with it, it becomes faith—f-a-i-t-h. In both the cases 'I' is exactly in the middle, showing 'I' seized by Satan is sin, and 'I' yielded to the Father is faith."

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

RHODE ISLAND.

AMONG THE WORKERS.

The Rhode Island W. C. T. U. still press toward the mark of their high calling, and realize more fully each day how much higher and nobler is this calling of God in Christ than any which the world can give. One of our friends was kind enough to say: "If the people outside should hear the last quarterly report of our faithful state secretary, they would open their eyes very wide at the amount of work which is being accomplished by our union."

A new enterprise is the "Elisha Dyer Vinton Home," for newsboys and bootblacks. This came unendowed into possession of the Providence union and they have bravely taken up the work "In His Name." For a long time they had been looking for a place that would be suitable for a coffee house and mission room but could not find the right building. They were providentially hindered, as we believe, until the above house was found already furnished.

It is a large brick building favorably situated for the work. It contains a pleasant reading-room with desk, tables, well-filled book-case, magazines, games, etc. Back of this is a coffee-room and above stairs are two dormitories containing twenty cots furnished with springs and comfortable mattresses. Lodging can be obtained for five cents a night, breakfast for five cents more and dinner and supper at ten cents each. There are bathrooms and set bowls in the basement, and the whole building is heated by steam. There is also a large and pleasant room which serves as headquarters for the union. Here gospel meetings are held each Sunday and Wednesday evenings. One of our most earnest workers, with her husband, has charge of the building and makes it her home.

The Y. W. C. T. U. of Providence, has, in addition to its work in the city, maintained during the past five summers a home at Buttonwoods, known as Rest Cottage, which has each season been more than comfortably filled with appreciative boarders, who, if it had not been for this place, would have been obliged to forego such an outing. Neither of the two houses occupied successively at Buttonwoods was nearly large enough to accommodate the number of applicants. For the past three years the society has been investigating the shores of Narragansett Bay, with a view of erecting a commodious and permanent home of its own, and Saunderstown was the place selected. A small summer colony is there, and the advantages for a home of this sort seemed excellent. The house, which is handsome and well built, is two and a half stories high, and will accommodate easily about thirty guests. One friend has contributed enough money to more than furnish a room, which is to be called after a beloved sister who has passed away. What remains after furnishing is to be the nucleus of a fund, which it is the hope of the society will be added to, and thus continue large enough to maintain this as a free room. It will be reserved for those who have especial need of such assistance. It is hoped that the practical sympathy of their friends will enable these earnest young workers to furnish the house, and thus make it ready for occupancy as soon as possible.

The Y's held a state conference at the "Beacon," Newport, which was full of inspiration and practical suggestions. They were obliged to adjourn to a large church in the evening to accommodate those who came to hear Mrs. J. K. Barney. A delightful meeting held at Kingston of delegates from Washington county proves that a "rainy day may be full of sunshine, if you spend it at a W. C. T. U. convention."

Mrs. J. H. Pay, our efficient and enthusiastic superintendent of L. T. L. work, says: "Individually, we feel that we are doing very little, but when we look over a past report to find eleven L. T. L's, giving as a total membership, six hundred, while with fourteen juvenile societies, we now have a membership of two thousand, we feel we have reason for thanking God and taking new courage."

The Rescue Mission at Pawtucket reports as the work of one month: Thirty-four men and women have been converted; seven have taken the pledge; clothing has been provided for thirty-two men, women and children; shoes have been furnished to eighteen, and four men and five women were given lodgings, supper and breakfast.

City Hall Square, Providence, at four o'clock on Sundays has been a very attractive place to a large crowd. A great chorus of voices led by a cornet open the service, and short prayers and gospel messages fill the hour. The meeting closes promptly and many are the hearts where good seed is sown to bear fruit in days to come. Mr. Joel Bassett, who carries on these meetings and has been an active and successful gospel temperance worker for several years, is a staunch friend of and co-worker with our W. C. T. U. and owes his conversion to its efforts in his behalf.

HERE AND THERE AMONG THE UNIONS.

Wakefield is the banner union for prosecuting rum-sellers. They grow brave in the efforts, too.

Usquepaug leads in praise service and public meetings.

Westerly is ahead in mission work.

White Rock has the greatest number of honorary members who wear the W. C. T. U. pins.

Richmond and Hopkinton are the banner unions for parlor and open air meetings.

Ashton union holds gospel temperance meetings each month addressed by our state secretary.

Burrilville and other places have worked bravely for no-license.

Central Falls has given two lawn parties and had several parlor meetings. Many poor and sick are cared for.

Cumberland has had a "Temple social."

Middletown has had seven Demorest medal contests. and the Prohibition vote has largely increased.

Newport hold services with the prisoners each Sabbath.

North Scituate had a grand mass-meeting and clambake on the Fourth of July.

Perryville finds that its meetings are made more interesting and instructive by having each member bring a question to be answered at the next meeting.

Phenix will open a coffee house soon.

Providence Y's have secured an ice-water fountain which will occupy a central position.

Flower mission day was more generally observed than ever before.

STATE AND COUNTY CONVENTIONS.

This spring conventions have followed each other in rapid succession, to the number of five county conventions, and our annual state convention, which was changed from fall to spring by vote last October.

First came the fourth annual Orange county convention held at Anaheim, in the First Presbyterian church. This county numbers eleven unions including the two Y's recently organized. The Anaheim union, organized by Mrs. Bullock, meant a decided step forward for temperance, for it has been impossible all these years to get any foothold there because not even a few women could be found sufficiently interested to show their colors. The reports of the county showed that the women had the various threads of their work well in hand, and the local unions are fully alive. The president's address—there was just enough of it, and of such a quality as to make us all wish there had been more. There were papers on Sabbath observance, by Miss N. Aubert, social purity, by Mrs. Mary Hill, narcotics, Miss Mattie McCoy, young woman's work, Miss Cora Mills, "Nationalization of the Liquor Traffic," by Mrs. S. D. Blackman, "Woman's Work," by Mrs. Powers, all of them good.

Memorial services were held for Mary Allen West, Jennie Casseday, and the local workers who had, during the past year, gone out to the happy home beyond. The county superintendent of literature, Miss Luella Kuffel, had a table with well assorted literature which was well patronized by the delegates, showing that the women of Orange county are not trying to make bricks without straw.

The next week came the Los Angeles county convention held at Pomona. The reception committee, strong in numbers, welcomed us cordially as we stepped from the train, and escorted us at once to the Methodist church, where the convention was held. The decorations were very elaborate, flags, banners, mottoes, palms and flowers in great profusion. Mrs. Cash, county president, called the convention to order. The county corresponding secretary being absent, Mrs. Cash allowed each local president a few minutes in which to report work done. This was one of the most interesting features of the program. The presidents were not only brimful but overflowing with good things to be told, and they had to talk very fast to tell all they knew before the gavel clicked. If I had time just to rehearse these lively reports, you would get a better picture of our work and workers than I could give you in any other way.

Mrs. Leavitt addressed the people both evenings, once by special request. No one hears Mrs. Leavitt once who is not anxious to hear her again. Ten years ago before she sailed from the Golden Gate, she organized Southern California state W. C. T. U. as well as several local unions. While with us this spring she spoke thirty-six times and I am sure it is the judgment of all who heard her, that she is a woman, not only with a message to give to the people, but one who is able give it in a wonderfully impressive way.

Mrs. Blair, National chalk talker, was present at the convention, and with her crayon told temperance truths to the children. An autograph quilt devised by the county treasurer, Miss Eva Keese, to replenish the treasury was exhibited. A block was worked in etching stitch by each union and its quota of names at ten cents a name had been written upon the blocks. In the center loomed up the Temperance Temple, perfect in outline. There were twelve hundred and thirty names upon the quilt which netted one hundred and twenty-three dollars to the treasury. The convention voted to present the quilt to Miss Keese as a token of appreciation.

The entire business of the San Bernardino county convention was crowded into one day spent at Redlands in the Congregational church. Most of the unions were well represented, and reports showed a year of real practical work. More money had been raised for various objects than any previous year. A very interesting paper on parlor work was given by Mrs. Hewitt, county superintendent of that department. Much to be regretted was the pressure of business which prevented the hour of consecration but not the noon-tide prayer. Resolutions of sympathy were passed, with the county superintendent of scientific temperance instruction, Mrs. M. H. B. Goodcell, in the loss of her sister, Captain Ida Bennett, who was shot in the Salvation Army barracks at Spokane, while on duty. The election of officers showed a change in president, Mrs. J. Williamson, of Rialto, being elected.

This was followed by San Diego convention, which was held at San Jacinto. The first evening was given to a reception instead of the customary welcome and response. A finely written paper on "Character Building," by Mrs. Thompson, of San Jacinto, and short talks on "Our Work and its Methods," formed the program. Mrs. Blair chalk-talked to the children the second evening, and the Y's gave a pleasant program the third one.

Our state convention was held at Los Angeles, in the Temperance Temple, May 23 to 26. It celebrated our tenth anniversary and the raising of our Temple debt, and was the largest convention we have ever held, the number of delegates being one hundred and forty-five. The tasteful decorations were largely the work of Mrs. Darn, of East Los Angeles.

The corresponding secretary's report gave an increase in number of unions from ninety-one to one hundred and five, a membership of 1,735 active, and 329 honorary, and thirty-two L. T. L's with a membership of 884. Mrs. Button, state president, gave a grand address. Her review of the work, the outlook for the future, the clear ring of her words on the ballot for women, her suggestion for the coming year could not but stir up an enthusiastic response in the hearts of all who heard her.

The devotional hour from eleven to twelve each day brought to each heart a refreshing shower and helped us the better to return to the business of the day. The reports of the eight county presidents showed progress in organization, increase in members and an active department work. Our new county, Riverside, was represented by several delegates, and its first president, Mrs. E. J. Davis, told in enthusiastic words of their petition for a prohibitory ordinance, and since convention it has, with a vote of four to one, won. Hurrah for Riverside county! It is just as prompt to protect its boys from the saloon pest, as its orange trees from the pests that assail them.

San Diego county won the banner for the best reported work in scientific temperance instruction. Mrs. Emily V. Wright, state superintendent of this department, promised the banner and the state president presented it in a very appropriate little speech. The Y's had the first evening: Three minute speeches from the Y presidents of local unions, a paper on "What shall we do to interest the honorary members?" by Miss Willey, of the Los Angeles Y's, a dialogue called "Coöperative Housekeeping" with excellent music under the direction of Hugh E. Smith. These filled the evening brimful.

The second evening there was a platform meeting of women only, with short speeches of pathos, humor and common sense, that we all enjoyed. The speakers were Mrs. Hunt, president of Orange county; Mrs. Blackman, of Orange; Mrs. Tongiers, of Spring Valley union, and Mrs. Charity Way, of El Modena. The last evening Rev. Geo. White, presiding elder, gave a fine address. The reports of superintendents were supplemented with discussions, in which all the delegates freely participated. Mrs. Dunlap, secretary pro tem of the Temperance Temple Board of Trustees, interested all in her graphic report of the raising of the Temple debt. She said that in neither the secretary's nor the treasurer's books could be found what no one would fully know until the great register above was opened—the months of patient effort, the self-sacrifice and the sublime faith that sustained the faithful workers in the dark days.

Major and Mrs. Scott, who have been doing excellent service in Southern California, were there, Mrs. Blair, National chalk talker, Mr. Glass, chairman of the state prohibition party, all of whom were introduced and said a few encouraging words.

THREE CONVENTIONS AND OTHER HAPPENINGS.

We began our county conventions in Georgetown, Sussex county. The Kent county workers held their meeting in Felton, and the New Castle county W. C. T. U. convened a week later in Townsend. The first and last named meetings were held in the M. E. churches of the towns, the Felton ladies introducing the novel plan of holding the business sessions in a hall—a large, homelike room, owned by the grangers.

Our state president, Miss Margaret S. Hilles, presided at the first session of the Sussex convention, the state treasurer, Mrs. Hattie M. Phelps presiding at the closing session. Miss Hilles also guided the proceedings of her own county (New Castle) meeting and visited the Kent conference, giving us sweet counsel in a little experience meeting, preceding one of Mrs. R. H. Matlack's best Bible expositions, and many practical suggestions on different lines of work.

It has been my observation that some of the best thoughts are sometimes given in the address of welcome, and the response, and it was preëminently so at this trio of meetings.

Notable among the reports of unions was the success of the temperance house at Hockessin, which has proved that a bar is not a pecuniary necessity. One union in a small locality, Delaware city, in the absence of work adapted to other communities, cheer the sick by their visits, thus teaching by example that the white ribbon means the service which presents itself for the Master.

The Wilmington W and Y in their résumé of the year seemed to have gone "on and on," in entering doors of usefulness. Like a chapter of an interesting story was the corresponding secretary, Mrs. A. H. Berlin's, account of the tea given at their rooms on their anniversary. Prettily decorated tables from which coffee, chocolate and cake were daintily served to the large number of guests by the young ladies. The rooms, adorned with flowers and filled with the melody made by a fine orchestra, and the friendly greetings made it a delightful occasion. Last, but not least in interest, was the closing part, when the freewill offering box which had been placed on a table in the hall was opened, and two hundred and thirty dollars were found. Among the amount a surprising fifty dollar bill gave rise to the question, "Who could have given so much?" Afterwards it was found that one of the ladies who helped count the money, whose generous support makes the free kindergarten of Wilmington possible, was the donor, and that she had given the birthday gift received a short time before from her husband.

Appreciating the advantages to be derived from the cultivation of social life in the work, the Camden W and Y, the Hockessin, Newport and Wilton Y's reported pleasant parlor meetings with a gain of members and money in their treasury.

A friend told this little incident which demonstrates the generous spirit of the Newport Y. Miss Parrish, being on a visit to the town, was asked by one of the young ladies: "Is there not something else to give money to?" Several needs outside of their borders had already received generous aid from the union.

In the social line the Smyrna union gave an afternoon tea at the home of one of our members in honor of our much beloved helper, Mrs. Matlack, whose change of residence to Wilmington since then has been a matter of extreme regret.

Two items impressed me among the reports (though there are others space will not permit me to give). One from the Hilles union, a short distance from Wilmington—the distribution of two thousand copies of the temperance leaflets, and the other from the Newark union—that the pastor of the Presbyterian church now and then came to their business meetings. A member of the union spoke of the application for a license to open a saloon opposite Delaware College, and appealed to the convention for coöperation in remonstrating against it. I am glad to say that the work was done, and resulted in the refusal of the license by the court of New Castle county. A discussion of department work led by the new president, Mrs. Cranston, was an interesting feature of the New Castle convention.

At Felton juvenile work was made prominent by a most excellent address upon its need and hopefulness, by Mrs. Eva Riggs, superintendent of one of the Smyrna Loyal Temperance Legions. There, too, we had an earnest paper on the condition of our jails, with a sketch of dear Miss Casseday, by Mrs. N. B. Smithers, and a good paper on Y work, sent by Miss Jennie McIntosh, of Camden, not forgetting the true and thoughtful words given in the annual address of the retiring president, Mrs. Kate E. Smithers.

A paper on social purity was read before each convocation, from the pen of Mrs. Lafayette Marks, who, as state superintendent, has done valiant work for its promotion. Interested audiences attended the three public meetings, good music being rendered for their entertainment by the L. T. L., the Y's, the choirs of the churches, and others. The address was made by Mrs. Mary Haslup, of Maryland, who also assisted in the business sessions of the counties, giving practical hints and Bible expositions at each of them. Besides Mrs. Haslup's work at the annual meetings during her itinerary of two weeks in the state, she spoke in twelve communities, with the gratifying results altogether of an addition of thirty-two members, both active and honorary.

A visitor to one of the conventions, the Rev. Mr. Hynson, of Smyrna, expressed much faith in the ability of our organization to bring about the reign of temperance upon the earth and made us feel quite responsible for the dawning of this much desired day. Good officers for the respective counties were elected for the coming year.

Since our county gatherings we have had several happenings here in Smyrna. A very pretty entertainment, "The Courtship of Mother Goose," given by the Loyal Temperance Legion composed of the younger children; a fine lecture by Col. Geo. W. Bain; and a Demorest medal contest by eight members of the L. T. L., No. 1. The medal was awarded Miss Maggie Robinson, and copies of Tennyson given those who cannot again engage in the contest. The entire eight acquitted themselves nobly and we were thankful that so much temperance sentiment was heard by an unusually large audience.

Two other events worthy of mention are Moody and Sankey's meetings in Wilmington about the time of my last letter to you, and the state Sunday-school convention held here, before which Rev. Alfred E. Smith, presiding elder of Easton district, made a strong temperance address.

Our legislature adjourned the second week of May, and near the time of adjournment passed the bill incorporating an industrial school for girls in Wilmington, with an annual appropriation of one thousand dollars for its support. The bill was indorsed by the W. and Y, the home missionary societies of the Presbyterian and Methodist churches, and the New Century Club of the city.

Mrs. J. K. Barney, who has a warm place in the hearts of Delaware women, gave Bible readings in Grace M. E. and Hanover Presbyterian churches, and made a plea for the industrial school and another police matron for Wilmington before the New Century Club. She spoke, too, in Newark, and in company with ladies from the city and several towns visited Dover and pleaded before the legislature in her inimitable manner for the incorporation of the school, remaining over night to speak also in the M. E. church. The school is now established and a number of active workers of the W and Y throughout the state are members of the board of managers.

An additional police matron has been secured for the city and we have thus made in these two instances quite a humanitarian advance. The W. C. T. U. bill forbidding the sale of cigarettes to boys under seventeen became a law. A bill full of evil consequences allowing liquor to be sold from a pint to a quart, and taken from the premises, I am pained to say, has become our new license law. In commenting upon the reports of the superior court in Wilmington a couple of weeks ago, one of the city dailies notes the refusal of a large number of applications for license. To me the refusal is encouraging to the extent that it indicates some growth in the sentiment against an increase of saloons, which will eventually become sufficient to prohibit the traffic, for "Since God is God the right is sure to win."

KANSAS NEWS.

The heated term is again upon us, yet the W. C. T. U. has hardly time to fan itself, but must depend upon "stirring up a breeze," or upon the "cool treatment" of its enemies to reduce its temperature, which is seldom effectual to any great extent.

We are at present rallying our forces for active campaign work, to secure the constitutional amendment, granting full suffrage to women. Every W. C. T. U. woman should attend the annual school meeting, and urge upon all the women of her school district to attend also, that we may "show our faith by our works." All county W. C. T. U. conventions are advised to devote one session to the suffrage department, calling out a full and free discussion from not only the delegates present, but those who are not members, especially the voters, as it is upon them that the fate of the measure depends. Strive not to antagonize, but to win.

Some of the points brought out by our state superintendent of franchise work—Mrs. S. A. Thurston—are useful in this connection. She urged the use of enrollment blanks, also of blanks to secure the financial support needed to carry on the coming campaign. Develop home talent. Bury the "morality issue," that is, the "purifying of the ballot" plea, and ask for suffrage as a right and in the name of justice. Use leaflets in foreign languages to influence the foreign voters, a large per cent of whom are not now in favor of woman's enfranchisement, but whose ballots will count, and count heavily on election day. Send them leaflets through the mails; they will receive a welcome if in the native tongue. Do not urge women as candidates for office, thus allaying the suspicion that it is simply the "loaves and fishes" that we seek. The state fair has granted an hour for a suffrage meeting, and the same might be secured of many county fairs and good work done. Get indorsements at all large public meetings, especially at teachers' institutes. 'Tis true that we have over a year in which to carry on this work, but it is a work of education, "line upon line, precept upon precept."

The Ottawa Assembly was favored by the presence of Mrs. Laura Ormiston Chant, of England, who delivered several fine addresses, and delighted her hearers with her eloquence and pathos. Women came to the front, or rather they were put to the front, this year more than ever before in the history of the Assembly. Many were the remarks made that the success of the Assembly this year would be largely due to the W. C. T. U. The state W. C. T. U. has a large headquarters' tent which was cozily furnished and made a most attractive resting place. The Ottawa union was untiring in its efforts, and deserves great credit.

The W. C. T. U. was given two hours each day, one for school of methods, and one for parliamentary drill. The drill was ably conducted by our own lawyer, Mrs. Ella W. Brown, of Holton, and the school was in charge of Mrs. L. B. Smith, district president, and later by state president, Mrs. Grubb. The departments were led by state superintendents: Sunday-school work, Mrs. J. C. Reed, of Garnett; social purity, Rev. E. F. St. John, of Topeka; franchise, Mrs. S. A. Thurston, of Topeka; Sabbath observance, Mrs. S. M. Hartough, Leavenworth; press work, Mrs. S. S. Weatherby, LeRoy. "The Outlook of the W. C. T. U.," president Grubb; "Woman's Relation to the Nation," Mrs. M. L. Ward, of Ottawa; "Industrial School for Girls," Miss M. Spencer, of the Beloit Industrial School; and a symposium, "Should Women Preach the Gospel?" were also enjoyed. Miss Edith Hill, of Emporia, a graduate of the Chicago School of Oratory, was on the program, and her Bible recitations were very highly commended. The Ottawa union had charge of the devotional exercises each day. The Woman's Council also had two hours each day, discussing many questions of vital importance to the home, the W. C. T. U. being largely represented in its meetings, and as one directly followed the other it was somewhat difficult to tell the point of separation.

Kansas, that never does anything by halves, boasts of two Chautauquas. The other one being at Winfield, Cowley county, where the W. C. T. U. was given a prominent place on the program. As no report was sent I can only say that if the program published in Our Messenger was carried out, it must have been a season of pleasure and profit to all in attendance. Several of our state workers presented the work of their departments.

Many of our counties have held spring and summer schools of methods, which, judging from the reports sent me have been very helpful and beneficial. Miami county reports such a school at Louisburg, conducted by the county president, Mrs. Chalmers. The counties of Coffey and Anderson held a joint school of methods at Waverly under the supervision of Mrs. L. B. Smith, at which there were present one district and the two county presidents, two state and one district superintendent, besides many active workers as delegates. Each session was crowded full of good things. The "joint session" proved such a success in every way that I would recommend it to other counties. It broadens the outlook and we come in closer sympathy in the W. C. T. U. work by becoming better acquainted with each other personally.

From Atchison county I learn that though the storm prevented large attendance at the convention, good reports were made and Mrs. Brown lectured at night. "The Pardee union has held public meetings with fine programs of music, essays, and recitations by the children and young people about every six weeks the past year. Every temperance lesson Sunday the W. C. T. U. unites with the Sunday-schools in a Sunday-school entertainment. In March the program was varied by asking each teacher to either read an essay or make a ten minute speech, the theme being given each by the superintendent two weeks previously. It was quite interesting, and drew a large audience. On May 21 the schools united in holding temperance exercises. A sermon was preached by the Methodist minister, followed by short talks from others, with music.

"The Huron union has held several public meetings also, as have others in the county. Effingham union is doing its best work among the children and has a successful L. T. L. under the leadership of Mrs. Nora Ferguson. The superintendent of Sunday-school work has tried for two years to have all schools in the county hold temperance exercises on the quarterly temperance lesson Sunday. At first but three or four schools attempted it, the number has increased until now many have either a temperance sermon or other public exercises each quarter. It was most difficult to get Atchison started, but they have now fallen into line. She has also interested officers of the county Sunday-school association and they now put some one on the program for a paper on temperance at every county or township convention. At Cummings Sunday-school convention half the program was devoted to temperance, as it was temperance lesson day."

The following interesting letter from Marie H. Grafton speaks volumes in itself: "I travel for the Kansas Orphan Asylum, located at Leavenworth, and was in Council Grove on July 4. They had a fine old-fashioned celebration in the fair ground. Mr. J. B. McAfee, of Topeka, made a temperance speech, and nearly every song that was sung and speech and recitation referred to prohibition, even a dear old grandmother gave a talk to the Sunday-school children present about the different signs used by business men and by men selling beer. I was told at Council Grove that at the last term of court not a criminal case was on the docket, that no prisoners were in the jail except two crazy persons. As I go over the state I meet with traveling men and others who say many things derogatory to prohibition, but I'm armed with facts to refute, and although I see beer coming into towns in cases, and sometimes in kegs, it is never the 'best people' in any community that use it, and the offices of hotels are quiet, clean, and at any time ladies can sit in them and read the papers, as they would in a sitting room or parlor." Could as much be said of public houses where a license bar is maintained?

A clipping which she incloses says, "Forty-four counties in Kansas possessing poor-houses and farms were, a few months ago, without a single pauper, and in thirty-seven counties of Kansas at the last term of the district court there were no criminals for trial. If any of the free whisky states can beat this record now is the time to let them be heard from."

Mrs. J. C. Haines, president of fourth district, is devoting much time to medal contest work. Since the new year she has conducted six silver and two gold medal contests; attended one recently at Mulvane where there were nine contestants, all girls between the ages of twelve and seventeen. A large audience was present to hear the gospel truths of prohibition, and the financial receipts were over twenty dollars.

Admire, Lyon county, has a druggist who is an honorary member of the W. C. T. U., and who wears the white ribbon during business hours. Would that all Kansas druggists were honorary white-ribboners. It would largely solve the whisky question in the drugstores.

MISSISSIPPI MATTERS.

Since our state convention the unions have been circulating a petition to Governor Stone as follows:

We, the undersigned, pray that in your proclamation calling the legislature to meet in special session January, 1894, you recommend for the consideration of that body the submission to the people of a constitutional amendment prohibiting forever the licensing of the liquor traffic in Mississippi.

There are only nine "wet counties" in the state out of seventy-five, and if our women would work hard the state might be "dry" before Governor Stone receives the petition. Warren and Adams might refuse to surrender, on the plea that they would lose thousands in business, which would be transferred across the river to the saloon towns in Louisiana. We want the constitutional amendment just the same.

Under the forcible preaching of evangelist Culpepper, Jackson has had a great revival and a "Prohibition Crusade, which promises to blot out the dramshops at the capital; Jehovah be praised." "A spirited contest between the Prohibitionists and the antis, before the city council, resulted in the defeat of three saloon petitions." A purging of the registration books caused an appeal to the city attorney who gave an opinion which will be accepted as sound legal authority in future contests.

On the Gulf Coast the fight leaves Mississippi City, Handsboro, Stonewall, Beauvoir, Long Beach and Gulf Port "dry."

The Prohibitionists of Attalla county have inaugurated a local option campaign, and vote on August 25th with strong hope of success. Are the women of Attalla awake to their responsibility here?

In Franklin county Prof. L. D. Posey has been effectively lecturing on the liquor question.

Mrs. Mary Inge Hoskins has entered the field as state organizer, and although burdened with the duties of corresponding secretary and teaching, has organized unions at Schula, Sidon and Kosciusko on June 18.

Holmes county will probably join the dry list this summer.

In Jefferson county, though three saloons still exist with unexpired licenses, there is a marked change for good order and quiet in the dry towns, especially on Saturday afternoons. The once drunken negroes and old white topers return home refreshingly sober, with small packages for their families instead of curses and blows.

The Belle Kearney Y's of Fayette hold monthly parlor meetings, which are much enjoyed, and have the white ribbon adorning the coats of nearly all the young men in town. Many of the older men (including some of the county officers) touched by the Christian zeal and earnestness of these dear girls, are proud to wear our snowy symbol to encourage their noble efforts. Young women, you can win this world for God and temperance if you will. Will you?

In Brookhaven Mrs. Hobbs, the gifted wife of the editor of The Leader, has inaugurated a series of Demorest medal contests for the summer. Knowing the power of these to educate public sentiment, we predict Brookhaven will keep well in the front with temperance work.

Mississippi's need is a little financial prosperity. Being entirely an agricultural state, what with overflows and the low price of cotton, the unsettled condition of the market, her people, men and women, are so burdened with care that there is not the leisure of mind or body which will permit an aggressive work outside of home. We have the material, and if our Democratic Congress will give us tariff reform and remonetize silver, we will show you in a few years what Mississippi women can do.

IDAHO.

A NOTE FROM THE STATE PRESIDENT.

To those inquiring the reason why no word from Idaho workers has appeared in the columns of THE UNION SIGNAL for so long a time, we would say, it is because no reports have been sent to our state reporter, Mrs. Mary E. McGee, of Nampa.

Our superintendent of legislative work remained one month in Boise City during the meeting of the legislature and worked faithfully. A petition was presented asking that the "age of consent" be raised from ten to eighteen; it was raised only to fourteen. A bill securing property rights to married women passed both houses but was lost by veto. A bill was presented, asking for an amendment to the constitution providing for equal suffrage; this is to be voted on at the next general election.

The superintendent of medal contest work for Ada and Canyon counties, Mrs. S. S. Foote, arranged for a gold medal contest at Nampa. The evening being unfavorable only four contestants arrived. There was a crowded house and the four speakers received merited praise. Miss Bessie Hard secured the highest average and was presented with Miss Willard's "Glimpses of Fifty Years."

Our state organizer, Mrs. R. Mitchell, has just returned from a trip to northern Idaho. In making this journey she has traveled by railway eleven hundred and eighty-seven miles, and by stage one hundred and ninety-eight miles. She has held twenty-two public meetings, fourteen women's and nine children's meetings. She organized three new unions in northern Idaho. At Mt. Idaho, Miss Mary Reed was made president; at Grangeville, Mrs. Smith, president; at Denver, Mrs. Lucinda M. Pulse, president.

Idaho county can be reached only by a long stage ride. Our organizer thinks she was especially fortunate in finding Mrs. Eunice E. Rhoads, of Cottonwood, a woman of ability and of willing mind to take up the work of president for Idaho county. A new union was organized in Washington county, Miss Edwina Elton, president. Address, Salubria.

The work is new in all these places, and good temperance literature would, I know, be very acceptable and helpful. The district of northern Idaho held its second convention at Lewiston, June 14 to 16. Judging from the well-arranged program received we believe it must have been a success.

By a mistake, no report had been received, but the organizer assured us that the convention was interesting and profitable and that the new officers are capable and earnest women. During the meeting of this convention they sent me this telegram, "Read Numbers 6: 24-26." I thought this an answer to a letter I had sent, but found out that the letter was not received till several days after convention, although it was due several days before.

The next annual convention of Idaho W. C. T. U. will meet at Pocatello, September 22 to 25.

MRS. SARAH H. BLACK,
Pres. Idaho W. C. T. U., Nampa.

OKLAHOMA.

INTERESTING NEWS.

Midsummer finds that the white-ribboners of this territory have not been idle. In May the Southern W. C. T. U. district convened at Yukon, to hold its first convention, the president, Mrs. C. P. Walker, of Oklahoma City, presiding. The first evening the sentiment of welcome was voiced by Dr. Hendrickson in an able and enthusiastic talk that made the delegates feel at once that they were among friends and helpers. Our territorial president, Mrs. Sheplor, returned the greeting in her happiest vein.

Dr. Delos Walker, one of the foremost physicians and thinkers of Oklahoma City, entertained the audience with some stirring temperance doctrine. He was listened to very attentively. The Frisco choir sang beautifully from the "White-Ribbon Hymnal." The following day the time was occupied with the usual W. C. T. U. routine. The convention decided to adopt the Illinois pledge, which requires the members to abstain from alcoholic drinks, "as a beverage." Miss Bertha Howell, of Martinsville, Ill., rendered a recitation, which was much appreciated.

Mrs. O. P. Leight, of El Reno, was elected president; Mrs. L. M. Spencer, of Yukon, treasurer; Miss Nellie Shidler, of Chaddick, corresponding secretary; the departments of Sabbath observance, L. T. L., parlor meetings, unfermented wine and social purity were adopted as the lines of work for the present year. The people of the delightful little city showed a deep interest in all the proceedings of the convention by giving it well-filled houses all the time, and it was the sentiment of the visiting delegates that the people of Yukon knew how to entertain and do their part toward making a good convention.

Mrs. Sheplor has conducted a silver medal contest at the M. E. church at Chaddick. Cora Shidler recited the "Martyred Mother," and won the medal; the contest was a financial success, the money being divided equally between the M. E. Sunday-school and the W. C. T. U. work. One of the pleasing features of the occasion was the successful effort of the contestants to place in the hands of each one of the large audience a bouquet of beautiful wild flowers.

The territorial superintendent of unfermented wine has started with a "new lead" on that question as follows: "Will the ministers of the gospel of Oklahoma please answer the following questions by card?

"First—At what p erioddid wine begin to be used as a part of the Jewish Passover feast?

"Second—Would not the law prohibiting all leaven at the Passover feast apply to the wine as well as the bread?

"Third—Do not the Jews of to-day, in the celebration of this feast, use unfermented wine only with unfermented bread?

"Fourth—Since the Jewish laws forbade the use of all species of ferment; since Christ distinctly stated that He came not to destroy, but to fulfill, does it seem natural to conclude that in defiance of Jewish authority and custom, Christ should have used at His last supper the fermented wine?

"Fifth—Will the ministers say which they use?

"All papers please copy."

Mrs. Leight, like many others, has doubtless encountered ministers and churches that insist that fermented wine was used by our Lord at the first supper.

One of the sights that pains the heart of every white-ribboner in Oklahoma is that the ice wagons bearing the name of a beer syndicate appear before the door of every user of that luxury, let him be a Christian temperance worker or not, for this company owns every ice plant in the territory, and is cordially welcomed by the people for its enterprise.

Our territorial president, Mrs. Nellie Sheplor, desires me to say to the officers and superintendents of states and territories who have written to her, asking to exchange minutes, that Oklahoma W. C. T. U. has never been able financially to have its minutes published, but hopes to do so this year, and then the courtesy of exchange will be gladly done.

The territorial convention of Christian Endeavor met in Oklahoma City in June. The officers gave the W. C. T. U. one hour to present "our cause" to that army of young people. Mrs. Emma Miller, of Guthrie, presided, and Mrs. Copland read a paper, which was discussed, after which a gentleman offered a resolution, committing the convention to Prohibition, which stirred up a breeze, but did not result as seriously as the remarks of Mr. Karmarkar did at the Montreal convention.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

MISS ELIZABETH U. YATES is at her home in Round Pond, Maine, and quite ill. She has been filling engagements in South Dakota, but her illness will prevent any further platform work for some time.

A NEW Y. W. C. T. U. was organized July 12 by Miss Anna Gordon at the college over which her sister, Mrs. Alice Gordon Gulick, presides in San Sebastian, Spain. The girls, already inculcated in temperance doctrine were ripe for the organization, which is called the "Columbian Y." An L. T. L. is also promised.

MRS. SARA A. OBERHOLTZER, National superintendent of school savings banks, will soon accompany her husband and son to Germany, where she will study economic problems during the fall and winter. An interesting communication on the work of her department will appear in these columns next week.

THE Y'S of South Africa, as their contribution to the Columbian souvenir which the Y's are distributing at the World's Fair, have sent two hundred and forty beautifully painted silver leaves, mounted, leucadendron argenteum. One of these novelties can be procured by sending ten cents in stamps to Miss Jennie A. Stewart, Editor Oak and Ivy Leaf, The Temple, Chicago, custodian World's Fair Y souvenir fund.

NOTES from the Lake Bluff, Ill., convocation of 1893 are sent by Miss M. Lena Morrow, president of sixth district, Illinois W. C. T. U. and secretary of the association:

"Owing to the World's Fair, no special effort was made to arrange for a program but merely to 'hold the fort' so that work could go on without any break next year. The Sabbath services were interesting, instructive and profitable. Mr. Dobyns, the college representative, spoke the morning of July 16th. In the evening Mrs. Rastall and Mrs. Grout were the speakers, presenting some profitable plans and suggestions for W. C. T. U. work. During the week conferences were held and topics of interest discussed. These consisted of parliamentary drills, discussions on finance, and 'What is the object of the W. C. T. U.'? Friday evening Prof. DeMotte gave a fine practical lecture. His illustrations were drawn from scientific observations and the whole lecture was full of suggestive ideas. Dr. Anna Shaw delivered a sermon from the text, 'Whereupon, O, King Agrippa, I was not disobedient to the Heavenly vision.' The leading thought in her discourse was that 'Faith in Christ,' was the only test for the Christian. In the evening Mrs. Caroline Buell gave a logical address on 'The analogy between two great reforms.' Miss Esther Pugh was reëlected president of the association for the coming year with a fine list of other officers. Plans are being laid to make the meeting at Lake Bluff next year the most profitable ever held."

ANNOUNCEMENT.

SOUTH DAKOTA STATE CONVENTION.

The annual convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of South Dakota is hereby called to meet at Huron, September 16–19. The basis of representation will be as follows: The state executive committee, county presidents, presidents of local unions, one delegate-at-large and one for every twenty paying members. Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman, Missouri's famous state president, will be present. A meeting of the state executive committee will be held Friday evening, September 15, at 6:30 o'clock. May this be one of the most profitable and interesting conventions in the history of our work.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

Jesus said: Whatsoever things ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them.

The editor of the Central City Democrat, Central City, Neb., discourses of the Temple in a late article, in the following kind and brotherly way: "Some foolish people sometimes ask the question, Will the women ever be able to pay for the beautiful Temple? What a simple question. Did you ever know an earnest woman to fail in anything she attempted to do? Pay for it, of course they will. If this editor was as sure he would be saved as he is that women will pay for the 'Temple beautiful' he could now 'Read his title clear to mansions in the sky.' They will pay for it in penny contributions if they can't do it in any other way. All over this broad land the women are at work. From the palatial mansions on Wabash avenue, from the wide verandas of the sunny South land, from the busy workshops of New England, from the sod houses of Nebraska and from the golden shores of California, the generous contributions are coming. From the local organizations of the W. C. T. U. and from the curly-headed darlings of the Band of Hope, there is a constant stream of contributions moving always toward the Temple treasury. Thousands of good women are going on a pilgrimage to the city of the Lakes this summer with more desire to see the beautiful Temple than they have to view the splendors of the wonderful Exhibition. It is the Mecca of their hopes, and the happy realization of their ambitious dreams. All honor to the brave women of America, to our devoted mothers, our loving sisters and our self-sacrificing wives and daughters. God bless them all." The preface to the article from which the above extract was taken, is as follows: "The Central City W. C. T. U. held a reunion Thursday afternoon at the residence of Dr. Benton. It was a Temple meeting and the Temple mite-boxes were opened and about fifty dollars raised to help pay for the woman's beautiful building in Chicago."

Mrs. Amelia Wilson, superintendent of Temple work for Black River, N. Y., W. C. T. U., writes as follows: "I have the pleasure of sending you $64, being the last payment on our pledge of a hundred dollars. It has been a pleasure to raise the money, and some had to make sacrifices but we were all glad we could at least raise the hundred dollars. I, for one, feel proud that our union can have a place on one of the tablets in the beautiful Temple. Our prayer is that every union that has not done so will take the matter in hand at once and raise the desired quota. If they would how easily this debt could be lifted." To this prayer we respond Amen and Amen! Mrs. E. A. Mickle, who has been a staunch friend of the Temple ever since its first inception, writes thus: "I send a check to-day of $92.46 for our glorious Temple. I have all faith in it, always have had, always will have. God would never have prospered it if it had not been a house of His own planting." Fifty-five dollars of this completes a second hundred dollars from the Moorestown, N. J., union. They desire to have the name of the Moorestown L. T. L. on the tablet, with sums credited as follows: Ten dollars from the Florence L. T. L., $5 from the Trenton L. T. L., $5 from the Ocean Grove Y's, $10 from Mrs. Thacher, $3.71 from Mrs. S. A. Bishop, $3.75 from Mrs. J. Waite. The W. C. T. U. of Seekonk and East Providence, R. I., sends $30 on a pledge of $100. The Jerseyville, Ill., W. C. T. U. sends $25 which completes the payment of its $100 pledge. The Portsmouth, R. I., W. C. T. U. sends $25, which it is hoped will finally increase to $100. The F. E. Willard union of Philadelphia, Pa., sends $20.95; the Ovid, N. Y., W. C. T. U, sends $20; the Sharon, Wis., W. C. T. U. sends $20 to be applied on its pledge. The Lacon, Ill., W. C. T. U. sends $16.68, the first installment on $100. Eleven dollars are sent by the W. C. T. U. of Coeyman's Hollow, N. Y. The secretary, Mrs. Elendorf, writes: "Five dollars of this amount was secured from the profits of the sale of 'Black Beauty.'" The Pittsfield, Mass., W. C. T. U. sends $18.27 as a first installment on $100.

Our Library Table

AMERICAN PARLIAMENTARY MANUAL AND POLITICAL PROCEDURE, published by the New Era Company, Springfield, O. This is a handy, pocket-sized book, with flexible covers and round corners, printed in easily readable type, and so tabulated and paragraphed with black-letter headings to arrest the eye, as to make it a very treasure for easy reference. A full index makes the work complete and most desirable.

TOUCHING INCIDENTS AND REMARKABLE ANSWERS TO PRAYER, compiled by S. B. Shaw. This is a volume, as the title explains, of disconnected incidents and narrates many wonderful cases of answer to prayer. It is good reading from first to last and not a few who read it will find within the range of their own observation many incidents parallel with those here related.

Publishing House of the Evangelical Association, Cleveland, O.

JERUSHY IN BROOKLYN, by "Jerushy Smith, of Smithville," (Anna Olcott Commelin) is an amusing story, patterned after those written by Josiah Allen's Wife, but failing in the height and depth of rare good sense and true eloquence for which Mistress Josiah Allen is so admired. But "Jerushy" has good times in Brooklyn, and many will enjoy her quaintly told narrative.

Fowler & Wells Co., 27 E. 21st street, New York City.

In the series of "American Statesmen," edited by John T. Morse, Jr., is the life of ABRAHAM LINCOLN in two volumes, appropriately bound in blue with decoration of gold stars. This is admirable reading. One is impressed from the first by the inherent justice of the author, willing to give praise where praise is due, but not even for the sake of euphony or on any other literary plea, nor yet for pride in his hero, willing to cover up weaknesses or unduly color virtues. Perhaps there is no class of reading so generally fruit-bearing in the minds of those who read as that of first-class biography. It is lives lived that inspire men and women to heroic doing, not theories propounded. And the life of Abraham Lincoln is superabundantly rich in good things, the knowledge of which cannot fail to inspire those who read.

CAMPAIGN ECHOES. The autobiography of Mrs. Letitia Youmans, "the pioneer of the white-ribbon movement in Canada."

This is a book which will be prized by white-ribboners the country over, written as it is by one whose life has been so freely given to the work nearest women's hearts, and being the history of the temperance movement in Canada, whose destinies as a nation must, to a great extent, lie very near to those of the United States. In her introduction to this work Miss Willard says: "All honor to brave Letitia Youmans, and may the 'ripe, round, mellow years' of her life's benignant afternoon be crowded full of trophies for the Master whom she loves, for although she now lies on a bed of pain, having been prostrated by that most agonizing disease, inflammatory rheumatism, our Canadian Greatheart, with her blithe and sunny spirit, still illustrates that wonderful saying of Holy Writ, 'The Lord hath not given me a spirit of fear, but of power and of love and of a sound mind.'" The book is written in a peculiarly interesting style, the author combining those somewhat rare conditions of ready and simple frankness, touching her part in the scenes pictured, and a self-forgetting modesty which has in it no trace of self-laudation. Her love for young people and desire to set their feet early in the paths of righteousness; her inability to say "No" to an opportunity to work for the Master; her openness to suggestions for improvements, whether in farm, in school, or by fireside; her strong good sense and gentle greatness of heart, all crowned by devotion to the service of God, made Mrs. Youmans an instrument of unusual power for good. CAMPAIGN ECHOES is valuable as history, narrating as it does events in the initial chapters of the great reform in Canada and the United States, the birth of the Crusade, the first National W. C. T. U. Convention in Cincinnati, as viewed by a Canadian, the carrying of the good seed back to Canada and the subsequent growth of the W. C. T. U. work in both countries, as Mrs. Youmans worked in the United States as well as in her own home land. She has given this history to the world, only after earnest request to do so, but it is a valuable acquisition to libraries of temperance literature.

OUR DAY FOR JULY.

Joseph Cook's portrait, together with his outspoken address on "New Black Codes at the South, or Murders Under Mob Law," make the July Our Day a remarkable number. It contains also Professor Scott's strong article on "Four Centuries of Christianity in America," and Rev. W. F. Crafts' very interesting and valuable diary of his "Field Work for Sunday Closing," with trenchant editorial notes on the World's Fair, the Briggs' Case, and the attempted saloon murders at Muscatine. Anthony Comstock's portrait will appear in the August Our Day.

A PERTINENT QUESTION.

"What is your union doing for the young people?" we asked an earnest young woman, and the reply has come to us in a letter so suggestive that we quote from it, hoping it may prove an incentive to other Sunday-school teachers.

"The question came to me personally, what was I doing to help on the cause of temperance—many things, but not as much as I might do; so I said to myself, 'I know what I will do. I have at home a class of bright girls in Sunday-school, ages ranging from twelve to sixteen years. It is the prayer of my heart that my girls may become earnest Christians and work in the cause of Christ and temperance; so I have sent you an order for three copies of The Advance Guard for the class, and I am going to send them 'Nineteen Beautiful Years;' I have bought it for myself, and have just read it, and a book so pure and beautiful in its character cannot fail to be an incentive to every girl that reads to make the most of herself, and to cultivate the talents that are God given. It costs me something to do this, but giving without feeling it, is no giving at all."

The Advance Guard for July contains the first chapter of an interesting illustrated serial, by Mattie E. Fay. Now is the time to subscribe. Send for sample copy, only 5cts; subscription price, per year, 50cts. "Nineteen Beautiful Years" is the life of Mary E. Willard, "my sister Mary," as she is yet tenderly called by the author, Frances E. Willard. Price: Paper cover, 10cts.; cloth, 75cts.

A PHILANTHROPY FUND.

Now and then there come to us burning words of appreciation, which we reproduce that the fire may be enkindled in other hearts. The following is from the pen of a motherless girl, but fifteen years of age: "I am only a poor girl, fifteen years old. I have no mother, and I have to keep house for my papa and take care of the children. There are five children of us, the youngest seven years old, but, thank God, this is a temperance family and a Christian home, though we are very poor. I just cannot get along without my UNION SIGNAL, for I cannot attend meetings much, and it is such a blessing to me; so, if you possibly can, please continue the paper until I can get the money, and I will send it to you. The love to work for temperance so burns in my soul sometimes I can hardly stay at home. Your true temperance sister."

It is needless to say THE UNION SIGNAL will still make its weekly visits to this humble home.

We wish our more fortunate temperance workers would supply us with a "philanthropy fund" to meet just such demands as these. Who will take the initiative?

Co. G, Orphan Asylum, Milwaukee, Wis.

"The tears welled up from my heart as I read the touching letter of the young girl who is mothering her little brothers and sisters, and 'cannot get along without THE UNION SIGNAL.' Bless the dear girl! I know who would delight "to take the initiative' in starting a 'Philanthropy Fund'—my bright little Co. G in the orphan asylum of this city (Milwaukee). The children count it a great joy to give from their limited treasury, and I think other L. T. L's in Wisconsin will gladly follow. Co. G will give $1 now; more by-and-by."

RESPONSIVE READING ON THE WORLD'S TEMPERANCE CONGRESSES.

Much to her disappointment, as well as ours, Mrs. Ingalls is again unable, because of sickness in her family, to write the Responsive Reading on Opium. She promises it at the earliest opportunity. Its place will be supplied in August by one on the World's Temperance Congresses, as reported by Mrs. Charlton Edholm, superintendent of press work for the World's W. C. T. U.

YOUNG CRUSADER FOR AUGUST.

The Young Crusader for August has a feast of good things for the children. On the first page is a reproduction of the Children's Building, with a description by Miss Guernsey so realistic that it is almost like seeing with one's own eyes. You can imagine as you read the spirited boys of the gymnastic class exercising with their musical dumb bells, playing leap frog over the vaulting bars, climbing poles and ladders, and swinging from suspended rings.

You cannot so easily imagine the wee babies in the nursery, for you have never seen so many bright eyes and sweet faces together, but you can read all about them in Miss Guernsey's article.

The Editorial Notes will tell you what has been done with the pledge cards, and the fountain, and you must not omit to look at page 3, and read the thrilling story of Ma-ne-ha, a true tale of a wild Indian boy.

JULY NUMBER OF THE ADVANCE GUARD.

With this number begins a new volume of The Advance Guard. NOW is the time to send in your subscription. Many new features will add to its attractiveness, and you should not miss the new story, the initial chapter of which is to be found in the July number.

"The Tables Turned,"

BY MATTIE B. FAY,

is illustrated by our special artist. The story opens with a spirited conversation between five interesting young ladies whom our artist has grouped around a table putting the finishing touches on some neckties for use at a coming social. Conversation turns upon the imaginary wearers of the ties, and the laughing and sometimes thoughtless girls, discuss the standard of morality for men, and the possibility of their exquisite work being soiled by the stains of liquor or tobacco.

In this issue Rudyard Kipling tells how he became a Prohibitionist, and Miss Guernsey, in her usual graphic style, writes of historic homes at "The White City." The accurate drawings of Fort Marion, John Hancock House and Mt. Vernon, add to the interest of the article.

A New York Miracle.

A REMARKABLE AFFIDAVIT MADE BY A WELL-KNOWN BUSINESS MAN.

Afflicted with Locomotor Ataxia for Fifteen Years—Did not Walk a Step for Five Years—Was Given Up by the Leading Physicians of New York City and Discharged from the Manhattan Hospital as Incurable.

(From the New York Tribune.)

For some time there has been an increasing number of stories published in the newspapers of New York City, telling of marvelous cures of various diseases that have been made by different medicines and treatments. It has long been the intention of the Tribune to investigate one of the most interesting cases that could be found, and give the truth to the world as a matter of news. Happening on the case of Geo. L'Hommedieu, the other day an investigation was made with the following very happy result:

When the reporter called on Mr. L'Hommedieu at the residence of his cousin, Mr. Edward Houghtaling, 271 W. 134th Street, he said: "I am 51 years of age and was born in Hudson, N. Y. I served my time in the army, being corporal of Company A., 21st N. J. Volunteers. It has been about fifteen years since I noticed the first symptoms of my disease. I consulted Dr. Allen, of Yorkville, and also Dr. Pratt, since deceased. Dr. Pratt exhausted his powers in my behalf, and finally told me that he could do nothing more for me.

"Finally I was advised by Dr. Gill to go to the well-known scientist, Dr. Hamilton. He gave me a most thorough examination and did me no good. I felt I was growing weaker every day, and went to the Manhattan Hospital, at 41st St. and Park Ave., and was under treatment by Dr. Seguin. He treated me for about three months, and then told me that I had locomotor ataxia, and was beyond the aid of medical science. I was now a complete physical wreck; all power, feeling and color had left my legs, and it was impossible for me to feel the most severe pinch, or even the thrust of a needle.

"If my skin was scratched there would be no flow of blood whatever, and it would take it fully six weeks to heal up. In the night I would have to feel around to find my legs. My pains were excruciating and at times almost unbearable. I would take large doses of morphine to deaden the pains. About five years ago Dr. Lewis A. Sayre of 285 5th Ave., made a trial of the French method of stretching the spine. Although I received no benefit from this treatment I shall always feel grateful to Dr. Sayre for his great interest and kindness.

"So severe had my case become by this time that I could not walk without assistance, and was almost ready to give up life.

"I began the use of Pink Pills for Pale People in September last. I took them rather irregularly at first with the cold water treatment. In a very short time I was convinced that I was getting better and I began the use of the pills in earnest, taking about one box every five days.

"The first sign of improvement was in November, 1892, when I had a rush of blood to the head and feet causing a stinging and prickling sensation. February 22, 1893, was the first time in five years I had ever seen any sign of blood in my feet. From this time on I began to improve. My strength and appetite have gradually returned; I now have perfect control of my bowels, and the pains have gradually left me. I can sit and write by the hour, and walk up stairs by balancing myself with my hands. Without doubt I am a new man from the ground up, and I have every reason to believe that I will be hale and hearty in less than six months. I have taken about twelve boxes of pills."

Sworn to before me this 11th day of March, 1893. H. E. MELVILLE,
Commissioner of Deeds,
[SEAL.] New York City.

The reporter next called on Mr. Robert W. Smith, a member of the firm of Marshal & Smith, who said:

"I have known Mr. Geo. L'Hommedieu for twenty years. He became connected with our firm as secretary in 1879, and attended strictly to his office duties until 1881, when he was stricken down with his trouble. As the disease advanced he was obliged to succumb, and reluctantly gave up his office work. I know that he tried various physicians and their treatments without the least success, and, as he states, he was finally discharged from the Manhattan Hospital, and told that he was in the last stages of locomotor ataxia, and was beyond the hope of human aid. About six months ago or so he was advised to try Dr. Williams Pink Pills for Pale People, with the cold water treatment. The last time I saw Mr. L'Hommedieu he had gained the use of his limbs to such an extent that he could walk up stairs with the help of his wife, and is now doing much important work for us at his home. ROBT. W. SMITH."

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 11th day of March, 1893.

[SEAL.] W. H. WOODHULL,
Notary Public New York County.

An analysis of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills show that they contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are an unfailing specific for such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after effect of la grippe, palpitation of the heart, pale and sallow complexions and all forms of weakness, either in male or female. Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent postpaid on receipt of price (50 cents a box—they are never sold in bulk or by the 100) by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y., or Brockville, Ontario.

Economy is exemplified to-day in domestic science by the use of greatly improved cooking utensils; the Beveridge Automatic Cooker is a perfect wonder in its line; it is highly indorsed by Mrs. Rorer, of the Philadelphia Cooking School, and used by her in her Model Kitchen at the World's Fair. See advertisement of W. E. Beveridge, Baltimore, on another page of this paper.

"They'd have laid their overcoats down for me to walk on if I had had gran'sir's ballot." So said Mirandy as a half-dozen men rushed down the steps to assist the veteran voter to the ground, and left her sitting in the rain. It is stated that the ratio of suicides in New England equals that of old England.

Seven young women graduated this summer from the university in old Edinburgh.

The Archbishop of Canterbury believes that until the work of the temperance reform is done, no other church work can be effected.

Some one aptly summarizes the New Testament books as the founding, proclamation, regulation, conflict and triumph of Christ's kingdom.

The International European Temperance Congress, which was postponed last year on account of cholera, is to be held this year in August at The Hague.

In Chili there are two women doctors and two women lawyers. Lady students are admitted on the same terms as men in the university at Santiago.

It is stated that the Indians of the Omaha Reservation have decided to put aside two thousand dollars from their pasture money to be used in temperance work.

Dr. Norman Kerr is authority for the statement that the proportion of men to women charged with drunkenness is now three to one, where it was formerly seven to one.

The temperance question is well to the front just now in Russia, as the village assembly which has the power of granting licenses has, in many places decided to close their drinkshops.

Among the many institutions for homeless and destitute children, one organization in England known as Homes for Little Boys has done much for the coming generation in that no fewer than sixteen hundred boys have been taught some good handicraft.

Miss Agnes Weston gives a short synopsis of the work for the blue jackets. In the Sailors' Rest at Portsmouth over one hundred and fifteen thousand men were given shelter last year. By means of parcels of papers delivered each month to each ship in the service the whole of the navy is kept in touch. Temperance work has been carried on with great vigor.

"Evening meeting in St. James' Hall. The Bitter Cry from India," is the heading of the report in the Woman's Herald of a gathering in the interest of Social Purity held recently in London. The comment concerning it in a personal letter reads: "It was the largest and most enthusiastic meeting on that subject since the days of Stead's disclosures." Lady Henry Somerset occupied the chair, and opened the meeting by stirring words of introduction to the discussion of questions "which any refined woman might naturally shrink from touching on in public before a mixed audience." Mrs. E. W. Andrew and Dr. Kate Bushnell, followed Lady Henry Somerset and after an enthusiastic reception, related the history of the past months as they have investigated into "the sufferings endured by these poor unfortunate women in the so-called interests of the British army." Heart-rending, soul-appalling facts were related, which could not be controverted, outborne as they were by the two earnest Christian women, who knew whereof they spake, since they had been eye-witnesses and had talked with many of the unfortunates. Mrs. Josephine Butler was greeted with rousing cheers. She expressed her faith in the people of England, that they would use their power to trample out the curse. Mr. McInness, M. P., moved a resolution condemning the awful outrage against law, divine and natural, and acknowledging the action of the government for appointing a departmental committee of inquiry and "calling for the abolition of all acts and regulations that strike at the fundamental liberties of women." The resolution was seconded by Miss Willard, in an earnest speech, and was carried by a unanimous rising vote.

A Million-Dollar Library.

Several thousand City, Town and Village Libraries, neighborhood Book Clubs and Reading Circles, coöperating, interchanging books by means of a Central Organization, each having the benefit of the resources of all—thus combined they will easily dwarf any single million-dollar library by comparison. The American Coöperative Library now puts and every book reader in America, better facilities than are now enjoyed outside of the reach of less than ten of the largest libraries in the principal cities, and all for a cost so trifling as one cent a day.

In Easy Reach of Every Home,

☞ Country Postmasters and Newspaper Publishers, Newsdealers, Booksellers, Clergymen, Teachers and Book lovers generally, take charge of Branch Libraries, and organize neighborhood Book Clubs. Write for terms.

Only One Cent a Day.

You pay into a neighborhood Book Club, an initiation of any sum you please, from $1.00 to $10.00; or you pay it to a Branch Library which is to be established in every important town. You are then entitled to receive immediately from the Library any books wanted from the entire realm of the world's current literature, suitable for general circulation, to an amount not exceeding in cash value the amount of the initial payment. These books, you can retain as long as you please, or return as soon as you please, in exchange for other books from the Library of equal value, by paying an additional charge of 30 cents a month for the use of each dollar's worth of books.

The World's Best Books.

As thousands of the best books of the world are now to be had at a cost of 25 cents to 50 cents each, the reading of good books thus costs next to nothing; a 25-cent book costs but one cent for four days, a 50-cent book costs one cent for two days. If you want high-priced books, or many books, you get them and pay in proportion.

When books received by the local Book Club or Branch Library from the Main Library are no longer wanted, they are returned to the headquarters in New York and exchanged for other books of equal value, and are sent out to some other local Book Club or Branch Library.

Any Book Wanted.

A catalogue of choice books, 160 pages, may be had by any applicant for a 2-cent stamp; members are not limited to this, but may order any book in current literature. Practically unlimited access to the world's literature, not a dream, but a fact.

"Hungry Readers."

"Hungry readers" and students generally need no longer go without books. "Half-a-horse power" of energy set promptly to work will quickly find five or more persons to join a local Book Club which can, by this arrangement, have "the run" of the world's literature for the price of a penny a day for each member of the Club.

Country and village Book Clubs and Libraries already organized can see at a glance how they may freshen and re-vitalize their local resources by arranging to act as Agents for the American Coöperative Library.

A Book Club of fifty active members will confer more local benefit than a $10,000 village library—as a small live stream is more beneficial than a very large stagnant puddle.

Clergymen and Teachers.

Country clergymen who to-day are "starving" for want of access to current literature, can easily organize local Book Clubs and thus secure for themselves the books they want, and also confer incalculable benefit upon their constituents.

Teachers can organize Book Clubs among and through their scholars, and thus receive and confer inestimable pleasure and benefit in both school and home.

Sunday-schools will find the judicious use of even $10.00 through the American Coöperative Library more beneficial than five, or perhaps ten, times the amount invested in purchases in the ordinary way.

If a reader desires to keep any of the books which he receives, the cost of such, which will be made very low in case they are slightly worn, can be paid to the Library and other books can be drawn of the same value.

Branch Libraries—Agents.

Suitable person, with a little capital, wanted to take charge of a Branch Library in every town. Canvassing agents wanted to work smaller towns and country. Club Agents wanted to organize local Book Clubs. Books being by this enterprise, for the first time, made universally accessible, their use should become as universal as that of calico or sugar. A very small profit made from each customer makes large profits for the Agent Inducements to Agents suprisingly liberal. Address

WORLD'S AND NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTIONS.

The World's W. C. T. Congresses on engineering in all its branches, on navigation, architecture, photography, art and sculpture have held well-attended meetings in the Art Palace during the week.

In connection with the World's congresses of civil law and government, the National American Woman Suffrage Association are holding their meetings this week, with Susan B. Anthony presiding.

THE Minneapolis Journal recently told how a dauntless woman, met by the perplexity of a reprobate husband who threatened misery, if not ruin, by his wayward course, found a way out of the difficulty by having herself appointed her husband's guardian, thus gaining for herself legal control of his wages and authority to restrain him forcibly, if necessary, from extremes of conduct. Is there not a hint here for wives of drinking men?

THE question arises, if, as the Sunday-openers claim, Jackson Park belongs to the people and cannot be closed to them the first day of the week, why, upon precisely the same grounds, is not that park absolutely free to the public seven days of the week? It is possible Mr. Clingman et al. may succeed in proving too much.

A self-constituted committee from the Board of Lady Managers, consisting of Mrs. Barker, of South Dakota, Mrs. Felton, of Georgia (both W. C. T. U. women), Mrs. Cantrill, of Kentucky, and Mrs. ex-Governor Wise, of Virginia, visited the theaters in the Midway Plaisance, and their disclosures resulted in a storm of indignation in the board, and an appeal to Director-General Davis, who ordered an investigation. As a result the Persian theater is closed and all others of indecent character ordered suppressed. Perhaps if women had a hand in the management of municipal affairs some of our down-town theaters would come under the official ban. A sweeping reform is needed in this direction.

IN view of the World's and National W. C. T. U. conventions to be held this year, as is fitting, in the World's Fair City, the official call urges the observance of Sunday, October 1st, or the Saturday previous as a special prayer day for the overthrow of the alcohol and opium trades and licensed and unlicensed impurity the world over. It is further asked that pastors be requested to preach on temperance and that mass-meetings in the interests of the cause be held on Saturday or Sunday evening. The importance of such preparation for the great conventions will be evident to all white-ribboners. May we come up to this city of seven thousand saloons on the 16th of October, trusting as of old in the God of Jacob!

LET the voice of the prohibition speaker be heard at the state or county fair. The politician will be there in full force, bent upon making a favorable impression upon the rural voter, first for himself, second, for his party. The demagogue will not miss this opportunity of informing the "dear people" of his devotion to the interests of the farmer and the laboring man. Let the local union see that the principles for which Prohibitionists stand are presented also. Let it be made clear that above all the bewildering perplexities of tariff, and single tax, and free coinage, one question stands preëminent, because it touches all interests. There are many opinions concerning tariff laws, free coinage of silver and other political bugaboos, but concerning the liquor traffic there is but one opinion the world over,—that it is an evil. Let this nation stop its iniquitous policy of "justifying the wicked for reward;" let it stop recognizing the existence of vice in any of its forms as "necessary," and it will see its way clearer to an adjustment of all economic questions.

THE exclusion of women from the Royal Geographical Society can hurt no one but the men who did it. By a curious coincidence the news of this anachronism went to the press the same day with a Reuter telegram stating that Lieutenant Peary, of America, had started on an expedition to the North Pole accompanied by Mrs. Peary and twelve companions. In these days when Mrs. French-Sheldon, Lady Baker, Lady Brassey, Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt and other noted women have visited well-nigh every corner of the globe it is simply whimsical for a lot of men to exhibit themselves as the "Royal Geographers" have done. We are glad to know that the press flouts their folly as it merits, and we predict the speedy reversal of their silly sentence. It would not be a bad idea for a lot of our leading women to prepare a petition and fire it at the belated old gentlemen who have handed themselves down to posterity by such a treacherous stairway as this exclusion.

MR. F. C. SELOUS, the African traveler and hunter, during his twenty years wandering in Africa, has never taken with him even a medicine bottle of brandy or spirits. From his youth up he never tasted beer or wine or any other intoxicant. The anti-tobacconists will also be delighted to hear that he is proof against the insidious weed. The natives with whom he spent most of his life in Africa never smoke tobacco.

THE silver convention which met in this city last week demonstrated the fact that the financial question, though a political one, is neither sectional nor partisan. When Republicans and Democrats, Populists and Prohibitionists rise superior to party and unite in demanding a change in the financial policy of this nation it proves at least that they are terribly in earnest. In the face of a great crisis party differences dwindle into insignificance, and, though the question at issue involves no higher principle than that of a monetary standard, the present agitation proves that the people are ready now as ever to stand together as Americans for America.

SHO NEMOTO, the well-known temperance worker of Japan, arrived in San Francisco, July 25, where he was given a reception by the state W. C. T. U. He reached Chicago, last week, receiving a warm welcome at World's W. C. T. U. headquarters and addressing a large and deeply interested audience at the Willard Hall noon-meeting on Friday. During his absence in Mexico, where he has been sent as Japanese commissioner to investigate the immigration question, Rev. K. Miyama will serve as president of the Tokio Temperance Society. Sho Nemoto is publishing the letters and telegrams received at the time of Mary Allen West's death in a leaflet which includes an address by Miss West on "Christian Citizenship."

WE call special attention to the subjoined communication from Miss Willard, sent under date of July 25. Our readers will be glad to know that our beloved "chief" is growing stronger, and that she and Lady Henry Somerset are deriving much benefit from the bracing climate of Switzerland and the absolute rest enjoined upon them: "BELOVED COMRADES:—Do not forget that this is a sort of 'round-up' year, the twentieth since the Women's Crusade in Ohio, the date of whose first day is burnt into all our memories—December 23, 1873. It is a good time to 'take account of stock,' and sum up results. We are perfectly aware that the most important of these cannot be reached by material estimates, but pertain to 'the spirit that is in man.' We must therefore content ourselves with such a showing as 'facts and figures' may afford, and I affectionately urge upon all secretaries of our societies, whether local, county, district, National or the World's W. C. T. U., to prepare a summary for the National and World's W. C. T. U. conventions and for the press, containing, among other specifications, the following: Number of members paying fees ten years ago, five years ago and this year; number of local societies in each of the same years; amount of money handled by the society in each of the same years; number of delegates to the annual meeting in each of the same years. We have reason to believe that the steady advance thus shown will much encourage and strengthen our work and workers as well as the general temperance sentiment. I would also suggest that, under the auspices of the general officers and superintendent of evangelistic work, a program be prepared and sent out by each local, state and National W. C. T. U. for a Crusade Camp Fire on December 23, or in memory of that red-letter day and the great uprising of Christian women which it introduced. I wish to thank you all for the sympathy and sisterly patience you have manifested toward me in this year of diminished vigor and activity. The heights where I now am seem to impart new hope."

GOD'S FARM.

BY H. A. DELANO.

AS a rainbow above life's evening,
As a poem that sootheth care,
Like apples of gold in pictures of light,
The silver, of here, and there—
A vision, the rarest and dearest,
Spreads o'er me its redolent charm,
The scent of the orchard and meadow,
The glamour and glow of the farm.

I remember the home on the hillside,
House, garden, old well and the lane,
The wide spreading fields of the upland,
And the lowland with billows of grain.
Again, the fair redbreasts are mating,
And building soft nests 'mid the trees;
Of cherries, blood red I am dreaming,
As I sleep 'mid the hum of the bees.

The path to the woodland familiar,
Close bordered with clover and thyme,
I am treading again 'mid the daisies,
Green aisle of the dear olden time.
The sunbeams were brighter, and sweeter
The cool springing fountain, of nook,
I drank, and I splashed, and I laughed,
To behold that urchin's queer look.

'Twas me, and 'tis I, am advising
(I, the sage of the years, growing gray,)
The youth, the dreamers to linger,
With the flowers and the fountain to stay;
Stay close to the heart of the homestead,
Where the rainbow of hope goes not down,
Expand thy young life in the sunshine:—
God's farm? who would change for man's town?

"TO SEE OURSEL'S AS ITHERS SEE US."

BY JULIA MILLS DUNN.

Off against the horizon the top of Bald Peak cut its outline clear and sharp against the cloudless sky.

Katydids and cicadas chirped in the grass their first prophecies of coming frost, and the geraniums burned with a fiercer scarlet in the garden beds. Out in the garden Dorothy Vane was tying up bunches of nasturtiums and rose geranium to be sent to the children's hospital in the city, when a step sounded on the gravel walk and her brother Bert came up behind her, and reaching over her shoulder, shook a letter in her face.

"What will you give for this, Dame Dotty?"

"Oh, Bert," recognizing the handwriting of the superscription, "it's from Tom!"

"Of course, whom else did you suppose it was from?" and Bert fought off her attacks with one hand, while he flourished the letter aloft with the other. But at last, when Dorothy had gained possession of it and sat down on a convenient garden settee to read it, she gave a little cry of delight.

"Oh, Bert, he's coming—Tom is—to the county fair. Just listen," and Dorothy began reading in the middle of the letter:

"So, since it seems best that I should make the trip on my bicycle with a kodak strapped to the vehicle, why can't you and your brother mount your Columbias also, and meeting me at Ford's Gap, make the trip together? It will be only a nine-miles ride for you, and as I must be back with my views by midnight of that day, we can have at least a brief chat on the journey, which would be otherwise quite out of the question, since the illustrators will have scant time to get their work done for the next issue of the paper. So, if the dearest girl in the world," Dorothy faltered blushingly, keeping her eyes fixed on the page before her, "will accede to this request, and be at the Gap at ten in the morning, we shall be enabled to arrange for an early visit at the farm as soon after as I can get a furlough. Devotedly, TOM."

"Sorry to disappoint you, Dame Dotty," replied Bert hesitatingly, "but I have made other arrangements. I've entered Tally-ho in the race for three-years-old colts, and as I don't intend to let Dan Lomax beat me again this year, I've decided to drive Tally-ho over myself the day before the fair to look out for foul play. I'll be on the grounds myself, this year, and see there's no unfair advantage taken on the other side."

Dorothy sprang to her feet and caught her brother's arm. "Oh, Bert dear, don't, don't be drawn into that wild set again. You know you can't trust yourself, and I should be so mortified if Tom—"

She stopped abruptly, suddenly conscious that she was saying, in her excitement, a most unwise thing.

"Thanks, Dorothy," said her brother coldly; "so I'm not fit to be seen by my sister's stylish city friends, and I'm not man enough to be trusted with my own liberty. You may as well understand, Dorothy, once for all, that you and your goody-goody Tom can sing temperance ditties and attend prayer-meetings to your heart's content, but your cold-blooded fishy type of manhood doesn't suit me. Hang it! is there then no medium between a psalm-singing, parson-faced chap, and a gutter drunkard? One would think to hear you, that I was like old Armstrong, whose periodical attacks of delirium tremens convulse the neighborhood at regular intervals. But I would be ashamed if I couldn't trust myself with an occasional glass. As for Tom Campbell, he'll be a good husband for you, Dorothy, but I'd be ashamed, actually ashamed, to be like him."

Dorothy's eyes blazed, but she controlled her indignation.

"You have only to see yourself as I have seen you, Bert, to feel a far deeper shame, a sense of degradation unspeakable, at your condition. I will not ask you to go with me, but let me entreat you, brother, do not even taste of intoxicants, lest you as sorely repent it as neighbor Armstrong does. And be assured, I repeat it, if you could once see yourself as others have seen you, it might convince you that the difference is not so great, after all, between you and Mr. Armstrong, and any other drunken man."

The day appointed for the races was yet three days' distant, and poor Dorothy, wavering and halting between two opinions, could not make up her mind whether to go or stay. She knew that Bert, priding himself on his independence, would be but a tool in the hands of the wild set whom he called his friends, and it would be a chance if he escaped disgracing himself on that day. And to have Tom, who had never met him, see him in such a condition! The mere thought was agony. Then another view presented itself. Bert was her brother; they had clung together as orphaned children over the double grave that held both father and mother, and they had been all in all to each other ever since. Should she shrink from him now that he had fallen in with evil companions, and there was a possibility of disgrace? Then she would go all over the argument again in her own mind, only to come back to the same point from which she had started.

But she found Tom waiting for her at the Gap, according to promise, and rolling swiftly over the smooth, springy country road, damp with the heavy morning dew, she felt an exhilaration of spirits that only the enthusiastic bicyclist feels when on his native heath, that nearly drove the thought of her recent trouble from her mind though its traces did not escape the observing eyes of her lover.

"This is fairly intoxicating," said Tom, as they swept like the wind past rocks overgrown with brambles, and shaded country lanes, odorous with the scent of sweet-briar.

Dorothy shuddered at the word, and Tom, noticing the expression of pain that passed over her face, said softly: "Do not fear for me, Dorothy. I put my trust in total abstinence, for there is no half-way measure in one's appetite, and that is the only safe foundation. My ideal, Sir Galahad, one 'whose strength is as the strength of ten, because his heart is pure,' is one who does not tempt fate by exposing himself to temptation. I have never tasted liquor, and I never shall."

At the gate, as they entered, there was much confusion; several rough looking jockeys were leading their horses up and down the track, preparatory to speeding them on the course. Not far off the musicians in the band-stand were blowing themselves purple in the face, striving to render with proper effect "The Star Spangled Banner" and other patriotic airs.

At the door of Floricultural Hall Tom and Dorothy parted. "Good-by, sweetheart," whispered Tom, "my work claims me now. After a dozen or two instantaneous pictures I shall ride back to the city at a pace that would put John Gilpin to the blush. Look for me down a week from to-morrow," and he was off on his wheel.

There was a little stir in the crowd, women screamed, children ran, and some one cried, "Look out for Tally-ho." One glance, and Dorothy recognized the horse, but who was the rider? A battered hat set slantwise on his close cropped, curly hair, his light, fashionable suit mud-bespattered and torn, his head rolling from side to side in drunken helplessness, as the spirited horse bounded and reared obedient to the senseless guidance of his rider, with his hair hanging over his eyes, an idiotic smile on his face, was Bert, her brother. Round and round, aimlessly among the people, wherever the crowd was thickest, they went; the people screaming at their approach, the police, who were evidently afraid of the spirited animal, slinking out of sight, as Tally-ho plunged and stamped along, his rider perilously near falling at every bound.

A man with toy balloons, who was trying to cajole a buxom country woman with two tow-headed boys into buying one apiece for them as they looked at his wares with greedy, longing eyes, was nearly run over, and in his fright dropped the strings that held the airy bubbles, and the two youngsters watched them disappear cloudwards. A one-armed veteran soldier who presided over a refreshment stand saw Tally-ho charge upon his rickety table, and in an instant lemonade, pumpkin pies and sandwiches were scattered and trampled under foot.

In the confusion no one seemed to notice Dorothy, and when one of the Armstrong boys, a stalwart youth, succeeded in capturing Tally-ho and lifting the crazed and almost helpless rider from his saddle declared that he would take him home if some one would look out for Tally-ho, Dorothy, trembling in every limb and faint with fear, stole out unobserved, and with her swift Columbia, and by a circuitous but more level route, reached home two full hours before young Armstrong placed Bert carefully on the shady side-porch to the farmhouse and slipped quietly away.

A week after, Bert, with only a vague and penitent recollection of what had occurred, was entertaining, in his own bright, amusing way, Tom Campbell who had come down for the promised visit.

"By the way," Tom was saying, "I was quite disappointed in not seeing you at the fair. There were some fine displays in horsemanship. Since you do not attend perhaps you would be interested in looking at some of these pictures. They are from photographs taken on the spot. Here is a drunken scene, disgusting, but instructive as an object lesson."

Bert glanced at the picture, a half-page illustration.

There was nothing in the appearance of the reeling, maudlin rider to suggest to Tom the identity of his courteous, entertaining host, but the horse's blanket bore in conspicuous letters only too plain to Bert's guilty eyes, the word "Tally-ho."

"Dorothy," said he to his sister, who entered at that moment, "after such a repulsive sight as this I shall change my colt's name. He shall not be called Tally-ho from this day, but we will give him the name—in all respect to the reformer—of Neal Dow."

"Tea is ready," said Dorothy gaily, and unsuspicious Tom, noticing the glad ring in her voice, wondered a little stupidly what it meant.

But he has never thought of it since and he has never found out, though he has been Dorothy's husband and Bert's brother-in-law for many years.

CITY OR COUNTRY?

Come to Chicago to Reform.

BY MILES M. DAWSON.

Sounds strange, doesn't it? But a great city is the very best place in the world to behave yourself and the very worst place to do anything else. You can lead an irregular life in the country or in one of the smaller towns and get along; in the city you must choose which master you will serve. In smaller places, people average a man and set his virtues against his vices, according to him just treatment. They know about Jones' weakness for whisky but they also know that he is a fair sort of fellow after all. They know that Smith is mean and niggardly but they endure him and avoid that trait of his character. In a great city it is not so; people know but little about you at most and are at all times fearful that they are deceived in you. This makes it necessary for a young man to be more circumspect about his behavior than in a country town; for if he once prejudices his case, he is not apt to have an opportunity to rehabilitate himself in the grace of the person who saw only his misstep. This is not what many think; on the contrary, there are many people who believe that one can do almost anything in a large city with impunity and without any one paying the least attention. It is true that no one cares very much what you do nor indeed what becomes of you. They will not take the trouble to hunt up your excellencies if you show them your vices. But you are never alone and while your next-door neighbor will not notice you so long as you behave properly, he will take delight watching you if you wander from the right path. A sober man is hardly seen by the people in his own hotel, but a drunken man is known and despised at once by every guest.

Men know that at the most they will not be well acquainted with the persons with whom they have to do; therefore they are on their guard. They notice very little things and they simply let you drop if the impression is unfavorable, instead of showing their displeasure. You may never know what hurt you, nor indeed that you were hurt. They have neither time nor inclination to inquire or observe further; it is a matter of no consequence that they have misjudged you. Your affairs do not concern them at all.

The very man who is impatient at any restraint upon his own conduct will refuse to hire a lad because he comes to him with the smell of whisky upon him. He says, when the young man turns away: "I have no use for a fellow who hasn't brains enough to let whisky alone during business hours."

For the modern business man, whatever his own habits may be, is unconsciously an advocate of total abstinence when transacting business. He does not want his head muddled and he recognizes treating as a method of a confidence operator. From his point of view a man can do what he likes at other times but business hours are sacred. The employé who is never seen coming out of saloons at the close of the noon hour stands the best chance for advancement, although even the employer may not be conscious of what affected his choices.

In the country and smaller towns it is very different. There, even to this day, a man is often esteemed a very crank and extremist when he dismisses an employé because seen coming out of a saloon or gives as a reason for refusing to trade with a man the fact that he smelled whisky on his breath. In many businesses in smaller towns a man is compelled to go into saloons to get trade, and indeed this is one of the banes of doing business in such places. So thoroughly true was it for a long time, that one of the necessary qualifications of a commercial traveler used to be to have a capacity for an inordinate amount of liquor, treating being a part of his legitimate expenses. During the last years this practice has abated considerably, the country merchants refusing to be treated with less dignity than their brethren in the cities. Business is business.

In Chicago, with the exception of those occupations which bring one in touch with liquor-dealers themselves, there are few avocations which lead one inside barrooms. Of course one can do business in such places if he desires, but it is nearly always with a distinct loss instead of gain. A gentleman of my acquaintance, a German and by no means an abstainer, discharged from his employment a mutual acquaintance, a frequenter of saloons, though rarely if ever intoxicated, and otherwise an excellent fellow. Upon inquiry, I was informed that his business was not considered desirable because it was obtained in saloons for the most part. He was working on commission and did a fair business.

In smoking, profanity, vulgarity and the minor vices, it is the same. There are now few offices where smoking is permitted to the employés, and in many of them even visitors are requested not to smoke. In fact, business men have come to consider it unbusinesslike to smoke in offices. On the street or at the club, it is another matter, and may be quite the thing, but an office should be sacred to business. Doubtless this change is in great part the result of the presence of women typewriters and clerks, and, therefore, is a proof of the elevating and purifying influence of the sex. Contrast this, if you please, with the country towns where men are allowed to smoke even in drygoods stores, laying down their cigars only long enough to attend to a customer.

During the last years of my service of the tobacco despot I was compelled to undergo the profoundest humiliations because of my devotion to the weed, and such is the experience of nearly every one who seeks to carry his cigar with him about his business. So, too, of profanity and coarse language; men observe everything of this sort, and from it make their estimate of the man. He is all the time on his good behavior. Night does not constitute an exception, though it often seems to a country lad that no one can possibly know anything about a city man's doings at night. Now one can have at most a limited acquaintance, even if his work calls him into contact with the public. These acquaintances will be of his own choosing, in a sense, but he cannot do anything without forming acquaintances. Every person whom he meets in bad places, but who does not belong there, will misjudge him, in spite of his own action, and will distrust him; there is no such thing as fellow-feeling among the men who meet in this way. Besides the men who do belong there have a trick of turning up at the most embarrassing moment, and they are not afflicted with the shrinking modesty which characterizes even abandoned women; they force you to recognize them.

In the country, if you would get along smoothly and succeed, you must act on the theory that however good you are, you are no better than any one else. In the city where every one is seeking not to show himself your equal but your superior, you should act on the hypothesis that you are as good as any one else. The reputable gentleman to whom you were talking when Tommy Tough sauntered by, will not believe you his equal when with burning cheeks you have been forced to speak to that notorious wretch. And it is wonderful how small after all Chicago is and how omnipresent such persons are.

In the country, you must be democratic, willy-nilly. You must not merely know the pure and good, though poor and uncultured, which may be very well, but the evil and vicious, also, in most cases. Not so in the city. You are likely to be socially tabooed for daring to associate with poverty or rudeness, which may be an ill judgment; but you are certain to forfeit the friendship and acquaintance of the virtuous and orderly if you retain that of the vicious and brawlers. In the country where vice itself is often hidden and fair because mysterious, the young man is always in temptation through his own acquaintances and companions; raillery or ridicule often completes what good spirits have begun. He drinks and smokes and swears, too, for the sake of "good company." In the city, on the contrary, where vice is open and shameless and hideous because naked, the young man may, nay, must choose his companions, and if he chooses the evil the good will have none of him. Even the vicious offer but little which would be tempting to the man who does not already love the vile. The rounder will say when you smile and refuse to drink with him: "You're right; it's devilish good stuff to leave alone."

Contrast this with the bulldozing tactics only too often used by those out-of-town men who are insulted if you decline to drink with them. In the city a man's ridicule can be treated with a dignified contempt which renders it harmless, but in the country it bites like acid.

Don't keep your boys away from Chicago for fear of bad company; give them noble purposes to live and labor for and send them forth with confidence. The worst dives in Chicago are principally supported by men from the country, often high in the esteem of their neighbors, who come to the city to "see the sights." If deprived of their patronage they would be closed.

But if a young man wishes to go to the devil Chicago will help him do so, and the process need not be long. Society is likely to be soon rid of him.

SAVAGERY VS. CHRISTIANITY—"COMPETITION" VS. "MUTUALISM."

A Dream of Real Life.

BY S. H. COMINGS.

I dreamed of being at a camp of savages, and saw a little band surround and kill a deer by dexterous use of native bow and spear.

The burly chief at once took the hind quarters on his back, because he was the strongest brave in the party. The next strongest took his choice of the remaining cuts, and so on, till for an old and decrepit savage there was left but the head and feet.

I saw a look of mingled pain and anger on his face as he gathered up the scanty fragments of the game he had followed longest to drive it where the rest could join in the last act of securing a bit of food supply. I seemed to know, too, that this old Indian had the largest family to supply with much needed food, but I thought, this is true savagery where "might makes right," and no lessons of brotherhood have been taught these rude men of the forest.

The scene changed and I seemed to see a saintly missionary preaching the pure principles of a Christ-love to the rude warriors; and I saw the tear of penitence course along the dusky cheeks, and the flash of a new resolve to love the God of the white man, and to follow His divine law.

Then in the fitful change that comes so strikingly to the dream history, I thought I had been away for years from the home of the tribe, and was coming back to learn of the better life of the reclaimed natives. As I came among the cabins of the village I saw some like the old-time tepees with smoke still working its way from among the poles and scant coverings; while near by stood quite pretentious cottages, with evident signs of civilized luxury. I looked into the first rude wigwam and saw a bent and aged warrior whom I at once recognized as the same feeble old man who only secured the head and feet of the first deer I had seen killed on the former visit. I saw now, too, he looked faint and famished, and in the face of his infirm wife I saw still more plainly the marks of suffering and want, almost to starvation. A feeling that some great wrong was being done came over me instinctively, and I stepped to the better cabin door near by, and here I saw the same burly form of the stalwart warrior I had first recognized as the leader of the band. He sat surrounded by an astonishing profusion of food supplies, and many signs of all the usual appliances of early civilization.

I inquired if it was true that a missionary had been among the tribe, and was assured it was, and with a show of pride he said: "We did not formerly have such homes as this; we did not secure our game so easy," as he looked at his Winchester. "But," I objected, "this is not a real Christianity, for you to have such a surplus of all you wish and the old warrior to be so near the line of actual starvation. That is not the way the great Teacher taught. He called men 'brethren,' and told the strong to help the weak and unfortunate. That is the spirit the Master would have you catch from His example and teachings."

A look of pitying scorn came over the dusky face as he said: "You must be entirely ignorant of the real benefits of a Christian civilization." He had been among the wigwams of the white Christians, and had been taught by their greatest leaders. He had been in the elegant churches and homes of the Christian people, had learned that he must hunt only six days in the week, and must give one deer skin in ten to the missionary; and then, as he was the strongest and best hunter in his tribe, he could have all that he could get, and if there were old and unfortunate ones suffering among his tribe, he would see if some society could not be formed for their relief—but, of course, he could not give any of his surplus; that was not according to his instruction in the white man's religion. Oh, no!

Then before me came in the startling picture of dreams that so often make such indelible impressions on our memories, the picture of the greed and scramble for more and yet more of the gifts of the common Father for His common children in all the Christian lands; and I could see only the same principles of essential savagery in the methods of distribution among those who posed as the best followers of the Teacher who had spent His life among the lowly doing good, and who had preached such striking lessons of a better life and a higher hope and ambition than in seeking to outdo the less endowed in gathering a surplus of the products given for a common use. Distribution! ever the great world-question! "Communism, if forced and mechanical; the highest expression of Christianity if it is the voluntary service of love."

In my waking hours I studied the vivid memory of my dream, and I could not find any essential difference between the first exhibition I had seen of savage selfishness in dividing the deer, and the present methods prevailing among so-called Christians, where the sharp and unscrupulous gather in the overwhelming fruits of modern wealth, and become profligate and vicious from the very surfeit of goods not needed or used for any natural want; while the weak, simple, or unfortunate suffer and die, or are degraded by want and poverty.

In my waking thought I earnestly ask, Can Christianity lead us to a higher life of some type of "mutualism" than the savagery of "competition"? The question is one of the most urgent problems that asks solution of the Christian teachers of to-day.

THE FARMER'S LIFE.

BY A NEW YORK PASTOR.

You are keeping great company out there on the farm. I know of none nobler or more illustrious. Homer, Xenophon, Cato, Cicero, Virgil, Pliny and I know not how many noble Romans and cultured Greeks, all were intimately associated with farm life. Italy, France, England, Scotland, these have all immortalized your calling.

Did you ever think how many romances are located upon the farm? How, that a novel that does not touch rural life in some way, is always poor and flagging?

Do you remember that English ruralism makes half the charm of all the great, English literature? Sir Hugh Platt, Thomas Whatley, Edmund Burke, Goldsmith, Robert Burns, Sir Humphrey Davy, Charles Dickens, and hosts of others, have given the world very little that is not somehow linked up with sweet pastorals and near to nature's heart.

Think of a novel that has no "old house," "garden," "villa," "fields," "woods," "meadows or moonlighted lanes" in it.

The most criminal vandalism in God Almighty's world is that which belittles, disparages, or ruins the country.

Machinery, smoke, railroads, improvements, all great blessings! But how they have ruined the brightest spots on God's green earth.

The master of a kingdom, the real great emperor, the most independent soul that breathes is the farmer.

I admire him, I believe in him, I often wish—with all his trials—I were he.

WITHIN my earthly temple there's a crowd,—
There's one of us that's humble, one that's proud.
There's one that's broken hearted for his sins,
And one, who, unrepentant, sits and grins.
There's one who loves his neighbor as himself,
And one who cares for naught but fame and pelf.
From much corroding care I should be free
If once I could determine which is me.

"HULLO!"

BY SAM WALTER FOSS.

W'EN you see a man in woe,
Walk right up and say, "hullo!"
Say "hullo," an' "how d'ye do!"
"How's the world a usin' you?"
Slap the fellow on his back,
Bring your han' down with a whack;
Waltz right up, an' don't go slow;
Grin, an' shake, an' say, "hullo!"

Is he clothed in rags? Oh, sho!
Walk right up an' say, "hullo!"
Rags is but a cotton roll,
Jest for wrappin' up a soul;
An' a soul is worth a true
Hale an' hearty "how d'ye do!"
Don't wait for the crowd to go,
Walk right up an' say, "hullo!"

W'en big vessels meet, they say,
They saloot an' sail away.
Jest the same are you an' me—
Lonesome ships upon a sea;
Each one sailing his own jog
For a port beyond the fog.
Let your speakin' trumpet blow;
Lift your horn an' cry, "hullo!"

Say "hullo," an' "how d'ye do!"
Other folks are good as you.
W'en you leave your house of clay,
Wanderin' in the Far-Away,
W'en you travel through the strange
Country t'other side the range,
Then the souls you've cheered will know
Who you be, an' say, "hullo!"

COLUMBIAN CRUMBS.

BY B. V. CUSHMAN, M. D.

Yesterday, roaming through the gallery occupied by dairy machinery in the Agricultural Building, I took a long journey, going back to my girlhood on the farm. I sat on a three-legged stool again, and leaned my forehead against "Old Red's" fat side while I pressed the milk from her pink teats. When I set the brimming "patent pail" aside for the cup in which my careful mother bade us "keep the strippings separate," my pet cow would reach her head around fondly toward me and with her big eyes say, "I wish I had more to give you." I fancied I knew her milk from all the rest, and insisted upon having my bowl filled with it every night. Surely the cow deserves a high place in symbolism, for she gives of herself to the world.

In those days "deep setting" was one of the new-fangled notions beginning to be agitated in The Rural, and looked upon with general distrust by butter-makers on the farms. Remembering the large shallow pans into which mother used to strain the milk, as I looked at the

MODERN DAIRY APPLIANCES

I exclaimed, "What have they done to the milk pans? Covered them on top and opened them at one side, to be sure!" I was just longing to meet some one with whom I could talk the changes over, when a couple of ladies came up, one of them elderly, with smooth hair and sweet face. In my winsomest introduction tone I began to say, "Oh, do you understand?" when the younger one curtly interrupted, "We're not grangers; we don't know anything about it. We live in ——," a little river city of another state. Then I begged pardon, saying: "I am a dairyman's daughter, and if my mother were here she could tell me so much about these things, that I hoped your mother would know, too."

But I soon met the friends I was seeking, two gentlewomen, evidently neighbors, seeing the Fair together. We were in the churn department. To one of them I remarked, "These are very different from the churn my mother used." She was a bright little body, able to give a reason for her opinions, and laying one hand on a "barrel" and the other on a "box," she said: "I want no kind of churn that revolves. You can't always depend upon yourself to put the cover on tight, if anybody happens to speak to you just then, or if the baby wakes up and cries, and you are hurrying to get the churning ready for the boys to begin on before you take him up, and if you don't get to him in a second he's liable to kick himself onto the floor." Now what male patentee of a churn ever got such a situation as that into his head? Yet it was real life, and she had an illustration of it: "One of my neighbors has one. After she had been churning a few minutes, off flew the cover, and away she went—five gallons of cream." That's just the way she told it, and I defy you, my reader, to express it more vividly. She went on: "Their kitchen is carpeted, too, and they lost four churnings that way last winter. Cream is heavy in the winter, and the cover is liable to work loose any way from jarring."

Passing on I came to a swing churn, oblong, furnished with skylight for looking through to see if the butter has "come," and hanging in a frame like a pendulum. The "swash" of the cream from end to end does the work. I find that the old "dasher" is entirely eschewed in modern machinery, being said to injure the grain of the butter. The Arabs were in the trend of science when they put the cream in bottles and set them upon their fleet horses. Before this swing churn stood a young couple who had evidently lived together long enough to be acquainted, and to realize something of the strength that comes when "two grow into one." He was stalwart and bronzed, and upon her face was a beam of the glory of motherhood. You would suspect at sight that they had a treasure over in the Children's Building. "Oh, see, dear, if I had this I would put a strap on one of the handles and hitch it to the back of my chair and churn while I rock the baby to sleep!" The young husband examined it carefully, and finally said, "I believe this is good. You shall have one, darlin', put it down on the list of things to get. When you're not churning you can swing the kid in it," and they passed on laughing merrily at his joke.

Naturally next in order was the butter worker. Many an ambitious young wife has gone, heated and perspiring from her kitchen, to cellar or spring-house to "work the butter" of yesterday's churning, coming out at the end of half an hour with a "little hacking in her throat" that never ceased till lung and life were coughed away. Here is a simple, convenient machine that will work a batch of butter in from three to five minutes and do it more perfectly than it can be done by hand. It consists of tray and roller with paddles, the roller turned by a crank, travels from end to end of tray, acting upon the butter in precisely the same manner as a ladle in the hands of a person, but with perfect uniformity, hence with less injury to that grain, which is the delicate distinguishing feature of perfect butter.

Then I found something I had never heard of before—a cream separator. It is a queer looking bowl-within-bowl combination of aluminum and stone, and I plied the exhibitor with questions. He responded volubly, extolling its superiority at certain points over all competitors, when I interrupted him: "But what is it for? What does it do? I never heard of such a thing before." The exhibitor raised his eyebrows, and I felt too ignorant to be instructed, but at that moment a gallant dairyman came upon the scene and explained to me that it is a method of separating cream from milk, without setting or even cooling. He tells me that the milker empties his bucket into the separator which is operated by a crank and cogs that may be turned by hand, horse or steam power, and in three minutes the cream will be in a vessel on one side, the skim milk in a vessel on the other, and the separation more complete than by the old method of rising. He thinks the saving of cream is great. I can think of another saving, as I remember the host of thrifty housewives who rise with the sun or before it, to "skim," while a dutiful daughter gets breakfast, and one of the boys can take care of the milk. He hands down the pan from the shelf and carries another away while she removes the cream, after awhile standing upon one foot while the other rests, and a tired woman sits down to breakfast with a hard day's work before her All the pans and jars must be washed, scalded, sunned.

My beloved constituency, wives and mothers—God's real angels upon earth—have I not always counseled the things that make for harmony at the home? Yet, now I am constrained to recommend a strike. Strike for housekeeping machinery and boycott your husbands till you get them! All these labor savers are in small sizes, adapted to dairies of ten cows as well as to those of a hundred—one of the butter-workers, for instance, having a size that handles ten pounds and costs six dollars.

To the gentleman who so kindly explained the mysteries of the cream separator, I confided my desire to see

COWS COMPETING FOR PRIZES.

These royal animals will not be accessible to visitors until the first of September. They are now in retirement engaged in a ninety days' contest of butter-making. The competitors are twenty-five Guernsey cows, twenty-five Jerseys, and the same number of Shorthorns. At the end of sixty days the Jerseys are well in the lead. Great care is taken to protect them from disturbance of every sort. Even the attendants speak softly in the stables, and strange voices are not tolerated at all. There was great agitation among the keepers at any rate when the members of the Editorial Congress visited the barns, and it was decided to rigidly exclude visitors during the rest of the test term. My unknown friend, however, proved to be no other than Mr. Samuel Moore, of Huntsville, Alabama, the owner of famous Lily Flagg, and you may be sure he holds the keys of Jerseydom. Upon condition that we "be very quiet," we—my niece and I—were admitted at six o'clock, the enchanted hour for milking. There are three milking times every day.

"Exile Lulu" has the prettiest head and face in the group. Whether or not she knows it I cannot say, but she turned her lovely eyes full upon us as we entered, passing behind her. Every one of them looks as if she could write poetry, and if we believed in transmigration, we might recognize our favorite poets of the past by scanning the soulful faces of these high-bred beauties of the stable.

"Bon Bessie" leads all in the present contest, but "Little Goldie" has made the largest weekly record known. One week she made a great effort, and the result was thirty-four pounds and eight ounces of prize butter. Lily Flagg, who for good reasons is not in the present contest, holds the gold cup for the best year's work of any cow in the world. During that period she gave 1,375 gallons of milk, which yielded 1,047 pounds and one-half ounce of butter. Besides she was "dry" one month, and had a calf that year (ending June 1, 1892). Her proud master gave a great in honor of the event, and Lily, with her calf, wore a light fawn-colored costume, and received her admiring friends upon the lawn with all the grace of a Southern belle.

The heaviest cheese-producer is Ida Marigold, a big spotted cow who claims purest Jersey blood, notwithstanding her huge proportions and dark skin spotted with white. She distinguished herself in the cheese contest made in the spring. Every animal can show her pedigree for at least four generations, thus fulfilling the law of heredity. Environment receives careful attention. The water given the cows is sterilized. Their food is of uniform quality and quantity, and is taken at regular hours, but they do not do as well as at home, Mr. Moore says, because they cannot have the open air and exercise, hence appetite and digestion are to some extent impaired. He is enthusiastic over the prospects of dairy interests in the South, believing that it will yet be the best dairy region of the nation, because the cows can run in open field ten months of the year, while the climate can be regulated to the milk by the use of ice.

N. B.—No smoking is allowed in the presence of the contesting cows.

THE W. C. T. U. EXHIBIT AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

BY EVA KINNEY GRIFFITH.

The organization room is a unique place. It is divided off into aisles and streets and platted diagonally so that each organization represented there has a little corner of its own. Directly in front of the east door is the W. C. T. U. corner. A large picture of Miss Willard on the wall makes one feel at home at once, and as one draws nearer and sees the pictures of Madam Willard, Lady Henry Somerset and other prominent workers, she realizes that she is on W. C. T. U. ground. The kindly welcome by our ladies who are there, helps any one to feel among friends.

The Great Petition, with the names pasted on strips of cloth, bound with red and blue and rolled into large bales, attracts attention more than anything else. A placard over it says there are three million names on it, and it is to be presented in turn to the leading governments of the world. Just think what a mammoth undertaking for women! People are gathering around the little table, putting down their names all the while.

A particular interest centers in the children's pledge cards in the W. C. T. U. corner. They make a pretty decoration in all their bright colors, and then it is so inspiring to think that the children of every nation are being protected from the liquor habit by being pledged against it and taught of its effects while they are young. The balance of the cards are in the Children's Building, on the second floor.

You all remember the Japanese bell which was made of more than a thousand tobacco pipes given by men who had stopped smoking. It was the thought of Tsuda Sen, now in Chicago, made while our beloved Mary Allen West was in Japan, and was first tolled at her funeral there. And, by the way, there is a fine portrait of our promoted editor, Miss West, made from one of the best likenesses she ever had, a photograph taken in Japan. The picture of the Temple on a beautiful white banner adorns the walls, and the banner of the Temperance Hospital hangs in the W. C. T. U. corner and pictures of its various rooms.

At the west end of the W. C. T. U. space is the exhibit of our own publishing house, the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association. In cases on the pillars are specimens of the fine work done in its printing department, and photographs of its various rooms; also original drawings of pictures that have been used in The Young Crusader and Oak and Ivy Leaf. There are bookcases showing the publications of the W. T. P. A., especially the bound volumes of THE UNION SIGNAL and its other papers, and a large amount of free literature is distributed there, both in English and in foreign languages. Beautiful souvenir leaflets and cards for the children have been provided, the money being obtained from the National treasury and the literature fund cards. The National and the World's W. C. T. U. have also very handsome souvenir booklets. Mr. Demorest has sent a generous supply and much has come from the departments of peace and school savings banks, etc. Then the Y's have their exquisite Y souvenir, and there are "outfits" from Australia, Japan and other countries.

A showcase contains the beautiful souvenir spoons for which orders can be given; also some of the daintiest publications of the W. T. P. A. and the Temple and fountain medals. Several of the state buildings—Nebraska, for instance—contain W. C. T. U. exhibits.

Willard fountain and the children's exhibit are described on the children's page.

A complete picture of the W. C. T. U. at the World's Fair cannot be given without mentioning the many white ribbons to be seen on the dresses of women from every state in the Union. Every society ever heard of has had its reunion or its congress, and its members were labeled with badges, that they may be recognized by members from other states. W. C. T. U. women were not behind in this matter. You could hardly walk the length of a building without seeing one or more white ribbons, and it always gives such a home feeling to see them.

THE TEACHER AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

BY MARY H. HUNT.

Every teacher will want to go—most will go. What ought we to see there? Not everything, for not many could spare the time. The wise sightseer, in such a place, does not fritter time and strength in wandering aimlessly from object to object, but selects in advance the line of subjects among which the time shall be divided, and thus each day attains helpful ideas, which the mind can retain for future use.

The past will touch the present there, until life will seem as one day, and history one page, as the story of human progress is objectively illustrated by the savage and his rude belongings, contrasted with the countless achievements of the most civilized of races.

But the true teacher, looking deeper for the causes that have led to those differences among the sons of men, will turn to the educational exhibits of the nations and compare their story, as told in the gallery,* with that of their productions and representatives on the floor of the great Manufactures and Liberal Arts Building and elsewhere in that "White City."

A thousand questions will suggest themselves as you compare and study, but you will go back to your work with renewed enthusiasm if you are able from your World's Fair study to carry away a clear idea of the relations that exist between the achievements, productions and character of the nations, governmental as well as individual, and the provision those nations have made for the education of their children.

SECTION IN THE W. C. T. U. EXHIBIT.

In studying the educational exhibits of our country, the patriotic American teacher will be apt to reverse the inquiry, asking, "What character, individual and governmental, what achievements and results will naturally follow the school work of the United States, as outlined in its educational exhibits?" With that question in mind, do not fail to visit, in section K, in the educational department, directly opposite Dr. Peabody's office, the Scientific Temperance exhibit, in the gallery of the Manufactures and Liberal Arts Building. The large map there, of the United States, with all the states in white which have made provision for the temperance education of their children through the public schools, and those in black which have not, shows at a glance the progress of this movement, that people from other lands have happily termed "The American Educational Method for the Prevention of Intemperance." Hanging against the plush that lines the walls, you will find on large cards, schemes tested and approved by experience for the introduction and pursuit of this study in public schools. The large variety of approved and indorsed temperance-physiology school text-books, beautifully graded to the capacities of all classes of pupils, fill a book-case and, for examination, lie within easy reach of the visitor, while a copy of the memorable Petition to Publishers, which secured their revision, hangs in accessible form near by. Another book-case is filled with department helps for teachers, viz.: "Topical Outlines of Study," "Schedules of Courses of Study," "Files of Monthly Advices," etc. These, as a whole, include directions for every possible phase of the teachers' and of temperance workers' efforts in this behalf.

SCIENTIFIC TEMPERANCE EXHIBIT.

Hanging over all is the great silk flag that hung over the exhibit of this educational work in the Paris Exposition, which was there awarded a gold medal. This flag divides the United States, or national, from the international part of the exhibit. From this flag depends the statement that "twelve million children in the United States are now under temperance education laws." Beyond this great historic flag, on the left, over the cases of books and department literature, hangs a long satin banner, decorated with gold tassels and fringes, bearing in letters of gold the often quoted sentence, "The star of hope of the temperance reform stands over the school-house." Grouped over this, at the top of the remaining space, are the flags of all the nations with which the department is working for the temperance education of their children. Directly under the British flag are copies of the temperance education laws, enacted during the past year by the three Maritime Provinces in the Dominion of Canada—Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island—with the Dominion shield and flags directly over them, and at the right, the coat-of-arms and flags of Sweden encircle the statement, "Sweden has a temperance law."

A railing extends toward you from the wall partition ten feet to the passage way, where it turns a sharp angle and runs parallel with the partition and passage, forming an enclosure twenty-seven feet long by ten wide. Against this railing, on the inside, is a table, or counter, three feet wide, on which stand framed copies of the temperance educational laws of the forty states and four territories of the United States of America now under this form of legislation, in two tiers. In addition to the law, each frame contains a statement of the four essentials for the enforcement of a temperance educational law and a statement from the state superintendent showing what is being done toward this fulfillment. The papers and essays prepared by the school children of the United States have a place in front of the law of the respective states.

Thus there is shown for each state: 1. What the law requires; 2. What should be done for its fulfillment; and 3. What is being done.

Altogether there is a space of one hundred and twenty-three square feet, well covered by this striking objective illustration of the great movement that has come to be called, as already said, "The American Educational Method for the Prevention of Intemperance."

We have inherited from our fathers what is called "a government of the people," with its corner-stone—a trinity of blessing—the home, the school and the church. Under this government has grown up the greatest republic the world has ever known, where probably more than in any other land under the sun every single individual comes nearest to having a fair chance.

The perpetuity of this government depends upon the capacity of its individual citizens for self-government. Few will question that this capacity for self-control is greatly menaced by the alcoholic and other narcotic habits of our times. In the presence of this exhibit the teacher will see that early education through the schools as to the evil nature and effects of these substances, before the appetite is formed for them, as a part of the study of general hygiene, is the remedy to which the people of this and other lands are looking with hope. Here all teachers will see, also, in laws enacted, text-books, courses and methods of study and all forms of help waiting for teacher and pupil, that the afternoon of the nineteenth century expects of them a seed-sowing of truth that will ripen in better living in a near-coming century.

If this hope is realized, and if, through this early education, the power of alcohol and other narcotics is broken and the power of self-control continues to crown our citizenship, and therefore the republic becomes more and more the glory of the nations, the teachers of this country will hear, 'mid rejoicing Te Deums, the "'Well done, good and faithful servant'; behold what great things for this and other lands have been wrought through you."

Hyde Park, Mass.

*Most of the educational exhibits are in the gallery of the Manufactures and Liberal Arts Building.

REAL service will not lose its nobleness.—Emerson.

"HUMANITY is slow. It is bulky. It is mentally, morally, as well as physically, lazy. The church of Jesus Christ is sometimes a whole century rising to an opportunity. There is this everlasting clog upon it of its own worldliness. We want to be saved, but we don't want to know too much about duty and moral obligation."

WHEN Jesus took the piece of money from the fish's mouth He asked, Whose image and superscription are these? Like coins, Christians are in circulation in the world, and the only question it asks of them is, Whose image and superscription do ye bear? "Ye are epistles known and read of all men," and whether you will or not, the only confession of faith the world wants of the church is the disciples it sends out. It will not ask whether a church believes in vicarious atonement when it sees its disciples, the pastor, the pew-holder and Sunday-school superintendent—vicariously sacrificing themselves day by day for the sins and sufferings of others.—Dr. Lorimer of Tremont Temple.

OLD ENGLISH HARVEST SONG.

BY R. D. BLACKMORE.

THE wheat, oh, the wheat, 'tis the ripening of the wheat!
All the day it has been hanging down its heavy head,
Bowing over on our bosoms with a beard of red;
'Tis the harvest, and the value makes the labor sweet.

(CHORUS.)

The wheat, oh, the wheat and the golden, golden wheat!
Here's to the wheat with the loaves upon the board!
We've been reaping all the day and we never will be beat,
But fetch it all to mow yard, and then we'll thank the Lord.

The oats, oh, the oats, 'tis the ripening of the oats!
All the day they have been dancing with their flakes of white,
Waiting for the girding hook to be the nag's delight!
Tis the harvest, let them dangle in their skirted coats.

(CHORUS.)

The oats, oh, the oats, and the silver, silver oats!
Here's to the oats with the backstone on the board!
We'll go among them when the barley has been laid in rotes;
When all is home to mow yard we'll kneel and thank the Lord.

The corn, oh, the corn, and the blessing of the corn!
Come unto the door, my lads, and look beneath the moon,
We can see on hill and valley how it is yelloon;
With a breadth of glory, as when our Lord was born.

(CHORUS.)

The corn, oh, the corn, and the yellow, mellow corn!
Thanks for the corn, with our bread upon the board!
So shall we acknowledge it before we reap the morn,
With our hands to heaven, and our knees unto the Lord.

—Lorna Doone.

A FLYING DUTCHMAN.

BY MRS. O. W. SCOTT.

"There! the thing is done at last!"

"I am humiliated to think we have to petition for what should be done spontaneously by the officers themselves."

"But it is better to get it this way than to have things as they were last year."

These were the sentiments of the three women who had just been interviewing the corporation having in charge the Cheswick County fair ground.

They were a committee from the Woman's Christian Temperance Union—Mrs. Dr. Carson, an influential lady, Mrs. Chauncey, eloquent in speech, and Miss Betty Morse, whom "everybody liked"; and their object was the banishment of all intoxicating drinks from the grounds during "fair week."

The honorable officers of the corporation had, on their first visit, invited them to put their desire in writing, which they gladly proceeded to do, making it very strong indeed. Not only did they ask that booths and stands for the sales of liquor be prohibited both inside and outside of the grounds, but covered "the person with bottles" as well.

When Mrs. Carson read it the ladies were delighted, and said, with triumphant faces, that they "couldn't see how anybody could get around that." They feared it was so radical that the corporation might object, but no! the brethren accepted it with smiles, and the petition became a law!

Then, with the hope of replenishing their treasury and of benefiting the hungry, thirsty crowd as well, the ladies rented a pleasant large room owned by the corporation and fitted it up for a lunch room. It was hung with bunting and green boughs, while neat tables were attractively arranged where one could sit and eat "a good square meal" or a sandwich with coffee or lemonade.

They also had a table of literature where were temperance papers and booklets for adults and children, leaflets and cards, especially pledge cards. They also had specimen jars of grape juice—so easily prepared by any housekeeper—with printed recipes for its making to give away. This was the thought of a minister's wife who hoped to reach some churches which still used fermented wine, and also to suggest a strengthening and agreeable drink for invalids.

The rear corner of their room was curtained off and placed in charge of two young ladies who received and checked any bags, shawls or bundles which weary women might be glad to have safely cared for by the payment of a nickel.

I am glad to say that the "leading members" of the union were there dispensing sandwiches and coffee with their own hands; and every one was happy as she thought of that "iron-clad law" which would prevent the sad scenes of drunkenness witnessed in previous years.

Before noon of the second day, however, a man came into the café whose appearance indicated anything but total abstinence. He became rude and talkative over his lunch, and Mrs. Chauncey begged her husband to show him the outer door.

"Now, Robert," said that lady after an ejectment had been peaceably effected, "what does this mean? We saw a company of rough-looking fellows persuading the man to come in. They came as far as the door and one of the ladies said they looked as if they had been drinking, but we thought it wasn't possible. Do you suppose any liquor is being sold on the grounds?"

"Oh, no, probably not! Don't you get nervous, Maria, we shall do the best we can but it isn't wise to see everything that's going on. Just keep your coffee hot and put plenty of ham in your sandwiches. That's woman's work," and with a genial and patronizing bow to the ladies he strode away.

But these women—strange mortals that they are—were not satisfied. The new law was their law, practically, and they felt that honest pride which characterizes law-makers, to see it enforced! They ventured to ask a policeman who came to the café if he had seen any indication of liquor selling, and he assured them in well-chosen brogue, "Dhry is the worrd!"

At length a lad who belonged to the L. T. L's came in and shyly yet eagerly made his way to Miss Morse. "Didn't you ladies get the men to promise there shouldn't be any beer sold here?" he inquired in a whisper.

"Yes, indeed!" responded Miss Morse. "Is anybody selling it? Tell me all about it, Johnnie."

"Well, the fellows say he ain't breaking the law, because there isn't any stand, nor bottles, nor wagon. It's a big German, and he's got a baby carriage full of cans and he pushes it, you see, so it ain't 'drawn or driven.'"

The next moment a group of indignant women were discussing this new evasion of law.

"I shall go right to the corporation!" exclaimed the president.

"It won't do any good if you do," said two or three at once; "they were only half in earnest, and don't you see, we didn't specify baby carriages and tin cans?"

"Let us see the police, then," said Miss Morse.

"Police!" echoed Mrs. Chauncey. "They have all got their blinders on to-day. I see now that we didn't know how to write a paper that would cover everything, and I dare say some of those directors are laughing in their sleeves this very minute over our blunders. But I'm not afraid of that big German, and I propose to police him off the grounds ourselves. Who will go with me?"

"I will," and "I will," responded Mrs. Carson and Miss Morse; and without removing their white aprons they started.

Meanwhile, Johnnie, keen for fun, had joined his companions and away they scurried through the sweet fern and blueberry bushes toward a far corner of the ground where scrub oaks grew, spreading the news as they went.

Immediately a line of men and boys was seen making all haste toward the "grand stand," and away from the advancing foe.

"Hans, the women are coming out here to see to you," cried the boys, reaching the corner.

"The vimmins! Shall they interferes with mine pizness?" responded the German raising himself in sudden alarm. A vision of white aprons was seen approaching, while his late friends and patrons were disappearing in the distance. Hans was seized with a panic: and dropping his pint measure he bounded toward the nearest gate and then away across a pasture out of sight, a half dozen young "teetotalers" cheering him on, and calling: "Track! track!"

The three ladies were near enough to witness this ignominious flight and as soon as they recovered from their convulsive laughter, Mrs. Chauncey exclaimed: "Don't tell me the 'Flying Dutchman' was a myth! We have seen him with our own eyes."

They soon surrounded the deep, wicker baby-carriage, from which the seat had been removed, which held the stock in trade of the saloon which "went with a push.'

"I confiscate this vehicle with its contents, in the name of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union," said Mrs. Carson.

"Amen! and in the name of the baby who has been dethroned by beer," added Miss Morse.

Then the boys took the cans and with willing hands emptied them upon the ground. After this work was done they were replaced, and the carriage was pushed out into the pasture where the Flying Dutchman had last been seen.

The ladies returned quietly to their work, but in some way the story was circulated, and they soon found that "public sentiment" supported them. In fact, somebody's decisive action seems to be the only test which discovers the strength of that ever-varying "sentiment."

"Well, well!" said Mr. Chauncey, as he came in for lunch, "Perhaps you ladies didn't make a conspicuous success with your law, but it seems to be all right if you're only around to enforce it."

"Wait till next year!" rejoined his wife. "We are learning!"

Her husband laughed good-naturedly. "Oh, you're 'way up' now," said he, "but the great question amongst the men is whether Hans is still running."

Willimantic, Conn.

WOMAN ON THE FARM.

BY H. B. KELLS.

The most pathetic sight on earth, not excepting a sick baby, is the knotted, bent back of the woman who has spent the best years of her life as the so-called mistress of a farm. There is but one thing that matches it and that is her face, large-eyed, withered, rigid, dead; she has borne her children, suffered her woman's hope and baptism of pain, and has done the work every day that would have broken down three men. When the farm hand came in from the field he ruminated on the doorstep or with his feet on the hearth. She had the dishes to wash, the children to put to bed and then sat down with the family mending basket. In the early days she had her ambitions for herself and her children and her husband; but hard work and that mortgage on the farm have eaten out her heart, and now with a sort of hopeless, bovine patience she looks on children grown up to just what she did not wish, while her immortal hope has dwindled to one great yearning for rest. Is there nothing better for the woman of the American farm? No remedy? There is. Let her begin her life, not only as the farmer's wife, but as his partner in business. There are money-making interests on a farm which are forever undeveloped unless the woman makes them evolute; but first and chief it is necessary, unless the farmer's wife will settle down to be only the head "girl" of the concern without a dollar of wages—working for her victuals and clothes—that she shall manage some cash producing business and be recognized as a producer. Such a position is imperative to prevent the whole investment of the farm being risked in one-sided farming, and that the man's side, for however wise his management, it represents only the masculine idea. There are capabilities in a woman for organizing and utilizing money-making opportunities on a farm that would otherwise go to waste. Her main obstacles are that she will not plan broadly enough, will not thoroughly acquaint herself with business details and will be too timid to assume financial responsibility in the face of the wet-blanketing her propositions will get nine times out of ten.

But in every direction women have demonstrated their ability as farm producers. It is a well-recognized fact that Southern women-planters are usually a success, and often make plantations "pay" where the husband has succeeded only in increasing the mortgage and dying of discouragement. One instance will suffice. A planter's wife was left with a Mississippi river plantation, under $23,000 mortgage, and a family of five children, just ready for school and college. The two years' illness of her husband had given her a grasp of the business. After his death, when the commission merchant, a came up to "close her out," the improved condition of the place and the wisdom of her plans caused him to say: "I'll advance all the money you want this year." At the end of three years she had paid the mortgage, sent her sons and daughters to college, and her plantation was universally confessed to be the best improved one in the county. Not very long after she married the young man whom she had placed in charge of a store she opened.

God alone can fathom the mysteries of a nature that conceived it needed a partner in such success. It only proves that "natur' will caper" in the face of any power of business or ballot, and that the family instincts of women reign "till death do us part," notwithstanding the fears of some timid men.

The dairy scientifically managed affords work for women's hands and brains. One young woman in Scotland became so proficient she was engaged to give a course of dairy instruction in Aberdeenshire, which was deemed so valuable she was permanently retained in that district. Cheese and butter offer a large field. The culture of bees, silk-worms, poultry, eggs, beef-cattle, sheep and wool, and even horses has been successfully manipulated by enterprising women. A woman near Los Angeles, California, has made a wondrous success of a rose farm, the product being attar of roses for the market. The May number of the Californian Illustrated tells of other women there, mostly Southerners, thrown on their own resources, who have become farmers of note, taking care to be first in market, making neat and secure packing a specialty, and studying the problem of finding hardy trees and flowers, choosing those which can best stand the invasion of moth and disease. The success of one in horticulture is thus described:

"Mrs. Henry Barroillhet, the widow of a San Francisco banker, who gave up his great fortune on the failure of his bank, went resolutely to work to supply the San Francisco market with flowers. She now owns one hundred and forty acres of fine land, all in cultivation. Seven acres are in orchard. Five acres are in violets, with an increase of fifteen more this autumn. Seven acres are in chrysanthemums, while roses, lilies and other flowers come in for a big share of the acreage. Two thousand eucalyptus trees, three thousand pines and sequoias and other trees are very profitable, the leaves and branches being used as evergreens in decoration. The best testimonial to the beauty of her flowers and the favor with which they are regarded by San Francisco is the fact that about eight thousand chrysanthemums, two thousand bunches of violets, eight hundred to one thousand Duchesse de Brabant roses, to say nothing of other varieties, are daily shipped during their seasons. Her specialty, however, is in violets, for which she receives $2.50 per dozen bunches. Chrysanthemums bring from one to five cents apiece, governed by size rather than color or beauty. This season there were eighteen thousand chrysanthemum plants in bloom, including two hundred and seventy-five of the finest Japanese varieties, beautiful beyond description. This flower plantation is described as a perfect Eden, and the proprietress personally attends to every detail of irrigation, cultivation, gathering, packing and shipping."

SEEDING DOWN THE FIELD.

BY EVA JONES.

The Winchester W. C. T. U. decided to take a new departure. Mrs. Richards, superintendent of temperance literature, proposed it. The union had invested in a complete sample list of leaflets published by the W. T. P. A., and Mrs. Richards, having them in charge, had been reading them, and this is what she said to the sisters at one of their meetings:

"You see I have tacked them six or eight in a packet, book fashion, and I propose that we each take a packet home and study it, and think where and how we can use it. It is just like sample seed of the most valuable sort, and I wish that we might send for it in quantity. No, I do not mean haphazard scattering. This seed seems too precious not to put some care and pains into the planting. I move that for the coming week we each try to read one leaflet a day, prayerfully and earnestly thinking to whom we might give that special leaflet, either in person or by letter, adding our own personal word of sympathy, of interest, of encouragement. Then, that we make out our list of leaflets which we have so determined to use, that the corresponding secretary at next meeting gather the entire list and send for it, using funds from the treasury. Then let us at every meeting specially remember to ask God's blessing on this sowing and to pray for a bountiful harvest. And I move that at each meeting we bring back the packet we have read, and from which we have made out such a list as the Spirit has directed us to, and take a fresh packet, thus continually carrying the work on, if, upon trial, it shall seem good to do."

"Madam President, I second the motion," said Mrs. Baxter. "I think it would be lovely work to scatter such seed for usefulness in loving fashion."

The motion prevailed, and then a motion was carried that at the next meeting each should have opportunity to tell what specially valuable leaflets she had found and the good each one was adapted to do.

That next meeting was brimful of interest and enthusiam. Every woman had chosen at least one leaflet and had one soul in mind to whom she was anxious to offer it.

"Cousin Jennie," said Mrs. Horton, "is so busy and conscientious in home and church work, and this one, 'Busy Women and the W. C. T. U.,' just puts the appeal for her in the nicest way. I hope it will influence her to join the union."

"I know a good man who needs this leaflet, 'A Suffrage Question-box,'" said Mrs. Thomas. "He is keen and logical for all his prejudice against equal suffrage, and this is short as well as convincing, so I know he will read it."

"And I am going to give 'Society and Society Women' to a dear girl friend of mine, just graduated from school. She cannot help loving and believing Miss Willard's sweet logic about the best sort of living."

"There is one little tract," said white-haired Grandma Dean, "called 'Blood Will Tell' that I mean to send to a young man I know and am anxious for. He idolizes his wife and baby. I will simply write on the margin, 'Please read, for the sake of one who cares very much for you.' I shall pray and hope that it will be God's means of enlightening and blessing him and his."

"The leaflet in my packet that has done me most good," said young Mrs. Benton, "is that queer titled one, 'Pants Are Made for Boys,—Not Boys for Pants.' I mean that Johnnie and Sam shall be thankful the rest of their lives that I have found out that boys are the main thing—pants secondary; and I know of two dear friends who, I believe, will thank me for the blessed lesson they will find in it."

"Beer and the Brain" was just what Mrs. Ketchum wanted for a young cousin who had gone into a German community to be a machine agent, and whose arguments against lager needed reënforcing.

Mrs. Thompson wanted three of "The Drinker's Thermometer." She would give them with a kindly, earnest word to three friends whom she was trying to persuade to stand for total abstinence.

But I cannot begin to tell you of all the treasures that had been found and listed for use from that first reading of packets. Sixty-three leaflets were wanted that week, and the cost would be about fifty cents.

"But if we continue at this rate, and spend fifty cents a week, can our union afford it?" said Mrs. Templeton. "It will be twenty-five dollars or more a year and there are only twenty-three members of us."

"I have been thinking of that," said Mrs. Richards, "and if there is anything we can afford to earn and spend money for, it is surely for seed, for there is always more or less of a harvest. And as one means of getting money for buying leaflets, I move that we have public meetings, perhaps twice a quarter, the literary program for which shall be worked out from some of these same leaflets, taking the form of recited extracts, improvised dialogues, essays and discussion of special subjects, not reading the leaflets to the audience—they will quickly tire of that—but ourselves giving the ideas we find in such abundance here. The collections from a few such meetings would buy a great many leaflets, to say nothing of the good the meetings would be to the public and to us."

That was seven months ago, and the use of leaflets by the Winchester W. C. T. U. has been steady and most blessed, both to givers and receivers. Directly through their influence ten active and seven honorary members have been added to the union. Four successful public meetings have been held, popular for the wealth and variety of ideas furnished, and generous in point of collections. The union is every day growing in favor, and acquiring a reputation for "doing something," and their weekly meetings are warm with thankful praise for the harvest.

DELIGHTFUL DRINKS.

BY ONE WHO KNOWS.

At harvest times and on other busy occasions, and during sickness on the farm, when men and teams and money are too scarce to be spared to hunt up refreshments, and when cider and beer or something stronger are apt to seem "handier"—the "forehanded" farmer's wife ought to be ready with something more delightfully refreshing and non-intoxicating.

Every family should keep on the pantry shelves wild cherry phosphate, which can be found bottled in quarts, in all leading grocery-houses. A teaspoonful in a tumbler of water with two teaspoons of sugar, makes a healthful, appetizing, acid drink, ready for any emergency, and of marvelous cheapness.

No good housewife should fail to store her shelves with gallons of the unfermented wine made from the following recipe. There would be fewer heartaches, fewer fatal sunstrokes, and more happy homes if farmers labeled these things "necessities"—as much so as the family cow—and provided accordingly.

GRAPE JUICE.

Pick over and wash your grapes—Concords are said to be preferable. Put them in your porcelain kettle with just water enough to prevent sticking. When the skins crack, remove from fire, pour into a flannel bag, not more than a quart at once, and press out the juice. Add nearly half as much sugar as juice and return to the kettle. When the sugar is all dissolved and the juice boiling, pour into cans and seal exactly as you seal fruit. Pint cans are preferable. When opened this can be diluted with water to suit the taste, and will keep perfectly sweet for several days in a cool place. For medicinal and sacramental purposes this juice is more easily prepared and vastly better than the diluted grape jelly used by so many.

MEAT OR VEGETABLES FOR THE DRINK APPETITE?

BY A VEGETARIAN.

A London paper has been "writing up" a vegetarian "'bus driver" who for three years has not tasted fish or flesh, nor swallowed a drop of intoxicating drink. "I had set my heart (writes a lady representative of The Vegetarian) upon finding representative vegetarians in every class of life, and of learning for the benefit of my readers what was the motive which induced them to abandon kreophagy; but I found the enterprise more difficult than I had imagined.

It required more courage than I possessed to stop every policeman I met with the query, Are you a vegetarian? I could hardly accost each postman on his rounds with the question, Do you draw the line at fish or eggs? Still less could I dog the unfortunate chimney-sweep into his favorite eating-place, or follow the steps of the lion-tamer to discover what was the foundation of his courage. I was beginning to despair of attaining my object, when one hot night, lately, I secured my favorite place—the box-seat on a 'bus.

The driver was a stalwart and friendly specimen of his tribe, and we were soon chatting happily about horses, etc. As I had to move nearer to him to make room for a traveler I noticed his pocket bulged as if with apples. A woman's instincts are rarely wrong. Like lightning flashed the conviction, here's a vegetarian, and I bided my chance.

Right in my first surmise I did not fear for a second, and a few leading remarks soon won from him the confession that for three years neither fish, flesh nor ale had passed his lips. A little further persuasion, and I was in possession of the following particulars, which I record almost exactly in his own words:

"It was all because of my sister that I gave up butcher's meat," he began. "She has been in a hospital for throat disease from too much talking, and one of the ladies who came to visit the patients was always talking about the milk diet. It was the good to her complexion that first took Jane, I think; for you ladies, begging your pardon, Miss, will go any lengths to cultivate a nice appearance. Anyways, she improved wonderful, there's no denyin' that; and, when she was cured, she asked the lady to come and see us, and later, the lady took her into service to train for a cook, and there Jane became mighty clever in making tasty dishes without a bit of meat in 'em, and her milk puddings were that nice you cared for nothing else when you once see'd them.

"She was always at us to adopt the diet, but I am a thoughtful sort of a chap and slow to change. I have been on this run, Miss, six years—would you believe it?—for, ses I to the master at the time of the strike, 'Things are bad, there's no denyin', but why make 'em worse? Sit still and bear it, and you may live to see things mend, but no good comes of agitation.' 'You're uncommon sensible,' ses he; and I stuck to my post, and here I am.

"Well, Miss, about Jane; she never let me alone about my pot of ale and my pound of steak, and if ever I complained of indigestion or my liver out of order, she always made a little sniff and said: What could I expect but bad blood with stuffing on dead flesh, and so on. She wasn't complimentary about my inside, I can tell you, and when I said, to shut her up, that such living might suit her, but would be the death of me, she answered sharp: 'Don't talk nonsense! What's sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander.'

"Women are very much like horses, Miss," continued my Jehu, flicking his whip; "give them their head, and no brake on earth will stop them, and Jane was that in earnest she would have liked to chuck every bit of meat in the house in the sea. She taught mother to take porridge proper, and I had it for breakfast every morning. She stuffed my pockets with apples every day, and somehow I found they took the thirst away and made me feel clean-like inside.

"Bit by bit I began to notice I was just as strong, and a good lot brighter than I used to be, and ses I to myself: 'I'm blest if there ain't somethin' in it.' And another thing I noticed, Miss," he went on, in a shamefaced way, lowering his voice to a confidential whisper, "I got better tempered. Not that I was a bad sort before, as men go. I didn't drink often, and my women folks had seldom to complain of a fling; but still there was 'room for improvement,' as the copybooks say.

"Now this set me thinking, and when I begin to think I am not satisfied till I get to the bottom. It is healthier, I thinks, it is cheaper, then it must be righter. So I dropped meat altogether, and took to porridge and fruit and milk puddings. Onions I am partial to, and mother has a way of doing them up with potatoes that is very tasty. A dash of lemon in my tea I now prefer to rum, and though I am not a teetotaler, as teetotalers have it, that is, not on principle, I find I don't care about it, now—it fell away of itself like."

Lift up your eyes and look on the fields; for they are white already to harvest.—John 4:35.

STATE AND COUNTY FAIRS.

The W. C. T. U. must be—and it is its purpose to be—ubiquitous as the drink traffic. Its much criticised "do-everything" policy necessarily involves "be-everywhere" methods, and is the principle that called into being its fair department of work. The world has learned that W. C. T. U. women not only pray earnestly, but that they watch ceaselessly and act promptly. And because the "trail of the serpent" is over our agricultural fairs, expositions and kindred gatherings, our workers must be on hand to counteract as far as possible its vicious and contaminating influence.

Hence, wherever a fair—county, state, national or world's—draws great masses together, there a detachment of the white-ribbon army is sure to be found doing valiant service for God and Home and Humanity.

The time was when the W. C. T. U. was not the powerful and widely-known organization it is to-day, and its pioneers in this branch of work found it no easy matter to secure attention and practical recognition from the authorities of state and county fairs. But with characteristic persistency our women continued to drive the entering wedge, and to-day W. C. T. U. headquarters are a popular rallying point at all fairs, its attractive booths and homelike lunch rooms being important features of these gatherings, from the county fair on the far western prairie to the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago. In fact, the influence of the W. C. T. U. is found to be so beneficial that managers of old settlers' picnics, harvest home festivals and state and county fairs gladly welcome our women, often seek their coöperation, and in some cases even assign them places on the boards of control.

Our workers are quick to recognize and to take advantage of these valuable opportunities for the forcible presentation of our cause. A state or county fair furnishes vast audiences ready to hand, the education of which along the lines of temperance work involves comparatively little expenditure of time or money on their part.

The brain of the W. C. T. U. woman, be she country or city bred, is peculiarly fertile in devising ways and means for bringing about the "arrest of thought," and an agricultural fair is an effective background for object lessons portraying the evils of the liquor traffic, and emphasizing the necessity of greater protection for the homes of our land.

Fair grounds are points of vantage which we must make special effort to seize and to utilize in the most telling manner. For, as our world's superintendent of fairs says, "If we are ever to secure the prohibition of the liquor traffic, the people who attend just this sort of gatherings are the ones to be converted, for only one-fifth of our voters are massed in cities, leaving four-fifths to the rural districts, and to these we must look for the protection of our homes and the salvation of the republic from the curse of the liquor traffic."

Experience teaches that temperance work in country districts is productive of more satisfactory results, and is, therefore, more encouraging to the worker than the same amount of effort in the city. Farmers' wives, when they understand W. C. T. U. aims and purposes, are usually ready, often eager, to lend a hand. And the farmers themselves, when they know what the white-ribbon movement is doing for humanity, are, as a class, glad to "help the cause along," glad to feel that their wives and daughters form parts of a link in the great chain which encircles the globe, and binds the Christian womanhood of the world in one mighty force for home protection and for the uplift of the race.

Temperance work in towns and cities necessarily consists largely of rescue work, and this must continue to be the case as long as the drink evil exists. But when it comes to effort in the direction of state and national prohibition, would it not be wise to concentrate our forces more than we do upon the "rural districts"?

For reasons that are obvious it is an immense advantage to have W. C. T. U. women on committees of arrangement and especially on the committee to secure speakers. As before intimated, our organization in these days is the recipient of popular respect and good-will, and any request coming from state or county union will at least receive courteous consideration at the hands of the powers that be.

By thus taking "time by the forelock" the influence of the W. C. T. U. will be more potent in excluding from the fair grounds many obnoxious features, which otherwise are sure to creep in, and serve as traps for the unwary.

That state and county fairs are occasions which the literature department will not fail to make the most of, goes without saying, nor do our women need to be reminded that seed from the W. T. P. A. sown in such fertile soil will bring forth sixty and a hundred fold.

The active coöperation of L. T. L's and of the invaluable Y's is a sine qua non of every state and county fair, methods of which will readily suggest themselves to the resourceful minds of W. C. T. U. women.

Among the multitudinous devices for the dissemination of prohibition principles on fair grounds let us not forget to provide an abundance of pure, cold drinking water for man and beast. If a county or local union do nothing more than this, its fair department will not have lived in vain.

HOW CAN THE WORK OF THE W. C. T. U. BE CARRIED ON IN THE RURAL DISTRICTS?

The difficulty of carrying on any organized work among a scattered population is evident at a glance, and too fully appreciated by experience to need statement. The causes which somewhat protect country life from the vices of the city also to the same degree shut out from the former the influences of moral and social reform peculiar to the age and leave it behind the city in all kinds of progress. This state of things in an aggravated form is what has made true the saying that "Paris is France." He who reads the history of that nation does not desire that the great cities of America should be America; for, as Paris was France and the mob was Paris, so in our own land, the misgovernment of our cities makes them the plague spots of the nation.

The safety of our Republic lies in its unity, and this means a great deal more than the union of its various sections. It means also the union of its city and country populations. Can we but arouse the conscience of the rural population on the subject of the drink curse, we shall sweep the liquor traffic from the land. But to arouse their conscience these two things are needful; first, that they be brought to see the need of doing something, and second, that they be convinced that something can be done. "But how can they believe except they hear, and how shall they hear without a preacher?" The W. C. T. U. knows full well the almost insurmountable barriers in the way of keeping up local unions among this class of people. In some instances it is done, and we believe might be done even oftener, but such unions are the rare exception. In such communities Loyal Temperance Legions are sometimes kept up by a devoted woman in connection with the Sabbath-school and are, we think, the easiest kind of temperance work that can be carried on in country districts, but the question still remains, how is the great mass of our country population to be interested in temperance? Our fair work is one of the lines specially adapted to this purpose, and for that reason we urge the local unions of the towns and cities to make strenuous efforts whenever the opportunity offers in this line of work.

It is true that our county fairs have degenerated very largely into horse-races, but it is still the case that people from all over the county flock to these fairs less to see the exhibits (which in too many instances of late are conspicuous for their absence) than to meet friends from other parts of the county. This, we believe, is the local union's opportunity. An attractive booth with plenty of good temperance literature for free distribution, or better still, where it can be done, good refreshments furnished at a price to draw with the aforesaid literature will reach many people whom it would be difficult to reach in any other way.

Recently, too, a new field of opportunity is opening whose importance we cannot emphasize too strongly. It lies in the great Chautauqua movement. It would be impossible to overestimate the value of the Chautauqua idea. That it meets an intellectual and religious need of the present is conclusively proved by the ubiquity of the Chautauqua assembly. Everywhere, from the lakes to the gulf, and from the Atlantic to the Pacific, these assemblies are springing up, furnished with the best of schools along all lines of science and literature, the finest speakers that the nation affords on their platforms, and artists of the highest quality as their musicians. The special value of these Chautauquas lies in the fact that to so large a degree they reach all classes of society. In some of the older and wealthier portions of the country the Chautauqua is, to a large degree, a "fashionable resort." At the same time the Chautauqua idea is in itself such a recognition of the paramount value of heart and brain that fashion is not able to drive from these assemblies the poorer classes. To a greater degree than in any other modern institution, "the rich and the poor meet together" in the Chautauquas.

You will find there, in large numbers, mothers and children in the homely garb of the struggling farmer's family. The promise of the future that is contained in this fact of people, whose every-day life is a struggle for existence, spending their hard-earned and harder-saved money for the higher intellectual and religious training of themselves and their children, we need not dwell upon, but one point the white-ribboner should not lose, and that is that here is an open door through which our temperance host may capture the nation. Here let us mass our forces, and by well conducted schools of methods temperance talking and temperance literature influence in three weeks hundreds of scattered homes, which otherwise it would require months of labor to reach.

WHAT OUR WORKERS SAY ABOUT FAIRS.

In response to a request in our columns, the following suggestions have come from tests which have "success" written all over them. With such incentives the county and state fair ground should be the grand bivouac for our principles this autumn. We especially say, let every woman see to it that she personally secures a regular and honorary member each day of her fair, and sentiment will be crystallized before it can vaporize in the heat of the daily life-battle.

INOCULATE THE PASSERS-BY WITH LITERATURE.

A tent being provided, "W. C. T. U. Resting Place" is inscribed on it, and "Packages guarded for 5 cents," placarded in front. A quantity of our leaflets are folded separately for convenient slipping into coat pockets, and few refuse them. Water from a cold spring is at hand for everybody. EMILY C. BLACKMAN.

Montrose, Pa.

A WISE CAUTION.

It is well to put money in our purses, as serving lunches and dinners on fair grounds often does. But do not large undertakings of this sort sometimes engross our workers to the exclusion of the educative work we should do on such occasions? Less pretentious enterprises and more personal work to create sentiment would win more followers, perhaps? MRS. H. ROSCOE EDGETT,

Supt. Fair Dept., N. Y. W. C. T. U.

LET LITERATURE TAKE A DRIVE.

Individuals bent on pleasure and already burdened crumple up literature and leave it on the grounds, so our union planned a new way which has been a success. We place a roll under the seat cushions in each vehicle in attendance. This literature will reach home, and all other excitement gone, will be a welcome diversion.

"THE HOUSE THAT JACK BUILT"

Was the device adopted by Oneida, N. Y., W. C. T. U. for an attraction at the fair. Jack appeared in costume at the window, on the ring of a bell, and sold toys which had been bought at wholesale. Near by in an evergreen booth Jill dealt out bonbons and lemonade. Opposite "Over the Brook to Grandmamma's" was the sign which led by the water's edge to the grandam's reception-room where she entertained her visitors at twenty-five cents a head. It all paid.

GENESEE COUNTY WINS HONORS.

The fair department has been our greatest success. We began in a small tent, checking parcels, selling books and fancy articles, and distributing literature, expenses being small and gains corresponding. Afterward we purchased the ice-cream privilege of the grounds, including lemonade and fruit. On a cold day the lemonade is hot, and finds ready market. Thousands of pages of literature are distributed. Year by year our ventures and our balances have increased. This year the fair directors, early in the season, offered us the whole dining privilege of the grounds at a very low sum. Calling upon the county union for aid we are preparing for this responsibility, the fair directorate, in the meantime, building us a dining hall.

ILLINOIS "HOLDS THE FORT."

The fair ground is the best place in the world for our work to reach country women. The controlling power of this country is in the rural populations, and to set women thinking in W. C. T. U's, and children in L. T. L's, means final victory for total abstinence and prohibition. Fayette county, Ill., W. C. T. U. has a building which will accommodate two hundred persons and cost $200. There is an organ inside and a flag-pole on top, with Old Glory floating in the breeze. Here regular services for W. C. T. U., announced on a bulletin board, are conducted, including suffrage meetings; reading and cooking contests are part of the attraction; old women and babies, invalids and mothers, men and boys and young girls, therefore, love to rest here; and here we work valiantly to add to our membership, scattering literature and advertising our work on a page of the fair catalogue. Sometimes premiums have been offered for the best essay on tobacco and temperance, and for declamations from children under a certain age. Surely a fair directorship should take as much interest in the improvement of human stock as in calves and colts and little pigs!

HOW MICHIGAN WEAVES THE STORY.

When the Northeastern fair, representing several counties, was held in Flint, Mich., the women of the county had a booth. It was beautiful, with fancy articles made by W. C. T. U. women; it was helpful, by a chart from the public schools, showing the anatomy of the human body, and all day, each of the four days, some women explained the effects of alcohol on these delicate organs and told of the grand work of Mary Hunt to have this taught in public schools. There were also artistic designs of flowers, and other women told the story of the flower mission and the meaning of "W. C. T. U." beautifully arranged in carnations. Models of the Temple called out question and answer. The booth strung with L. T. L. cards brought in pledge signers and earnest listeners by the hundred. None of the booths had a larger crowd around them, and at night the tired workers sought rest, leaving the result with God. One object lesson was there, flat whisky bottles, hand painted, tied with ribbons, in a frame—"A better use;" some pledge signing was the result. Then we had quantities of W. T. P. A. literature, and the faithful committee visiting each farmer's wagon gave these as an advertisement of our wares, while we faithfully told the W. C. T. U. story, each repetition gathering interest, because of the vital principle underlying our work.

MRS. C. H. JOHNSON, State Rec. Sec.

Flint, Mich.

PRACTICAL FAIR WORK.

At the New England fair, which is held in Worcester, our union hires two large restaurants for which it pays $500 rent, for the four days during which the fair is held. In one regular meals are served; the other one is divided into sections, containing an ice cream parlor, a reception room, a restaurant where oysters and clam-chowders are served, and a lunch-room. The cooking, serving, and waiting on the tables is done by members of the union. In September, 1892, we had nearly two hundred regular boarders, and we fed nearly seven thousand people. We publish a five thousand edition of an eight page paper, called the Fair Advertiser, and distribute thousands of pages of temperance literature, also copies of THE UNION SIGNAL and Our Message. We are busily engaged now, arranging for the September fair. Beginning six years ago with a tent, we have now the largest restaurant on the grounds; our patronage is the best in number and character. We board the officers of the New England and Local Agricultural Societies, and also entertain the Governor of the state and other guests.

Tuesday, the second day of the fair this year, is to be "Woman's Day" when the different women's societies are to be represented. The principal speaker for the W. C. T. U. will be Mrs. Mary A. Livermore. We have the satisfaction of feeling that besides a balance for our treasury, our influence has been felt and we look for an increased temperance sentiment.

HELEN DECAMP,
County and Local Supt. of Fair Work.

Worcester, Mass.

AN IDEA WORTH KEEPING.

Onondaga county W. C. T. U. has a standing fair committee of nine women—three go out and three are elected annually. This committee has charge of all fair work and believes there is but one way to make it succeed—work, work, work! Last year it was decreed to risk no more money or health in tents, and to build a dining hall on state fair grounds, near Syracuse, N. Y. Only $100 was in the bank and $500 must be in hand and the hall done by September 8, and it was not begun August 16—yet it was done in time. Some of the local unions contributed cash, and we sold white ribbon tickets conferring privileges of the hall for three years, for one dollar. Many persons would rather pay that price than stand in a shower with their Sunday hats on. The county unions generously provided provisions and helpers. Then we talked up our work as if failure were impossible. We took a dinner privilege but served good lunches on the European plan, at moderate prices; this pays best. Our toil was repaid a hundredfold by the sick, and tired, hungry men and women who would say: "My mother is a W. C. T. U. woman, and this seems like home."

The management at Williams' Grove, Pa., kindly gave us a cottage on Grange Avenue, one of the most prominent positions upon the ground. This cottage was attractively furnished; upon the outside in bronze was the familiar monogram "W. C. T. U." while the stars and stripes were conspicuous everywhere; upon the walls of the interior hung the familiar faces of our leaders. The Temple came in for a large share of admiration. We kept open house the entire week, distributing thousands of pages of literature and securing subscribers for our state and National papers. Visitors to the Grange will find us doing business at the old stand on Grange Avenue. Tuesday, August 29, will be Temperance day. Mrs. Ella A. Boole, of New York, will be the W. C. T. U. speaker.

TO MANY of our readers far removed from the scene of action the Sunday question is, as one expresses it, "all a muddle." Now the Fair is open, now closed, now open again. In this see-saw game between the Sunday-openers and Sunday-closers, the former are at present writing "up" and the latter "down"; but we cannot tell what a day may bring forth. The cause for all this vacillation which is heaping world-wide ridicule upon the management may be stated in a word—the eagerness of the Directory to serve Mammon. Financial necessity, not conscientious scruples, brought about Sunday closing. The cause which led to the reopening after one Sunday's closing is briefly this: The Sunday openers, having brought suit in the name of one, Clingman, citizen and stockholder, secured an injunction from the superior court restraining the Board of Directors from closing the gates upon the ground that the state and South Park Board had given Jackson Park to the people forever, and that no legislation could annul the gift. The Directory, supposing this injunction to have been rendered null and void by an amendment, gave the order for closing, and consequently was arraigned before Judge Stein for contempt of court, the fines imposed amounting in the aggregate to five thousand three hundred and fifty dollars. An appeal has been taken and the law-breakers are at large. As regards the injunction, their attorney will ask the court to dismiss it. In case of refusal the gates will necessarily remain open on Sunday, as the Fair would be over before a decision could be reached. Meanwhile the World's Fair officials, having forfeited the confidence and respect of both Sunday-openers and Sunday-closers, find themselves in the humiliating position of culprits under bond, and the Christian people as churches and church societies wait to be assured one way or the other on the Sunday question before giving it moral and financial support.

It is well for us to remember, in these days when so much is said about "a dead Christianity" having the form but not the power (which criticism, alas! we know is true so often) that, as a hard, practical fact there cannot be found on the earth's surface ten miles square in which women are secure from assault, and men from slaughter, except the "living gospel" is known, and has done its leavening work inside that ten miles. For it is true now as it has been and will ever be that "by day and night unconsciously the heart lives by a faith that lips deny—God knoweth why!" The very men who speak most bitterly against the Christian religion stand up to do so in peaceable, happy, cleanly conditions that, in so far as they are peaceable, happy and cleanly, owe their condition to Christianity, to the heroic martyr, to the faithful pioneer missionary, to the earnest and true minister, to the patient Sunday-school teacher, to the loyal, loving-hearted mother. The mellow traits of brotherly kindness in many of the men who decry Christ are the ripe fruits of generations of Christian living, the inheritance of faith and faithfulness and prayer and praise.

The House of Commons did not adjourn this year for the Derby horserace, and I am told the number of shows and drinking booths on the course has been reduced one-half. Years ago the four-in-hand coaches extended for a quarter of a mile; this year there was but one. This is the testimony of a man who has witnessed thirty-six Derby days. Over fifty thousand copies of tracts and other literature were circulated by men sent out by Rev. Hugh Price Hughes. It has been wisely said by one who was there: "If the Prince of Wales could be persuaded to keep away from these dreadful scenes, in my opinion they would soon cease."

It is a sin not to be rich if a man can become so by a diligent use of his God-given opportunities. Money is power, and it is man's duty to make money as a means for purposes of rational enjoyment and humanitarian purposes. It is a good thing for a man to have to make his fortune, for while he is doing so the fortune is making the man, but there are many things besides money a man can be wealthy in. These are children, for example, and health, and treasures of thought, and faith.

Temperance people will feel the strongest interest in the success of Dr. Nansen, the intrepid young explorer, who has recently set sail from Christiania on his long talked-of expedition to the North Pole. Dr. Nansen has already made a famous exploration in Greenland, and has learned to sleep in the snow in a bag of skins. In all of his expeditions neither he nor his comrades have allowed a drop of alcohol to pass their lips.

We hear it continually repeated in these days that good men do not go to the caucuses. In our judgment, the real reason is, because good men do not enjoy going where there are no good women; good men remain at home with their families. When good women are invited to take part in caucuses, then they will gladly go, and where they go the good men will follow. And what is most of all, the glory of this nation is that good men and women hold the balance of power in this country; nay, more than that, they form a majority.

Rabbinical laws required every Jew to teach his son a trade. "He that teacheth not his son a trade doth the same as if he taught him to be a thief." Is there not a hint here for Christian law-makers? Only I would add, teach our daughters also to do some one thing well. In both cases it is a moral safeguard.

ON DUTY.

TEMPTATIONS OF FARM LIFE.

BY EVA KINNEY GRIFFITH.

There is a wide-spread fallacy among the residents of rural districts that their children are absolutely safe from the temptations of the drinking saloon, and hence, it is not necessary to instruct them thoroughly against the evils of intemperance.

That God's beautiful country is not frequently marred by the foul blot of saloons along its wide, smooth roads and beautiful meadows is a cause for profound thankfulness; nevertheless, farm life has its temptations which cannot be ignored.

In the autumn, when the golden and russet fruit is being garnered into granaries and cellars, when farm neighbors work more or less together, gathering in groups now here and now there, there is always the cider-mill with its deceptive allurements and promises of gain.

The young man of the family is sent to the mill with a load of apples and he meets other young men on the same errand. They stop for awhile, perhaps to await an opportunity to unload, perhaps to gossip over the crops and a new horse that one of them has purchased. Cider is all about them in vats, tubs, kegs and barrels in all the different stages of fermentation. How easy to take a drink every now and then as they talk.

Now it happens that cider ferments at a much lower temperature than almost any other sweet liquid. The cider-mill is always a fairly warm place and often the liquid can be seen fermenting in the tub into which the juice pours from the mill. The tiny white bubbles which show that alcohol is forming gather in groups and rows about the sides of the tub and can be seen by any one who pauses to examine. This same sweet cider, still with the little bubbles in it, is brought to the cornfield where the huskers are busy and often put in the cellar to be used at any time during the autumn work.

Although the percentage of alcohol is very small in this new cider, varying greatly according to the manner in which it is made and the length of time it stands, yet there is always a sufficient quantity to create an appetite for itself if it is drunk persistently. As the winter comes on the cider grows harder, that is, more alcohol is formed in it, yet still it is used as a beverage by many families.

The craving for alcoholic stimulants is thus formed unconsciously, while the boy is still on the farm, to be developed later when he comes in contact with stronger drinks or perhaps to be fostered by home-made cider and beer until it has mastered him.

Another dangerous temptation in farm life is the sheep-shearing. It is then that neighbors and friends are gathered together in one place. It is warm weather, the work is arduous, the workers must have something to drink and in too many places beer is furnished by the farmer whose sheep are being sheared. Often young men who have never used this beverage, drink it for the first time at a sheep-shearing.

Threshing days and trips to the market, Fourth of July and the county fair have also their temptations to the farm boy, for whom the "prince of tempters" has set as sure a watch as for any other class of people. To protect the country home, then, from this enemy requires as persistent vigilance as to protect the city home, and wives, sisters and mothers need to be awake to this fact.

What can you do? Why, watch the enemy's every move and dispute each inch of ground with him. Does he tempt the young with cider? Give them scientific instruction in the schools, where they will be taught the exact composition of cider, what constitutes fermentation and how the alcohol is formed by it. Show them how to prove the existence of alcohol in the cider by actually distilling the alcohol from it. Then teach them how even a small amount of alcohol, when drunk in cider or other liquid, will create an appetite for itself, and you will then have the child fortified against the temptation of cider drinking.

At sheep-shearing time seek to persuade farmers not to provide beer for the men, but instead offer to furnish them with some cool, refreshing, home-made drink that shall take the place of beer. Here is still a field for woman's invention. To make up home drinks, which shall be cool, thirst-quenching and palatable, without being in any way intoxicating. Our UNION SIGNAL often publishes recipes for good drinks of this kind, which our farm women should cut out and retain for future use.

But sometimes the farm boy wearies of the dull routine and isolation of farm life and comes to the city to seek his fortune. Too often his love of adventure, his desire to see the sights, leads him among evil associates, and ignorant of the power of the insidious enemy he encounters, before he is aware of it he is in the demon's clutches. Mr. Paxton, now deceased, the former active and energetic secretary of the Citizens' League, in his annual reports used to tell us of hundreds and thousands of farm boys, from the contiguous states of Indiana, Iowa and Wisconsin, whom he found in the saloons of Chicago, some but just starting on the downward course and others far gone in sin and vice. Many of these were minors and were rescued by Mr. Paxton and returned to their homes, but alas, many others went on to lives of crime.

Anything that can be done to make farm life attractive, anything that can be invented to vary its monotony and make the boys contented to stay on the farm, will help to prevent this deplorable state of affairs. Cannot the Y's do something by forming clubs and Chautauqua circles among the young people, and creating a pleasant comradeship among them? To be loved, to be thought of consequence, is always helpful to young people—it will hold them and keep them together. Many a young man has been saved from entering upon an evil course by being made much of at home.

"I serve to all by sin cast down,
Oh, feet, haste on yet faster!
What if the world has but a frown,
When smiles the blessed Master."

The Lenawee county unions joined in making flower mission day a success. Eight unions were represented. The flowers were arranged at Adrian. After the supply was distributed, the school children came again and again with their arms filled. The delegates from Raisin conducted the exercises at the jail. A regularly prepared program was carried out. The Y's visited the hospital. In the afternoon quite a number proceeded to the county poor-house and held a grove meeting, where fifty of the inmates were assembled. Afterwards each inmate received a cake, oranges, bananas and candy. A large quantity of papers were left with them, also pieces for patchwork.

Then came the visit to the industrial home, where the six pictures of Miss Willard, voted at state convention, were presented. The lives of such women as our National and state president were portrayed to the girls by Mrs. Sickles, and the truth made very clear of the influence of a good life on the world. Besides all this they remembered many sick and shut-in ones.

Genesee county's new president has been visiting the unions, and writes of Grand Blanc: "Such a harmonious working union. They have been greatly afflicted in the death of Mrs. McCall." Her next point was Clio, and there, too, the work seemed increasing.

Our state paper for July is not depressing if the weather is. Our wise editor has asked for articles from all the state superintendents. Mrs. LaTour, for the press, says many good things: "In the power of the press lies the destinies of civilization. Religion makes it its pulpit; commerce, its exchange; politics, its arena; literature, its theater. It is all-pervading. It is doing the thinking of mankind. Our periodical literature is immense, and America prints the best newspapers in the world. Of twenty-three thousand newspapers in the world, one-half are American."

The time of summer assemblies is at hand. The state W. C. T. U. dedicates our Mary T. Lathrap Hall at beautiful Hackley Park August 1. A fine program has been prepared. For the school of methods, Mrs. Lathrap; Mrs. Benjamin on parliamentary drill; Mrs. May, finance; Mrs. Parish, "The Literary Side of the W. C. T. U. and Lessons in Constitution"; Mrs. Weeks, chalk talker; Mrs. Humphrey, "Literature and How to Use It"; Mrs. Voorhies, "The New Political Status of Women in Michigan." Surely all this will be an educational feast. Come, and enjoy and help.

At Bay View, the long established summer assembly has Mrs. Lathrap for an address: "Shall We Nationalize the Saloon?" and several of our workers, Mrs. Hollister representing the Y's.

Our L. T. L. superintendent reports the first colored Legion in Wayne county, twenty-five soldiers of honor, and five honorary members, with Mrs. Frances Preston, superintendent, organized in the second Baptist Church, Detroit.

Mrs. L. M. Boise, in speaking of "our relation to church work," says: "We are workers together with God and His church. We are pioneers of the church in our special work of the overthrow of the saloon.

MARCHING ON.

While we are not making so rapid strides toward prohibition as we desire, many of our women are heart and hand in the work, and we have many evidences of growth.

One potent agent that has been heretofore but little used is being felt in many local unions and Y's—Demorest medal contests. A good many silver medals and two gold ones have been won since our last state convention, The universal result is that these contests attract large audiences, and many persons hear these strong prohibition speeches from the young lips that would listen to them in no other way. Arrangements are being made for a gold medal contest at our next state convention.

Mrs. Newton, state treasurer and organizer, has been in the field since April 1. Much of her work has been in strengthening the unions.

Several new unions have been organized; one very promising one at Manchester. After a revival by Mr. Fife, in Staunton, in the winter, over fifty joined the W. C. T. U. and a Y was organized with twenty-seven members.

Winchester union, as always, has been doing good work. A correspondent says "the reports from the several lines of work taken up make a fine showing for genuine gospel work." Sam Jones held meetings in Winchester the last of May. The Winchester Leader says; "Sunday afternoon Rev. Sam Jones made a stirring temperance appeal to his large audience, which resulted in seventy-two additional names to the W. C. T. U.

"Monday afternoon an enthusiastic meeting was held in parlor of Y. M. C. A., when other additions were made to the union." At this meeting Mrs. Newton gave an address upon the work of the W. C. T. U. There was also an address by a young evangelist, Rev. Dashiel, welcome to the new members by the president of the union, Miss Lona Kern, music, etc. Several other meetings were arranged there for Mrs. Newton, from which we have not heard.

The unions organized in Roanoke in 1892 are working valiantly. Mrs. Jones, state president, gave an address for them on their anniversary, May 18, in the largest church in the city. They employ a lawyer to look after license applications.

Dr. Mary Wood Allen's visit to Richmond and Norfolk did much good. Norfolk district holds quarterly conventions, and Loudoun county does the same.

The union organized at Cape Charles by Mrs. Love last September is at work distributing literature, pledge cards, etc. They held a supper, from which they cleared over thirty-five dollars; held their first temperance mass-meeting April 28.

Mrs. Atkins, state superintendent L. T. L., visited this union and organized an L. T. L., May 12.

Lincoln W. C. T. U. mourns the loss of two of its members, Miss Clarissa C. Janney, formerly press superintendent, who died March 2, and Mrs. C. G. Nichols, treasurer and state financial secretary, who died May 24. The workers fall by the way, but the work must go on. Let us fill up the ranks.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

TEMPERANCE WORKERS.

On Sabbath, May 14, Col. Geo. W. Bain lectured to a large audience at the First Congregational Church. At the close of the lecture a resolution was adopted in support of the Anti-saloon League, which was organized June 23 to fight the liquor traffic.

On May 28, Rev. John G. Paton, D. D., for many years a missionary in the New Hebrides Islands, lectured under our auspices, at the Congregational Church, on the suppression of trade in firearms and intoxicating liquors in these and other islands. Bishop John F. Hurst presided.

During the Presbyterian General Assembly lunch was served daily to the delegates and public at large at headquarters; the treasury was increased $100 by the timely thought of our president.

The quarterly meeting of the district union was held June 5 and 6, at the Metropolitan M. E. Church. We were highly favored in having Doctor and Mrs. Boole with us. Mrs. Boole gave a Bible exposition—theme, "Like Him." Some of the thoughts were that we do not dwell enough on Christ's humanity; He became like us that we might become like Him; like Him in mind (Phil. 2:5); love the things He loves; hate the things He hates. We will not have to give up anything we do not wish to if our hearts are given to Him in conversion and consecration. Phil. 2:8. Become obedient like Jesus; consider His life, how He became obedient. John 15:10. An abiding religion, just as good for week-day as Sabbath or prayer-meeting. In the evening Rev. W. H. Boole made an address at the same church, subject, "Christian Citizenship," and Mrs. Boole spoke on "Why Belong to the W. C. T. U?"

On Tuesday the regular business sessions of the quarterly meeting were held. The resignation of Mrs. T. A. Williams as treasurer was accepted with regret. Mrs. Grace Morris was elected to the vacancy. The report of the corresponding secretary showed number of unions, fifteen, membership nearly six hundred. The treasurer reported receipts, $1,168.90, disbursements, $749.91, balance, $418.99. Mrs. Mary Fonwell offered a resolution against Sunday excursions.

Mrs. Boole gave a temperance Bible talk in which she said, "Mischief framed by law is the greatest trouble in our land to-day. God gave us the authority for carrying forward the temperance work. Dan. 5:4; Isa. 5:22; Psalm 10:8 and 9; I Cor. 8:3; Psalm 94:20; these passages apply to moderate drinking. High license, Hab. 2:12; treating, Hab. 2:15; II John, 11. "He that biddeth him godspeed is partaker of his evil deeds." This last text made a wonderful impression upon us. I am sure we will never forget the lessons drawn from it. Miss Weightman suggested that the pastors of the city be asked to preach from it the coming fall. Mrs. Hartsock, whom we are glad the itinerant wheel has brought to us again, led in noontide prayer, after which Rev. Geo. Elliot and Dr. Boole spoke briefly.

After the devotional exercises of the afternoon session, the committee on credentials reported. The advisability of employing a lawyer to be present at the meetings of the excise board was discussed. It was thought advisable to coöperate with the Anti-saloon League in the matter, paying a portion of an attorney's salary, when employed by the League.

The reports of the superintendents were most excellent. Flower Mission: Visits, 512; bouquets given, 55; literature, 275 pages; money expended, $19.48. Prison and Jail: Visits, 29; papers distributed, 1,190; leaflets, 256. The prisoners have been decking their cells with questionable pictures but good pictures have now been furnished them. A local superintendent has distributed 3,336 pages of literature; another 35 Testaments and 1,000 tracts. The inmates of the jail try to repay us by some little courtesy. Work Among Foreigners: Two thousand leaflets and temperance papers distributed; two visits to the jail; have taken in and fed the usual number of young men, many of whom sign the pledge. Unfermented Wine: By persistent effort some good seed has been sown, and we are looking for the fruit. The colored Baptist union in South Washington have passed a resolution recommending the use of unfermented wine in their churches. Distributed 290 pages literature and 67 temperance addresses, by Hon. Hiram Price. Sabbath Observance: Rejoice that the desecration of the Sabbath at the World's Fair has proven a failure.

Evangelistic Work: Meetings held at Central union, Hope and Help missions; Mrs. Brown, missionary of the Chapin Auxiliary, told of her work in Willow Tree alley, a year ago one of the most notorious localities in the city, but which, since the establishment of the mission, has improved in moral tone as well as physical comfort. Hope and Help mission has given 1,384 meals, 781 lodgings, 59 admissions to home. The building we now occupy, which is especially fitted to the work, rents for $1,000 per year, of which the district union pays $30 per month for the use of the parlors. Congress has given for the support of the home for the past five years $1,000 per year, and the ladies have cared for more than 1,000 women in that time, some for days, others for months, and some for more than a year. This year, beginning with July the appropriation from Congress is withheld, as the establishment of the Girls' Reform school, it was claimed, should largely cover the work of the Hope and Help mission. It will not provide, probably, for the wives whom husbands have deserted and left in a helpless condition, and the reform school is not ready for occupancy.

Legislative and Petition Work: Have sent to each union a copy of the World's Petition for circulation, urging the necessity of same. Have protested against licensing saloons within the prescribed districts and in dissuading property owners from signing applications for license. Notwithstanding that we have been frequently foiled by technicalities in the law or superior craft of the saloon men, some good results have been secured. For several years, by urging our prohibition bill in Congress, and by other means we have prevented the passage of a high license law; many good people and some representing churches have censured us for opposing high license, saying "half a loaf was better than none," so we have kept still and let them have a taste of the poisoned half loaf. During the last session of Congress nothing was done to oppose high license.

District Attorney Thomas rendered his opinion to the commissioners that the requirement of the consent of property owners and the four hundred feet rule in the new law does not apply to duly incorporated clubs, the representatives of several clubs having argued the question before him. If his opinion is sustained all that will be necessary is to become duly incorporated to sell all they choose in whatever locality best suits them.

A temperance address was issued June 10th, by the district W. C. T. U. to the property holders of our city, urging them to withhold their signatures from applications for saloon licenses.

The last two meetings of our union Band of Hope were unusually successful; 150 children were present at the first meeting and nineteen new members secured. Ex-District attorney Dumont addressed the meeting. At the following meeting, a young man of eighteen years came forward and signed the triple pledge, also four children.

It is with sorrow that we record the death of two who have long been in our ranks, Mrs. G. L. Clark and Mrs. Blackford. Mrs. Clark, who had filled the superintendency of evangelistic work in the district union a number of years, passed to her reward at her former home in Plattsburg, N. Y., where she had the honor of being a Crusader. Mrs. Blackford was an earnest advocate of the cause we love so well; her partner in life said, "She has often encouraged me in my temperance work, when I was thoroughly disheartened." May the mantle of these women fall on others as faithful and true.

SILVERY GLEAMS.

As a prelude to unavoidably deferred news, it is with feelings of gratitude to our Heavenly Father we report that our state president, Mrs. Eva Higgins, an invalid since last October, has so far recovered her health and strength that she anticipates returning to her La Veta home. During her protracted illness, plans have been laid and matured for the furtherance of our temperance work that have truly seemed marvelous, when one could note the "look of firm endurance true and tried" and "suffering meekly borne." Her "greatest prayer is patience," and patience, genius. She was permitted to preside at the meeting of state executive committee held in Denver, at which time some perplexing questions were to be discussed. It was decided to hold the annual meeting in Boulder the third week in September.

Mrs. M. J. Telford, at present residing in Grand Junction, will lecture in the state under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., making her own appointments, and receiving the collections as recompense for her services. The Suffrage Association are expecting Mrs. Carrie Lane Chapman to speak for them, and anticipate favorable results.

When the southern district convention at Pueblo fairly got under way it was an enthusiastic affair. Delegates were present from La Junta, Trinidad, Rocky Ford, Colorado Springs, Colorado City, Rye, Rouse, the Pueblo unions, and members of the executive from Denver.

Although Mother Reynolds, on account of illness, was not able to be present, her department was given more attention, perhaps, than any other, an excellent paper on "Mothers' Work" being presented by Mrs. Learnard, of Rouse, followed by Mrs. Todd, president of Rocky Ford union, and a poem from Mrs. Wilson, of Canon City.

The subject of Sabbath observance was forcibly handled by Mrs. Best, county superintendent of jail and prison work in her home, Cattaraugus county, N. Y., and by Bro. R. A. Carnine, of the Broadway M. E. Church, who talked eloquently on the Sunday closing of the World's Fair.

Father Brunton, chaplain for the D. & R. G. Railroad Company, spoke in a masterly manner on the railroad work. An innovation upon the routine order of exercise was the introduction of, and five minutes speeches from, the brethren. Dr. Kieffer, of Colorado Springs, gave a most telling and eloquent address on Friday evening on the work of the W. C. T. U., an address prepared for his own church, which we wish could be listened to by all our workers.

Saturday evening was given to the discussion of the suffrage amendment. All were disappointed that the promised speaker, Mrs. Carrie Lane Chapman, of New York, was unable to be present, but it is doubtful if any one could have filled the evening more acceptably than did Judge Kerr, of Pueblo. A ratification meeting was held, and short addresses were made by a number of speakers. The old officers of the district were all reëlected, but, as in the northern district, the convention recommended the discontinuance of the district organization.

The Pueblo county convention immediately preceded the district convention. Thursday evening was occupied by the young people, and a most interesting program was rendered.

The Evans union has four departments in running order: Evangelistic, mothers' meetings, literature and press work. A memorial service in honor of Miss Jennie Casseday was held at the M. E. church, June 9, with the largest attendance ever had at an afternoon service. Appropriate hymns were well rendered by a choir. Carefully prepared articles and selections were read relating to Miss Casseday's life work. It was a very profitable meeting. There seems a strong purpose in the hearts of the members to toil on, looking for victory.

Boulder county union held its annual convention at Lafayette, with Mrs. H. E. Rainger, the president, in the chair. Thirty-two delegates represented the ten unions. Papers were read on mothers' duties, narcotics, Y work and suffrage, the latter subject receiving much thought and discussion. The work for the ensuing six months is to be largely along that line and all funds possible are to be used in that direction. A touching memorial service for the late vice-president, Mrs. Wallace, was led by Mrs. Thompson, of Longmont.

Mrs. Ida Best, reporting for the Lake City union, writes most enthusiastically to The Bulletin: "We have but a few working members, meeting every two weeks. We have taken up jail and prison work and work for miners, also sustain a Loyal Temperance Legion of twenty members, of which I am proud to be the superintendent. We presented the children with a fine banner and feel well repaid in their happiness. Mr. Hall delivered four excellent addresses. The lecture, 'How to Measure a Man,' he repeated by request to a large house."

Lyons union is working slowly but surely, and making some headway. Three successful Demorest contests have been held, netting about fifty dollars, calling out full houses and awakening much interest. The first contest was composed entirely of girls, the second of both boys and girls, and the third of boys alone.

In Denver, amid impressive ceremonies, Mrs. Ella F. Leonard was, on June 20, ordained a minister of the gospel in the Congregational denomination. This circumstance is an unusual one, and Mrs. Leonard has the distinction of being the first woman admitted in Colorado, and the second in the United States, to preach in the Congregational church. She was licensed to preach three years ago, by the Denver Ministerial Association, and now has passed a satisfactory examination with this successful result. The ceremonies took place in the Second Congregational church, and were beautiful, a well-chosen choral service being selected. Rev. H. E. Thayer, of Longmont, delivered a sermon on the subject of the moral elevation of women as compared with earlier times. Rev. George E. Paddock gave the charge, and Rev. C. N. Fitch gave the right hand of fellowship, and Mrs. Leonard signalized her entry into the ranks of the ministry by pronouncing the benediction. She sought ordination because she is constantly taken for a minister and asked to administer the ordinances of the church at baptism, holy communion, marriage, etc. Ordination will remove misapprehension and facilitate her work. She has also been appointed a member of the advisory council of the Woman's branch of the World's

In cases of diarrhœa, dysentery and cholera infantum, on Burnham's Clam Bouillon. There is nothing like it for ailing children. It is far superior to any of the so-called infant foods, and is as nutritious as mother's milk. We receive letters of commendation daily from mothers and physicians recommending it as an infant food. Take two teaspoonfuls of Bouillon, add two tablespoonfuls of soft water, and a half pint of milk, boil, serve moderately warm, using an ordinary nursing bottle.

The Day and Night Nursery in Denver has cared for 1,003 children during the month. Of that number there have been 290 free of charge, the average number per day being 34. The kitchen garden, now closed for the summer, had enrolled 350 scholars. Average attendance 29. The superintendent of literature, Mrs. J. A. Temple, has distributed more than 200 leaflets, and a very gratifying letter was received by her from the National superintendent among the Chinese in San Francisco.

The Littleton union, numbering twenty members, support a reading-room where ice cream and lemonade are dispensed for a nominal sum. The proceeds have netted them $101, far exceeding their expectations. In these times of financial depression, "Let us not be weary in well-doing."

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

TEMPERANCE day at the Willimantic Camp Ground is held under the auspices of the Connecticut W. C. T. U., Friday, August 11. Geo. W. Bain and other leading lights will make the echoes ring.

DR. ANNA H. SHAW will speak in Orange, N. J., October 25, and will spend the two succeeding weeks in the state. All unions, clubs or churches wishing to engage her will please address immediately Lucy E. Anthony, Woman's Building, Jackson Park, Chicago, Ill., that a consecutive route may be arranged.

THE National Executive Committee of the Prohibition party has decided, for excellent reasons, not to meet in Chicago August 27 to September 3 as proposed. Printed matter containing practical suggestions will be sent from headquarters to county and local committees. Address Samuel Dickie, Albion, Mich., chairman Prohibition National Committee.

THE railroad Sabbath school at Oakland, Cal., the care of Mrs. Mary Teats, state superintendent of railroad work, enjoyed a delightful outing at the Niles picnic grounds, recently, by courtesy of the Southern Pacific railway officers and the proprietor of the grounds. The day was brimful of happiness and sunshine for the children, who enjoyed the games and outdoor sports, the dinner and the music of the boys' brigade band.

A NOTE of warning against vile phonographs has been sounded by Mrs. Ada H. Kepley, Illinois superintendent for the suppression of impure literature, who writes: "I just to-day discovered that in my own town a wretch yesterday had a phonograph and to the men and boys it detailed filthy stories. It is probable other phonographs are doing the same thing. My advice to all W. C. T. U. women is to ask the mayors or city presidents to require all phonograph men to present their machines for examination and that the police be instructed to keep an eye upon them. These rogues are amenable under the law for circulating obscene matter, and should be punished. In Illinois if our women successfully prosecute such offenders the W. C. T. U. can get one-half the fine and the school fund the remainder. See Chap. 38 Illinois Statutes, Sec. 223."

Official Communications.

A MESSAGE TO ALL WHITE-RIBBONERS.

DEAR FRIENDS:—Some of you are asking about the "Self-denial Fund" and are anxious to know how much money came to the World's W. C. T. U. from that source. Up to date—July 25th—I have received $198.22. Of this, Canada contributed $10.55; Newfoundland, $11.30, and the United States $176.37. The smallest amount received was five cents from a little girl in Canada; the largest was the gift of the Y. W. C. T. U. of Fall River, Mass., and amounted to $15.66. The money came from fifty-seven unions and ninety-three individuals who forwarded personal tokens of their self-denial. The first sum to arrive was one dollar, sent by a lady of sixty-seven years who (in a warm climate) walked a mile on a very hot morning and sewed for strangers all day, that she might send this gift to the World's W. C. T. U. For more than three months there have been almost daily receipts of small sums earned or saved for the cause of temperance, and many of the accompanying letters have been worth more than the money itself. But the editor will use her scissors if I tell you of these just now.

I wonder how many of you know that we have a new missionary who has been at work in India since the first of April. She is Mrs. Jeannette G. Hauser and her headquarters are in Lucknow. It is to be our privilege to raise at least $600 a year for her support, and when her salary is paid up to the middle of August the treasury will be almost as empty as that famous "cupboard" which was the special property of "Old Mother Hubbard."

Yet it is one of the curious facts of our existence that no matter how bare the cupboard or empty the treasury the demands upon each do not diminish. In view of this fact we are asking some of our good friends to become responsible for this salary. One gentleman in Scotland promises ten pounds a year for two or three years if we can obtain the remainder. A lady and gentleman in Canada promise twenty-five dollars per year on the same condition; Miss Willard will also give twenty-five dollars a year. Now here is one-sixth of the amount needed if we can only secure pledges for the other five hundred dollars. Who will respond to this appeal and promptly send a donation to the treasurer of the World's W. C. T. U.? Are there not fifty unions or individuals who will send ten dollars each?

There is a small sum on hand ready for Miss West's successor in Japan, and there is a lady willing to go, but before she can go we also need pledges for her support.

An empty treasury means unpaid salaries to secretaries as well as missionaries; and, although all bills have been paid up to the present time, funds are now needed to keep the machinery going. Our next Red Letter Day is September 22—the birthday of Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt. On this day we take our annual thank-offering collections for the benefit of the World's W. C. T. U. The donations received from this source last September were a very great help. Will not our white ribbon workers, everywhere, faithfully obsserve this day, promptly sending their thank-offerings to the treasurer?

One thing more; in sending money from the United States to Canada please bear in mind that American postal notes are useless here and have to be sent to the United States for collection. Send by bank draft, "international" money order, express order, or registered letter. If it is desirable to send change in postage stamps be sure they are one or two-cent stamps, and not those of higher denominations. By observing care in sending your gifts money is saved to the treasury and the treasurer's work is made easier.

And now it only remains for me to thank you for your kind remembrance of past needs and to beg that you will continue to give not only money but thought and prayer to the work of the World's W. C. T. U. Yours in the Master's service,

ELLA F. M. WILLIAMS,
Treasurer World's W. C. T. U.

SCHOOL SAVINGS BANKS.

The school savings banks teaching spread so encouragingly last year that we cordially ask the states and territories to take it up as a department at their coming autumnal conventions. The institution of this inculcation of thrift and economy can be advanced happily by women. It is pleasant work, because it meets quick response. The school directors, teachers, parents and bankers unite in approving of and establishing the easy system of training school children to business habits and self-responsibility. The collection and care of the children's savings occupies but fifteen minutes per week of any teacher's time. It is an interesting diversion and the inculcation of thrift rebounds on the lives and habits of those having the care of the children in the school-house and in the home.

With the saving of money, that might otherwise be foolishly spent or not earned, the great lesson of personal accountability is naturally taught. Generosity as well as economy is opportunely engendered. The boy and the girl having equal chance to become bank depositors are not likely to imbibe the mistaken idea that money earning, possession and self-independence are gauged by sex. They feel the growth of a better and higher equality. While encouraging this saving of pennies we endeavor to teach the best and true use of money as a comfort factor. It is only those who possess that can enjoy the delight of giving. The girl who buys a dainty or comfort for a sick mother, the boy who surprises his father with a new necktie or help in some family need knows the best joy of possession. Thirty-four thousand school children in the United States have now one hundred and seventy thousand dollars in the banks of the country, as their school deposits. Double that amount has been deposited, about half the money having been withdrawn for use or transferred to the outside accounts of the pupils on their leaving school.

We have this thrift teaching in one hundred and twenty public schools in Pennsylvania, fifty of them in my own county, Montgomery, and several others take it up this fall. A number adopted the teaching last year, because of the entire satisfaction expressed by those who began using the system a year or two earlier. Girard College engenders practical economy in this way, the president having become interested in our scheme last winter. Prominent educators manifest continual sympathy with the work. Philanthropists are free to say the School Savings Bank is a ready key to reform, and that a nation thus trained must have vastly less extreme poverty, intemperance and crime. Self-responsibility, self-respect, possession and practical knowledge of initial business methods is in itself a great safeguard.

For ten cents a full line of literature, explaining the simple application of this popular teaching, will be forwarded by addressing me at Norristown, Pa.

During the fall and winter I expect to study economic problems in Southern Europe, hoping to be able to diffuse more light on this important subject, which so interests the whole people. An efficient secretary will reply to all communications, and fill all orders for school savings banks' literature and supplies sent here. My personal address for a few months, after August 4, will be Freiburg, Baden, Germany.

I ask of each state and territorial executive in this general way, as I have, personally, thoughtful consideration of this department of effective and acceptable reform, and the appointment of exponents of the work wherever it is practicable. We have some county superintendents of the department in New York, California and Pennsylvania; state superintendents in Maine, Missouri, Nevada, Idaho, Wisconsin and North Dakota.

Yours for the inculcation of thrift and the uplifting of humanity,

SARA LOUISA OBERHOLTZER,
W. and N. Supt. School Savings Banks.

W. C. T. U. COFFEE HOUSE SUPERINTENDENTS, ATTENTION.

Will every reader of this article, who is interested in coffee houses, please send to me at once the address and facts concerning any coffee house in the United States of which he or she may know? I refer to those which have been instituted wholly or in part by the W. C. T. U. Travelers are asking for a directory and it is very desirable to prepare such a help to be placed in every coffee house in the land. If the necessary information is sent to me very soon we may hope to issue such a directory before the October convention.

Yours in the work,

THE WOMAN'S LECTURE BUREAU.

During the World's Fair the Woman's Lecture Bureau will have its headquarters in the organization room of the Woman's Building.

We will be pleased to talk over the work of the coming season with patrons, visitors, and lecturers and cordially invite all to call while in the city.

We expect that great good will result from our summer's work and we wish to urge upon all who sympathize with the work of the Bureau the necessity of using every effort possible to put this department on the footing it deserves. This can only be done through the effective coöperation of the local, county and state unions.

We have a few dates at our disposal of the popular Swedish lecturer, Miss Cecile Gohl, subject: Home life in Sweden (in costume) and the famous Smith sisters concert sextette.

The following lecturers are under our management, and we call your attention to the splendid list of workers:

Frances E. Willard, on her return home.

Lady Henry Somerset, while visiting this country.

Rev. Anna H. Shaw.* Pennsylvania and Ohio early fall.

Mary T. Lathrap.* New York after August 8. Pennsylvania after September 15.

Mrs. Sarah A. McClees, of New York, will attend the Grand Army Encampment at Indianapolis in September and will remain until after the National W. C. T. U. Convention which is to be held in Chicago, in October. Mrs. McClees, National superintendent for the department of soldiers and sailors, will be accompanied by Mrs. Mary Grant Cramer, a sister of the late Gen. U. S. Grant, who will lecture with her during the months of September and October in Illinois and adjoining states. Several very successful lecture tours have been made by these ladies and their addresses will be especially interesting to members of the G. A. R. and their friends as well as all who are in sympathy with their work.

LEWIS county, Washington, has had quite a boom in W. C. T. U. work during the month of July.

A BAND of young people recently entered into active temperance service is the Carlinville, Ill., Y, organized in March, now numbering eighty-eight members. They have held one reception at which about two hundred persons were present, and a number of socials, besides working with the local W. C. T. U. Their latest effort, the first of a series of the Demorest medal contests was held on the evening of June 29 and was a glorious success and an educator to the large and interested audience.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

The just shall live by faith.—Gal. 3: 11.

Nine members of the Falmouth, Mass., W. C. T. U. filled nine mite-boxes, and sent their contents, $33, to the Whittier memorial clock. This was a beautiful thing to do. We wish that in each union a few of the well-to-do members would form themselves into Whittier memorial clubs, and raise a fund for this memorial in memory of one of the purest and noblest of men, whose magic pen touched the tenderest chords in the human heart, as he pleaded in his sweet and pathetic songs for the equality of the race, for the lifting of heavy burdens and for more love to God and man. So far only $150 have been received for it. It is to cost $450. The sculptor, Carl Rohl-Smith, who has completed the unique design, which is now being cast in copper, and contains, among other beautiful symbols, the features of the sainted poet, promises to wait for his pay until the money is sent in for the memorial. Besides the verse which was written for the Temple by Whittier himself the following inscription will appear on the bronze: "The Woman's Laureate, John Greenleaf Whittier, 1807–1892. A Memorial from the Temperance People of the World." From the above it will be seen that the gifts of men, as well as women, will be acceptable. In this connection we desire to say that Walter Crane, of London, is now engaged on the Madam Willard memorial window; we have not yet received sufficient to pay for it. It is to cost $500, and $210 only have been received to date.

Ever since Christ's gracious words were uttered in regard to the "widow's mite," an added preciousness has seemed to emanate from the gifts of those who, in order to give have had to deny themselves. So many gifts to the Temple have this rare value, that to me its walls seem to glow with the beauty of the city not made with hands, which John saw in prophetic vision. Miss Lou N. Ammen, Tuscola, Ill., writes: "As I am a kind of a shut-in, there are not many ways by which I can make money. A year ago last spring I sold a few early-cut flowers. The following fall I sold some plants which I grew from cuttings." Then she tells her tribulations in selling her plants and flowers on account of her not being able to go out. She continues: "At last I have paid my floral expenses, filled my mite-box, and gladly send my little mite, $3.65." A good brother, Mr. C. A. Spooner, Sand Creek, Mich., sends $6. He writes: "I send you the coupons from my Temple Trust Bonds. As I think I can get along without their avails, you may use it for the Temple debt." A dear white-ribboner, Mrs. H. A. Wood, Plainfield, Ill., who is a "shut-in" on account of an attack of paralysis, says: "Although I am deprived of the pleasure of seeing you face to face, and hearing news of the work in which I am so much interested, I can let my money work for me, and it gives me pleasure to increase my subscription this year. I inclose $10."

Mrs. G. W. Wilson, Atlanta, Ga., sends $5 from her mite-box, saying: "I trust God's blessing may go with it and make it a power in this grand work. I would it were hundreds, nay thousands, but the little with His blessing is worth more than great revenues of wealth unblessed." Mrs. P. M. Slough, Marion, Mich., sends $3.70. She writes: "I earned this money knitting for the store." Jennie Leason, Cannon Falls, Minn., sends $3.65. She says: "I enclose you the contents of my mite-box. I am so glad to be able to send something to help build our beloved Temple. I wish I could send more, but will try and fill another mite-box. I have earned all this money myself, and was so glad to do it for the Temple I love so much."

A two-cent stamp sent to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the Temple, Chicago, will secure a mite-box. Remember, any one placing in the box $2.50 from May 1, 1893, to May 1, 1894, will receive the lovely Columbian souvenir made of aluminum, with a cut of the Temple on one side and on the reverse the face of Miss Willard and the founder of the Temple, with suitable inscriptions.

Publisher's Notes.

YOUNG CRUSADER FOR AUGUST.

The Young Crusader for August has a feast of good things for the children. On the first page is a reproduction of the Children's Building, with a description by Miss Guernsey so realistic that it is almost like seeing with one's own eyes. You can imagine as you read the spirited boys of the gymnastic class exercising with their musical dumb bells, playing leap frog over the vaulting bars, climbing poles and ladders, and swinging from suspended rings.

You cannot so easily imagine the wee babies in the nursery, for you have never seen so many bright eyes and sweet faces together, but you can read all about them in Miss Guernsey's article.

The Editorial Notes will tell you what has been done with the pledge cards, and the fountain, and you must not omit to look at page 3, and read the thrilling story of Ma-ne-ha, a true tale of a wild Indian boy.

JULY NUMBER OF THE ADVANCE GUARD.

"The Tables Turned,"

BY MATTIE B. FAY,

is illustrated by our special artist. The story opens with a spirited conversation between five interesting young ladies whom our artist has grouped around a table putting the finishing touches on some neckties for use at a coming social. Conversation turns upon the imaginary wearers of the ties, and the laughing and sometimes thoughtless girls, discuss the standard of morality for men, and the possibility of their exquisite work being soiled by the stains of liquor or tobacco.

In this issue Rudyard Kipling tells how he became a Prohibitionist, and Miss Guernsey, in her usual graphic style, writes of historic homes at "The White City." The accurate drawings of Fort Marion, John Hancock House and Mt. Vernon, add to the interest of the article.

The Day and Night Nursery in Denver has cared for 1,003 children during the month. Of that number there have been 290 free of charge, the average number per day being 34. The kitchen garden, now closed for the summer, had enrolled 350 scholars. Average attendance 29. The superintendent of literature, Mrs. J. A. Temple, has distributed more than 200 leaflets, and a very gratifying letter was received by her from the National superintendent among the Chinese in San Francisco.

The Littleton union, numbering twenty members, support a reading-room where ice cream and lemonade are dispensed for a nominal sum. The proceeds have netted them $101, far exceeding their expectations. In these times of financial depression, "Let us not be weary in well-doing."

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

TEMPERANCE day at the Willimantic Camp Ground is held under the auspices of the Connecticut W. C. T. U., Friday, August 11. Geo. W. Bain and other leading lights will make the echoes ring.

DR. ANNA H. SHAW will speak in Orange, N. J., October 25, and will spend the two succeeding weeks in the state. All unions, clubs or churches wishing to engage her will please address immediately Lucy E. Anthony, Woman's Building, Jackson Park, Chicago, Ill., that a consecutive route may be arranged.

THE National Executive Committee of the Prohibition party has decided, for excellent reasons, not to meet in Chicago August 27 to September 3 as proposed. Printed matter containing practical suggestions will be sent from headquarters to county and local committees. Address Samuel Dickie, Albion, Mich., chairman Prohibition National Committee.

THE railroad Sabbath school at Oakland, Cal., the care of Mrs. Mary Teats, state superintendent of railroad work, enjoyed a delightful outing at the Niles picnic grounds, recently, by courtesy of the Southern Pacific railway officers and the proprietor of the grounds. The day was brimful of happiness and sunshine for the children, who enjoyed the games and outdoor sports, the dinner and the music of the boys' brigade band.

A NOTE of warning against vile phonographs has been sounded by Mrs. Ada H. Kepley, Illinois superintendent for the suppression of impure literature, who writes: "I just to-day discovered that in my own town a wretch yesterday had a phonograph and to the men and boys it detailed filthy stories. It is probable other phonographs are doing the same thing. My advice to all W. C. T. U. women is to ask the mayors or city presidents to require all phonograph men to present their machines for examination and that the police be instructed to keep an eye upon them. These rogues are amenable under the law for circulating obscene matter, and should be punished. In Illinois if our women successfully prosecute such offenders the W. C. T. U. can get one-half the fine and the school fund the remainder. See Chap. 38 Ulinois Statutes, Sec. 223."

ANNOUNCEMENT.

CALL FOR KENTUCKY STATE CONVENTION.

The thirteenth annual convention of Kentucky W. C. T. U. will be held in Owensboro, September 22 to 25. Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, secretary World's and National W. C. T. U., will deliver the evening lecture Saturday 23, and preach the sermon Sunday morning, 24. We hope to secure the services of Miss Frances E. Griffin, of Alabama, for the evening lecture, Monday, 25.

EASTERN WASHINGTON CALL FOR STATE CONVENTION.

The eleventh annual convention of the Eastern Washington W. C. T. U. will be held at Oakesdale, Wednesday and Thursday, September 6 and 7, 1893. Meetings of the executive committee will be held on Tuesday and Friday, September 5 and 8. Write Mrs. Lucy A. Switzer, Cheney, Wash., concerning railroad rates. Names of delegates should be sent to Mrs. Jennie L. Green, Medical Lake, Wash. Send reports to Mrs. Ida M. P. Smith, Oakesdale, Wash. Send the names of all who expect to attend to Mrs. Maggie Brown, Oakesdale, chairman of the committee on entertainment. Sunday, September 3, is set apart as a day of special prayer for our convention.

MRS. JENNIE L. GREEN, Pres.

MINNESOTA STATE CONVENTION.

Our annual meeting will be held September 12 to 15, at St. Paul, in the Central Park M. E. Church, corner of Twelfth and Minnesota streets. To secure entertainment send names of delegates with post-office addresses before August 21, to Mrs. F. B. Doran, chairman committee on entertainment, 201 E. Congress street, St. Paul.

Each union, W and Y, is affectionately requested to observe Friday, August 25, as a day of special private and united prayer for the blessing of our God upon us, and His presence and guidance during our convention.

MRS. H. A. HOBART,
Pres. Minnesota W. C. T. U.

Official Communications.

A MESSAGE TO ALL WHITE-RIBBONERS.

DEAR FRIENDS:—Some of you are asking about the "Self-denial Fund" and are anxious to know how much money came to the World's W. C. T. U. from that source. Up to date—July 25th—I have received $198.22. Of this, Canada contributed $10.55; Newfoundland, $11.30, and the United States $176.37. The smallest amount received was five cents from a little girl in Canada; the largest was the gift of the Y. W. C. T. U. of Fall River, Mass., and amounted to $15.66. The money came from fifty-seven unions and ninety-three individuals who forwarded personal tokens of their self-denial. The first sum to arrive was one dollar, sent by a lady of sixty-seven years who (in a warm climate) walked a mile on a very hot morning and sewed for strangers all day, that she might send this gift to the World's W. C. T. U. For more than three months there have been almost daily receipts of small sums earned or saved for the cause of temperance, and many of the accompanying letters have been worth more than the money itself. But the editor will use her scissors if I tell you of these just now.

I wonder how many of you know that we have a new missionary who has been at work in India since the first of April. She is Mrs. Jeannette G. Hauser and her headquarters are in Lucknow. It is to be our privilege to raise at least $600 a year for her support, and when her salary is paid up to the middle of August the treasury will be almost as empty as that famous "cupboard" which was the special property of "Old Mother Hubbard."

Yet it is one of the curious facts of our existence that no matter how bare the cupboard or empty the treasury the demands upon each do not diminish. In view of this fact we are asking some of our good friends to become responsible for this salary. One gentleman in Scotland promises ten pounds a year for two or three years if we can obtain the remainder. A lady and gentleman in Canada promise twenty-five dollars per year on the same condition; Miss Willard will also give twenty-five dollars a year. Now here is one-sixth of the amount needed if we can only secure pledges for the other five hundred dollars. Who will respond to this appeal and promptly send a donation to the treasurer of the World's W. C. T. U.? Are there not fifty unions or individuals who will send ten dollars each?

There is a small sum on hand ready for Miss West's successor in Japan, and there is a lady willing to go, but before she can go we also need pledges for her support.

An empty treasury means unpaid salaries to secretaries as well as missionaries; and, although all bills have been paid up to the present time, funds are now needed to keep the machinery going. Our next Red Letter Day is September 22—the birthday of Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt. On this day we take our annual thank-offering collections for the benefit of the World's W. C. T. U. The donations received from this source last September were a very great help. Will not our white ribbon workers, everywhere, faithfully obsserve this day, promptly sending their thank-offerings to the treasurer?

One thing more; in sending money from the United States to Canada please bear in mind that American postal notes are useless here and have to be sent to the United States for collection. Send by bank draft, "international" money order, express order, or registered letter. If it is desirable to send change in postage stamps be sure they are one or two-cent stamps, and not those of higher denominations. By observing care in sending your gifts money is saved to the treasury and the treasurer's work is made easier.

And now it only remains for me to thank you for your kind remembrance of past needs and to beg that you will continue to give not only money but thought and prayer to the work of the World's W. C. T. U. Yours in the Master's service,

ELLA F. M. WILLIAMS,
Treasurer World's W. C. T. U.

SCHOOL SAVINGS BANKS.

The school savings banks teaching spread so encouragingly last year that we cordially ask the states and territories to take it up as a department at their coming autumnal conventions. The institution of this inculcation of thrift and economy can be advanced happily by women. It is pleasant work, because it meets quick response. The school directors, teachers, parents and bankers unite in approving of and establishing the easy system of training school children to business habits and self-responsibility. The collection and care of the children's savings occupies but fifteen minutes per week of any teacher's time. It is an interesting diversion and the inculcation of thrift rebounds on the lives and habits of those having the care of the children in the school-house and in the home.

With the saving of money, that might otherwise be foolishly spent or not earned, the great lesson of personal accountability is naturally taught. Generosity as well as economy is opportunely engendered. The boy and the girl having equal chance to become bank depositors are not likely to imbibe the mistaken idea that money earning, possession and self-independence are gauged by sex. They feel the growth of a better and higher equality. While encouraging this saving of pennies we endeavor to teach the best and true use of money as a comfort factor. It is only those who possess that can enjoy the delight of giving. The girl who buys a dainty or comfort for a sick mother, the boy who surprises his father with a new necktie or help in some family need knows the best joy of possession. Thirty-four thousand school children in the United States have now one hundred and seventy thousand dollars in the banks of the country, as their school deposits. Double that amount has been deposited, about half the money having been withdrawn for use or transferred to the outside accounts of the pupils on their leaving school.

We have this thrift teaching in one hundred and twenty public schools in Pennsylvania, fifty of them in my own county, Montgomery, and several others take it up this fall. A number adopted the teaching last year, because of the entire satisfaction expressed by those who began using the system a year or two earlier. Girard College engenders practical economy in this way, the president having become interested in our scheme last winter. Prominent educators manifest continual sympathy with the work. Philanthropists are free to say the School Savings Bank is a ready key to reform, and that a nation thus trained must have vastly less extreme poverty, intemperance and crime. Self-responsibility, self-respect, possession and practical knowledge of initial business methods is in itself a great safeguard.

For ten cents a full line of literature, explaining the simple application of this popular teaching, will be forwarded by addressing me at Norristown, Pa.

During the fall and winter I expect to study economic problems in Southern Europe, hoping to be able to diffuse more light on this important subject, which so interests the whole people. An efficient secretary will reply to all communications, and fill all orders for school savings banks' literature and supplies sent here. My personal address for a few months, after August 4, will be Freiburg, Baden, Germany.

I ask of each state and territorial executive in this general way, as I have, personally, thoughtful consideration of this department of effective and acceptable reform, and the appointment of exponents of the work wherever it is practicable. We have some county superintendents of the department in New York, California and Pennsylvania; state superintendents in Maine, Missouri, Nevada, Idaho, Wisconsin and North Dakota.

Yours for the inculcation of thrift and the uplifting of humanity,

SARA LOUISA OBERHOLTZER,
W. and N. Supt. School Savings Banks.

W. C. T. U. COFFEE HOUSE SUPERINTENDENTS, ATTENTION.

Will every reader of this article, who is interested in coffee houses, please send to me at once the address and facts concerning any coffee house in the United States of which he or she may know? I refer to those which have been instituted wholly or in part by the W. C. T. U. Travelers are asking for a directory and it is very desirable to prepare such a help to be placed in every coffee house in the land. If the necessary information is sent to me very soon we may hope to issue such a directory before the October convention.

Yours in the work,

THE WOMAN'S LECTURE BUREAU.

During the World's Fair the Woman's Lecture Bureau will have its headquarters in the organization room of the Woman's Building.

We will be pleased to talk over the work of the coming season with patrons, visitors, and lecturers and cordially invite all to call while in the city.

We expect that great good will result from our summer's work and we wish to urge upon all who sympathize with the work of the Bureau the necessity of using every effort possible to put this department on the footing it deserves. This can only be done through the effective coöperation of the local, county and state unions.

We have a few dates at our disposal of the popular Swedish lecturer, Miss Cecile Gohl, subject: Home life in Sweden (in costume) and the famous Smith sisters concert sextette.

The following lecturers are under our management, and we call your attention to the splendid list of workers:

Frances E. Willard, on her return home.

Lady Henry Somerset, while visiting this country.

Rev. Anna H. Shaw.* Pennsylvania and Ohio early fall.

Mary T. Lathrap.* New York after August 8. Pennsylvania after September 15.

Helen M. Gougar.*

Miss Anna Gordon, the World's W. C. T. U. superintendent of temperance work among children.

Rollo Kirk Bryan, Chalk Talker.

Mrs. Sarah A. McClees, of New York, will attend the Grand Army Encampment at Indianapolis in September and will remain until after the National W. C. T. U. Convention which is to be held in Chicago, in October. Mrs. McClees, National superintendent for the department of soldiers and sailors, will be accompanied by Mrs. Mary Grant Cramer, a sister of the late Gen. U. S. Grant, who will lecture with her during the months of September and October in Illinois and adjoining states. Several very successful lecture tours have been made by these ladies and their addresses will be especially interesting to members of the G. A. R. and their friends as well as all who are in sympathy with their work.

LEWIS county, Washington, has had quite a boom in W. C. T. U. work during the month of July.

A BAND of young people recently entered into active temperance service is the Carlinville, Ill., Y, organized in March, now numbering eighty-eight members. They have held one reception at which about two hundred persons were present, and a number of socials, besides working with the local W. C. T. U. Their latest effort, the first of a series of the Demorest medal contests was held on the evening of June 29 and was a glorious success and an educator to the large and interested audience.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

The just shall live by faith.—Gal. 3: 11.

Nine members of the Falmouth, Mass., W. C. T. U. filled nine mite-boxes, and sent their contents, $33, to the Whittier memorial clock. This was a beautiful thing to do. We wish that in each union a few of the well-to-do members would form themselves into Whittier memorial clubs, and raise a fund for this memorial in memory of one of the purest and noblest of men, whose magic pen touched the tenderest chords in the human heart, as he pleaded in his sweet and pathetic songs for the equality of the race, for the lifting of heavy burdens and for more love to God and man. So far only $150 have been received for it. It is to cost $450. The sculptor, Carl Rohl-Smith, who has completed the unique design, which is now being cast in copper, and contains, among other beautiful symbols, the features of the sainted poet, promises to wait for his pay until the money is sent in for the memorial. Besides the verse which was written for the Temple by Whittier himself the following inscription will appear on the bronze: "The Woman's Laureate, John Greenleaf Whittier, 1807–1892. A Memorial from the Temperance People of the World." From the above it will be seen that the gifts of men, as well as women, will be acceptable. In this connection we desire to say that Walter Crane, of London, is now engaged on the Madam Willard memorial window; we have not yet received sufficient to pay for it. It is to cost $500, and $210 only have been received to date.

Ever since Christ's gracious words were uttered in regard to the "widow's mite," an added preciousness has seemed to emanate from the gifts of those who, in order to give have had to deny themselves. So many gifts to the Temple have this rare value, that to me its walls seem to glow with the beauty of the city not made with hands, which John saw in prophetic vision. Miss Lou N. Ammen, Tuscola, Ill., writes: "As I am a kind of a shut-in, there are not many ways by which I can make money. A year ago last spring I sold a few early-cut flowers. The following fall I sold some plants which I grew from cuttings." Then she tells her tribulations in selling her plants and flowers on account of her not being able to go out. She continues: "At last I have paid my floral expenses, filled my mite-box, and gladly send my little mite, $3.65." A good brother, Mr. C. A. Spooner, Sand Creek, Mich., sends $6. He writes: "I send you the coupons from my Temple Trust Bonds. As I think I can get along without their avails, you may use it for the Temple debt." A dear white-ribboner, Mrs. H. A. Wood, Plainfield, Ill., who is a "shut-in" on account of an attack of paralysis, says: "Although I am deprived of the pleasure of seeing you face to face, and hearing news of the work in which I am so much interested, I can let my money work for me, and it gives me pleasure to increase my subscription this year. I inclose $10."

Mrs. G. W. Wilson, Atlanta, Ga., sends $5 from her mite-box, saying: "I trust God's blessing may go with it and make it a power in this grand work. I would it were hundreds, nay thousands, but the little with His blessing is worth more than great revenues of wealth unblessed." Mrs. P. M. Slough, Marion, Mich., sends $3.70. She writes: "I earned this money knitting for the store." Jennie Leason, Cannon Falls, Minn., sends $3.65. She says: "I enclose you the contents of my mite-box. I am so glad to be able to send something to help build our beloved Temple. I wish I could send more, but will try and fill another mite-box. I have earned all this money myself, and was so glad to do it for the Temple I love so much."

A two-cent stamp sent to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the Temple, Chicago, will secure a mite-box. Remember, any one placing in the box $2.50 from May 1, 1893, to May 1, 1894, will receive the lovely Columbian souvenir made of aluminum, with a cut of the Temple on one side and on the reverse the face of Miss Willard and the founder of the Temple, with suitable inscriptions.

Publisher's Notes.

YOUNG CRUSADER FOR AUGUST.

The Young Crusader for August has a feast of good things for the children. On the first page is a reproduction of the Children's Building, with a description by Miss Guernsey so realistic that it is almost like seeing with one's own eyes. You can imagine as you read the spirited boys of the gymnastic class exercising with their musical dumb bells, playing leap frog over the vaulting bars, climbing poles and ladders, and swinging from suspended rings.

You cannot so easily imagine the wee babies in the nursery, for you have never seen so many bright eyes and sweet faces together, but you can read all about them in Miss Guernsey's article.

The Editorial Notes will tell you what has been done with the pledge cards, and the fountain, and you must not omit to look at page 3, and read the thrilling story of Ma-ne-ha, a true tale of a wild Indian boy.

JULY NUMBER OF THE ADVANCE GUARD.

With this number begins a new volume of The Advance Guard. NOW is the time to send in your subscription. Many new features will add to its attractiveness, and you should not miss the new story, the initial chapter of which is to be found in the July number.

"The Tables Turned,"

BY MATTIE B. FAY,

is illustrated by our special artist. The story opens with a spirited conversation between five interesting young ladies whom our artist has grouped around a table putting the finishing touches on some neckties for use at a coming social. Conversation turns upon the imaginary wearers of the ties, and the laughing and sometimes thoughtless girls, discuss the standard of morality for men, and the possibility of their exquisite work being soiled by the stains of liquor or tobacco.

In this issue Rudyard Kipling tells how he became a Prohibitionist, and Miss Guernsey, in her usual graphic style, writes of historic homes at "The White City." The accurate drawings of Fort Marion, John Hancock House and Mt. Vernon, add to the interest of the article.

WHAT THE BOBOLINKS SAID.

BY BELLE L. BARNES.

NE afternoon young Philip Brown
Was reeling homeward from the town;
His brain confused by the flowing bowl,
That fell destroyer of body and soul.
The path where he was wont to go
Lay where the rush and iris grow.

The merry brook went babbling by,
The painted moth and dragon-fly
Poised lightly o'er its dimpling face,
Or darted on with agile grace.
A blackbird chattered in the sun,
The bobolinks rose one by one
From out the swaying summer grass,
And seemed to mock him as he passed.
"Bobolink! bobolink! Why, we should think
A man would be ashamed to drink!
Birds wouldn't do it! Chink-a-chee, chee;
Not we! Not we! we! we! we! we!"

Poor Phil, ashamed, hung down his head;
But soon forgot what the birds had said,
And began to dream in a maudlin way
Of all the money he meant to pay
From his empty pockets, some fine day.
He thought he'd invest in a flouring mill,
And buy that handsome house on the hill,
While his cellars should overflow—"Chee! chink!"
Up rose another gay bobolink—
"You're fooled! You're fooled! You stupid, you!
That's not what liquor brings one to!
'Twill make you poor as poverty!
You'll see! You'll see! See! see! see! see!"

Then Philip muttered, "A pretty pass!
When the birds nag a fellow for taking a glass!"
But the thought soon passed from his misty brain,
And he built another "castle in Spain."
He giggled and chuckled on thoughts intent
Of the day when he should be president.
He'd rule the roost with a rigid hand,
He'd send his minions all over the land,
He'd banish the opium-smoking Chinee,
But tobacco and whisky should both be free,
And that jolly old rum-seller over the way
Shouldn't have a penny of license to pay.
But a bobolink swayed on a willow limb,
And pertly and saucily answered him.
"Bobolink! Bobolink! You seem to think
A fool grows wise and great through drink!
'Twill bring you but disgrace, you'll see!
Twit! Twit! Trust me! Me! me! me! me!"

Then Philip bewildered and stammering said
"Th-that bird must have a remarkable head."
But the spasm of sense was quickly gone
And the maudlin dreamer went maundering on,
"As soon as Queen Victoria's dead
My little Molly'll rule in her stead;
And as for Willie, don't you be fooled,
He's one of the heirs of the late Jay Gould.
They'll see that their pa has money to spend!
And I'll buy their mother—such gowns—no end!"
But a bobolink sprang from its resting-place,
Flaunting reproof in his very face.
"Bobolink! Bobolink! Chee-a-chee chink!
The wives and children of them that drink
Down to the lowest level sink.
Would you have them looked up to, listen to me,
Let drink now be! be! be! be! be!"

Then Philip muttered, "Why, what's to pay?
The birds have turned temperance cranks to-day,
And the worst of it is I'm not so tight
But I know very well they are in the right.
Then tell me now, if it's not too late,
What must I do to be wealthy and great?"
Then every bird from its rounded throat,
Poured forth a rollicking, joyous note;
"Bobolink! Bobolink! Chee-a-chee chink!
Oh, sign the pledge to leave strong drink!
Sign it! Sign it! As quick as a wink!
Do it! Do it! Quick as can be!
And keep it! Teetotalee! lee! lee!"

PLEDGE.

Trusting in God's help I solemnly promise to abstain from the use of alcoholic drinks, as a beverage, and from the use of tobacco and opium in every form.

THE TEMPERANCE CHILDREN AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

BY ALICE M. GUERNSEY.

After many "trials and tribulations," for which the Exposition authorities were responsible rather than ourselves, the "exhibit" of the temperance children is in place at the Exposition. As is well known to the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL, when Miss Gordon first planned for the autograph chain it was confidently expected that the W. C. T. U. would have a building of its own at the World's Fair. When the National decided otherwise, and so little wall space was possible, we were at our wit's end to know what to do with the cards that were pouring in upon us.

Wall space, to a limited extent, could be found in the Children's Building. There, at each end, in the alcoves on the second floor, a frieze of cards has been arranged; at the east they are entirely American cards—red, white and blue; at the opposite end, over the maple-leaf colors of Canada, are draped festoons of Spanish and African cards. A large placard in the center of each display bears the words: "Temperance Pledge Cards, Signed by the Children of the World."

Around the W. C. T. U. section in the Organization Room are festooned lines of cards, but rules which forbid shutting off the general view across the room, have prevented any great display in that way. The only thing left was to show that the children in the Loyal Temperance Legions and Sunday-schools were "solid against the liquor traffic" and all its allies. This has been done by packing the cards just as closely as they could be placed, into a case made for the purpose. Thus arranged they form a solid mass containing 13⅛ cubic feet! At the top of this cubical case is a pyramid composed of festoons of the cards, the sides of the case being draped with the same. Around the top of the cube, in distinct lettering, interspersed with samples of the various cards over which are written the names of the countries they represent, are these placards:

"The Children's Protest and Prophecy."

"This case is closely packed to within about six inches of the top with temperance pledge-cards signed by the children of the world."

"The signers are members of Loyal Temperance Legions, where they receive thorough temperance training, and of Sunday-schools."

"Total number received including those in the Children's Building, over 300,000."

Thus we have kept faith with the children, for great care has been taken to have every card that has been received placed in one of these displays.

Willard Fountain is also in the W. C. T. U. space with this placard below it: "Willard Fountain. The Columbian gift of the Temperance Children of the World to the City of Chicago. To be set up in the city, on its permanent base, which will embrace troughs from which animals may drink, at the close of the Exposition."

It is a great disappointment to us all not to have the fountain in operation on the grounds this summer. But when it reached us the last of June, we soon learned that any provision for the waste water which the Exposition authorities would approve would be so expensive that we deemed it too heavy a tax on the L. T. L. pocketbook. For this reason in particular, and for some others in general, the present plan has been adopted.

The sale-tables have been found to be impracticable, so far as the Fair is concerned; the many nice articles sent for them are carefully packed, waiting for a chance to be displayed—a chance that we trust will come at the time of the next National Convention.

Chicago, Ill.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Those of you who go to the state or county fairs in your neighborhood will see, among other booths and displays within the grounds, one which bears the letters, W. C. T. U., and the motto, "For God and Home and Native Land." You, who belong to a temperance family, will know in a minute that this is the booth of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union to which your mamma, auntie, or older sister belongs, and there you will feel right at home. You will understand, too, that the busy ladies with the white ribbon badges who are serving the hungry folks at the refreshment tables are doing all this labor so that the thirsty ones may have good drinks which contain no alcohol. The "literature"—the little printed slips and circulars—which they give to the visitors at the booth to read tell all about the temperance work and workers. You will be glad that you are "in it" as you look at the busy scene. There are any number of little ways in which the children can help. Just offer your services and see!

Affectionately,

Aunt Jane

I am going to work for temperance,
Whenever I find a chance;
I'll always lend a helping hand,
"For God and Home and Native Land."

I will now close by proposing three cheers for temperance, and defeat to "King Alcohol!" ADDIE CLARK.

Join in the cheer and out with the handkerchiefs, Cozy Cornerers!

Our bar-rooms have all been closed and we have prohibition now in our town until the dispensary is opened. We think it is as wrong for the state to sell whisky as for a few people to do it. It is so nice here now. Our merchants say trade has increased since the bar-rooms have closed. I am thirteen years old. VERNON KENNEDY.

St. Matthews, S. C.

I hope your voters will be brave enough to say they don't want any liquor dealing of any sort and vote out the dispensary, Vernon.

I belong to the L. T. L. and mamma belongs to the W. C. T. U. We take THE UNION SIGNAL. I always look for the puzzles first, then the rest of the paper. I have begun to read the Bible through. I think it is very interesting. I am ten years old. Will you take me into the Cozy Corner? RAE SIMPSON.

Montesano, Wash.

Wouldn't that be a good plan for other Cozy Cornerers these long summer days? Write us again when you have finished your reading, Rae.

I am a temperance girl and a Prohibitionist. I read THE UNION SIGNAL, and like it, especially the Cozy Corner.

I love the Cozy Corner,
Because it doth unite,
Throughout the whole United States

RAMEY'S MEDICATOR is a very simple and practical instrument for getting medicated air all through the head, and into the throat and lungs. It is indorsed by prominent people. The firm guarantee their instrument and treatment to give perfect satisfaction or refund the money. The Medicator is used for treating Catarrh, Asthma, Bronchitis, Hay Fever, Headache, and all head and throat troubles. The price of instrument and four months treatment is only $2.

See cut of the instrument and testimonials showing what it has done for others, at the bottom of the second page of this issue, and for further particulars address RAMEY MEDICATOR Co., 85 Dearborn St., Chicago.

The National Bichloride of Gold Company, of Chicago, of which Dr. Mark M. Thompson, of Chicago, is President and Manager, is reliable and successful in its work. The victim of intemperance, opium or the tobacco habit, is not only skilfully handled professionally, and his fearful appetite destroyed, but he is surrounded by a strong, bracing moral and religious atmosphere, that goes a long way toward reforming the social and moral habits of those who have been given to excesses, and aids to make permanent their cure.

A SEWING MACHINE.

What is home without a sewing machine? Home without a sewing machine to-day is primitive. It is indispensable; it facilitates and lightens work, saves time and avoids waste of power. A person would naturally think that every home contained a sewing machine by this time; but not so, thousands are without them.

To the purchaser the perplexing question is which make to select. To our readers we would cheerfully recommend the Oxford Mfg. Co., Chicago, whose advertisement appears in another part of this issue. Their machines are highly indorsed.

The World's Fair Grounds cover nearly 200 acres. A stranger would get lost without a guide among the hundreds of buildings. The handiest and most convenient one is issued by the Chicago Scale Co., which is furnished free upon application to them, or mailed to any address for two cents to pay postage.

Only One Wedding Present.

"It is a volume which should be in every home in the land, and if, as a wedding present we could give our daughter but one thing, that one would be a volume of TOKOLOGY."—Editor Autumn Leaves. WORLD'S FAIR NOTES.

Citizens of Chicago and the great northwest are all interested in our manufacturing industries. One of our most extensive and permanent manufacturers has made an exhibit in the musical department that will make old Eastern houses blush with envy. We allude to the matchless exhibit made by the Chicago Cottage Organ Company with their organs and the very justly celebrated CONOVER piano. These pianos are acknowledged by our most prominent and leading professional piano players to excel in elegance of tone, free action, quick, responsive touch, elegance of finish and durable qualities, and inferior to none and superior to most all other instruments made anywhere. We advise our readers to examine them at 215 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

A VERY POPULAR TRAIN on the CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC RAILWAY leaves Chicago, daily, at 10 P. M. It is called is only one day out, and passengers arrive at Denver, Pueblo or Colorado Springs early the second morning.

"THE BIG FIVE"

The "ROCK ISLAND" has become a popular Colorado Line, and the train above referred to is Vestibuled, and carries the "ROCK ISLAND'S" excellent Dining Car Service.

A PHILANTHROPY FUND.

Now and then there come to us burning words of appreciation, which we reproduce that the fire may be enkindled in other hearts. The following is from the pen of a motherless girl, but fifteen years of age: "I am only a poor girl, fifteen years old. I have no mother, and I have to keep house for my papa and take care of the children. There are five children of us, the youngest seven years old, but, thank God, this is a temperance family and a Christian home, though we are very poor. I just cannot get along without my UNION SIGNAL, for I cannot attend meetings much, and it is such a blessing to me; so, if you possibly can, please continue the paper until I can get the money, and I will send it to you. The love to work for temperance so burns in my soul sometimes I can hardly stay at home. Your true temperance sister."

It is needless to say THE UNION SIGNAL will still make its weekly visits to this humble home.

We wish our more fortunate temperance workers would supply us with a "philanthropy fund" to meet just such demands as these. Who will take the initiative?

Co. G, Orphan Asylum, Milwaukee, Wis.

"The tears welled up from my heart as I read the touching letter of the young girl who is mothering her little brothers and sisters, and 'cannot get along without THE UNION SIGNAL.' Bless the dear girl! I know who would delight 'to take the initiative' in starting a 'Philanthropy Fund'—my bright little Co. G in the orphan asylum of this city (Milwaukee). The children count it a great joy to give from their limited treasury, and I think other L. T. L's in Wisconsin will gladly follow. Co. G will give $1 now; more by-and-by."

ADVANCE GUARD FOR AUGUST.

We call special attention to the serial, "The Tables Turned," begun in the last number of The Advance Guard. Its topic, of an equal standard of purity and temperance for young men and young women, is one in which all our readers are interested, and on which they have opinions of their own. The first chapter introduced us to the girls, while this month we have a no less clever sketch of a boy's club. The two sets of young people are carried along together, and in scenes that are true to life. The author has woven into the story the breeziness and strength of the far western mountains around her home, its warp being an "ower true tale" of her own girlhood.

Price of The Advance Guard is only 50 cents per annum.

The August number of the Oak and Ivy Leaf contains a helpful symposium on the topic, "How to coöperate with kindred societies." Send in your subscription to the Oak and Ivy Leaf if it has expired and get this number.

ATTENTION, TOTAL ABSTAINERS!

The American Temperance Life Insurance Association...

187 BROADWAY, NEW YORK CITY.

Is a Straight-Out Temperance Company, Insuring Only TOTAL ABSTAINERS.

RATES ARE LOW AND POLICIES CONTINUOUS.

Total Abstainers now in good standing in other like companies will be re-insured in the American Temperance Life Insurance Association without a re-examination, and without payment of the usual entrance or membership fee.

ABSOLUTELY NO COST FOR THE FIRST 30 DAYS.

This Association is incorporated under the stringent laws of New York, which require claims to be paid promptly and in full.

No claims, caused by use of liquors, to pay. Life policies issued.

No 10-year term policies issued by this Association, as such policies often expire just before a member dies, and the protection offered by a life policy is most needed.

You can obtain a life policy in this Association cheaper than a term policy in other companies.

A term policy is very profitable to the company issuing it, but very unprofitable to the member paying for it. This is the only regular Life Insurance Company in the country insuring only total abstainers. It is now absorbing the membership of temperance orders, and proposes to continue until it is the strongest temperance organization in the world.

This Association insures members whose ages are forty-five and upwards at a fair increase over the cost of younger members, instead of excessive rates charged by old-line companies.

WORLD'S AND NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTIONS.

The World's W. C. T. U. will hold its second biennial meeting in the Memorial Art Palace, Lake Front Park, Chicago, Ill., beginning October 16, 1893, in connection with the World's Columbian Exposition Congresses, and the National W. C. T. U. will hold its twentieth annual convention in the same place on succeeding days. All National societies of the W. C. T. U. are entitled to send delegates to the World's Convention in the proportion of one for every one thousand members, and state societies will be represented in the National W. C. T. U. Convention by one for every five hundred members, besides the general officers.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

The attendance at the World's Fair is increasing.

Lieutenant Peary is reported to be storm-bound on the coast of North Labrador.

President Cleveland returned to Gray Gables, Saturday, and is said to be in ill health.

The weather in the vicinity of Chicago has been exceptionally cool and pleasant.

As the Clingman injunction still stands, the World's Fair was nominally open last Sunday.

The Board of Lady Managers of the World's Columbian Exposition adjourned sine die, August 12.

Large audiences greeted the sessions of the woman suffragists at the Art Palace, Chicago, last week.

Russian reports, heretofore held back, show a large death list from cholera in the different provinces.

Commander Ballington Booth, of the American division of the Salvation Army, has returned from London.

A million dollar fire swept through the lumber districts at Minneapolis, Minn., last Sunday morning, leaving fifteen hundred people homeless.

Fines have been imposed on a number of hotel and restaurant keepers in the vicinity of Hyde Park for violating the prohibitory ordinances.

Congresses on peace and arbitration, on Africa, on pharmacy, dentistry, medical jurisprudence, horticulture and trade journals convene at Chicago this week.

A dispatch from London announces that the miners of Scotland, Northumberland and Durham will not join the great strike, the failure of which seems assured.

A conference of the finance ministers of the several German states has just closed at Frankfort, its object being to raise money for the requirements of the new army bill.

Both Houses of Congress, convened according to special call at Washington last week, have made preliminary arrangements for the discussion of the vital question before the country—its finances.

Owing to a lack of currency and the fact that the license law is mandatory in this respect, only a comparatively small quantity of the whisky trust's products have been released from bond in Illinois.

The financial disturbances in America are affecting the great money centers of Europe, the demands for gold are draining London for supply and the balance of trade is now turned in favor of this country.

Religious riots between the Mohammedans and Hindoos broke out in Bombay last week, during which many persons were killed and twelve hundred arrests were made before order was restored by the British troops.

At the Zurich socialist congress, August 10, a resolution offered by Norwegian delegates that a universal strike be started immediately after a war is declared was rejected. A Belgian amendment in favor of aiming to suppress militarism by withholding supplies was adopted.

A VALUABLE paper on "Proportional Representation," read before the government congress by Professor Commins, of Indiana University, will appear in the next number of THE UNION SIGNAL. It will be followed by others (also read in the congress) from distinguished advocates of that system, among them W. D. McCracken, of Boston.

THE Illinois Christian Endeavor societies have inaugurated a temperance campaign. They have secured the services of Mr. John G. Woolley for a year, and arrangements are being made for him to speak over the length and breadth of the state. He will remain but one night in each place, delivering in every town and city he visits his matchless lecture, "Inalienable Rights." We rejoice to see the young people of the churches thus setting an example of temperance activity. Temperance work is legitimately church work, and we hope this movement will be the beginning of vigorous effort along prohibition lines by the churches as churches.

SINCE the days of Abraham Lincoln probably no presidential message has been so anxiously looked for and so universally read as that of President Cleveland to the fifty-third Congress in extra session assembled. The money question arouses even those men and women who are usually selfishly apathetic with regard to congressional affairs and stirs them to a consciousness of the power vested in their representatives at Washington. Whether we agree with Mr. Cleveland or not concerning the remedy for our financial difficulties we must at least regard his official utterance as that of a leader who has the interests of the people at heart and who, we hope, will continue to maintain the political independence which has so far characterized his administration.

APROPOS of the financial problem, the Christian Statesman very pertinently suggests that "when a manly and courageous statesmanship shall probe to the bottom of this ulcer it will let out a mighty volume of 'double distilled damnation.'" We quite agree with its proposition that "if the two billions of dollars that are annually sunk in the saloon were saved and put into legitimate channels of trade the financial condition of the country would be greatly improved," and we further suggest that a nation of total abstainers and a Congress whose brains were in no danger of being befogged and befuddled by alcoholic fumes, even in a "temperate" degree, would be far more capable of wrestling with conditions and bringing order out of chaos than under the existing order of things.

NO MORE ludicrous anachronism has been embodied in custom than the practical exclusion of women from being even so much as "lookers on in Venice" when the British Parliament is in session. In olden times a few very privileged women were wont to congregate in the ventilator in the roof, and by taking a horizontal position face downwards, they could hear a little by the "intent lending of an ear." At present thirty of them can peer out (and they are generally peeresses) through the iron bars that supervene between them and the rulers of the land; a few are also accommodated in the speaker's gallery (by his politeness), and when Mr. Gladstone made his great Home Rule speech last winter four women, we are told, by favor of a high official, had positions in the basement, under the iron open-work ventilator, just at Mr. Gladstone's feet. Could personal abasement further go? Whatever we may not be in America, such a position of affairs would be inconceivable. Members of the highest legislative body would rather stand and give their chairs to women whom they honored than endure the thought of such a spectacle. It is said in token of the "irrepressible woman's question" that a resolution is to be offered in Parliament permitting women to share with men the advantages of the strangers' gallery in Parliament.

MANY welcome words of congratulation come to us from friends and workers regarding the Fair number of THE UNION SIGNAL. Its artistic exterior and the pertinent and suggestive literary matter of its interior are widely appreciated by our readers. A large edition has been issued to meet the demand for distribution at state and county fairs, and we urge local unions to send in their orders without delay. Let us seize the opportunity offered by these agricultural gatherings to educate the masses along the lines of W. C. T. U. work; let us scatter broadcast in country communities prohibition literature for young and old. Information regarding the W. T. P. A. publications will be found on another page.

NOTWITHSTANDING the warfare being waged by the Hyde Park Protective Association against illegal liquor selling in the prohibition district, resulting in the bringing of hundreds to justice, the World's Fair management still continues to grant concessions for the sale of intoxicating drink. A Canadian firm of distillers has recently obtained permission to supply pure (!) whisky to the patrons of the White Horse Inn. When the Exposition authorities thus openly defy city ordinance and state law, and when "good citizens" throughout the entire city are not found protesting against defiance, what can be expected of the avowedly "lawless classes?" As long as the World's Fair management sets such an example of disrespect for law and law-makers the less the people and press of Chicago say against the pardoning of the anarchists the better.

BICYCLING is a healthful and happy exercise which is deservedly popular. But we regret to see its true end subverted as at the International League races in Chicago last week. In a racing contest which aims for development, and where conditions are favorable for a fair trial of speed there is much honest and improving sport. But in these bicycle races where the riders are doubled up like jack-knives over their whirring wheels, only to drop at the close in a completely exhausted condition, we can see no chance for the betterment of the race! During the sixty mile dash last Saturday a dozen riders rode at topmost speed for three hours and a half. Small wonder that only two were able to finish and that one of them had to be lifted from his seat at the close. We enter our earnest protest against such a perversion of a convenient and hygienic mode of travel.

THE interest of the suffrage congress held last week in the Art Palace centered in the subject of electoral reform, representatives of all political creeds participating in the discussions. Conceding the fact (as all fair-minded people must do) that our present government is mis-representative, the necessity for such reform, if this republic is to be maintained, is imperative. The general sense of the congress was that proportional representation is the remedy for political abuses. The idea is for each state to elect its legislators at large, thus obliterating arbitrary boundary lines within the state and making the gerrymander impossible. Also for each city to elect its aldermen as it elects its mayor, thus abolishing the ward and the ward politician. A mock election was held illustrating the proposed method. The discussions crystallized into an organization known as the American Proportional Representation League, with William Dudley Foulke, of Indiana, as president. A committee of one from each state and territory, and from each province of Canada, was appointed to spread the new doctrine, and a bill was drawn up for presentation to Congress embodying the principles of the league. We believe the time is near at hand—and that these congresses have hastened the day—when every responsible human being shall be truly represented in our government, and when no vote, for whatever party cast, shall be "lost," or "thrown away."

A BIRTHRIGHT.

BY WARNER SNOAD.

Once a Guardian Angel stood,
With a germ of womanhood
Laid upon his sheltering arm,
His to shield from every harm—
His, the power to crave at birth
One bright blessing of the earth.

Beauty! "Nay," he said, "'twill be
But a snare and misery,
Wealth, Fame, Fortune—they are given,
On the road away from Heaven.
Whatsoever fate befall
Love, I think, is best of all."

"But," said Sorrow, "I must stray
Evermore across her way,
Where love treads with restless feet
Bitter springs among the sweet,
And my raindrops heaviest fall
On the truest hearts of all."

"Still," the Guardian Angel said,
"Love is shield in doubt or dread,
Love is Poverty's sun-ray
Cheering grim despair away;
Love gives zest to sun or shine,
Love in trouble is divine."

"Nay," said Sorrow, "'tis not so;
Be but poor, and love will go,
Pleasure's always on the rove,
Yet she changes less than love;
And with sickness, grief or age
Love will ever warfare wage."

"Nay," the Guardian Angel said,
"Love is God's own sunshine shed;
Bring you every thorn and smart
That can pierce this baby heart,
Yet I claim the world's one leaven
And the stepping-stones to Heaven."

. . . . . .

Years passed by: a woman grown,
Trial and sorrow all her own,
Youth and beauty flown away
Eyes tear-dimmed and tresses gray,
Loving, thanked her God for love.
And the angels smiled above.

The Lilies, Lee, England.

MRS. FAIRWEATHER SEES THE INFANTA.

BY MARIA FAIRWEATHER.

"I don't care a mite about the O-bees anarchies of the old world," says 'Lias scornful like. Since 'Lias had that cider bath I wrote you about, he has not been so 'umble as he'd ought to; instid of that he's been so proud of buyin' that pony phantom for me, that he's held his head higher than ever. The Fairweathers always was a proud set.

"'Lias," says I, "you don't mean O-bees, you mean F-feet, the F-feet monarchies." We was at Cerilda's and I wouldn't be put down before the whole family, I was going to have my say. "More than that, 'Lias, the Infanta is a linoleum descendant of Christopher Columbus, and we'd ought to see her as a patriotic duty," says I. "What do you think, Cerilda?" Not that I cared what she thought but I was bound to be polite in her own house.

"Well," says Cerilda, "I don't care much for infants, myself, roil children or any other kind. "You don't s'pose she's likely to bring any kind of fever or disease with her, do you?"

I felt kind o' huffy right away. Next to the wimmen weak-stomached, spindlin' and ghosty, and always pretendin' nothin' ever ails 'em, I get the most aggervated at the women that nothin' ever ails, and that are always seekin' like roarin' lions for diseases to grapple with. Now, I never seen a ruggeder woman than Cerilda, she's tuffer'n a pine knot. But as soon as any assortment of diseases is round, she's like all possessed to git a tussle with 'em.

While I was waitin' to git myself under control, Sim spoke up and with a wink at 'Lias, says he, "I s'pose Cerilda kind o' connects her name with cholera—cholera infanta. See?"

"Poh!" says I, "she's no more likely to have cholera than you are. As for the infant part of it, she's a woman growed," says I, "the word Infanta means printsis, that's all."

"We'll go," says 'Lias suddenly. "We'll go and see the Infanty and take in the World's Fair the same day. I jest as soon spend my money that way zenny other," says he, kind o' pompus. "You'n Cerilda better g'long," says he.

I pulled his coat slily, unbeknown to Sim an' Cerilda, for I didn't want 'em along, but before I could say anything Sim says, "I'd like it first-rate," says he, "but I'm a little surprised at Marier wanting to see the Infanty, for they say she don't despise cigarettes and beer as the W. C. T. U. women do."

I was a good deal put out at 'Lias for he had no business to ask 'em. Cerilda is so fussy and pernickitty, and Sim—well, you can't never tell what Sim'll do next. He's one o' them smarties that's always gettin' jokes on folks, and not a bit pertickler what kind o' jokes, either, and if he takes a notion to up and drink, why, he'd do it if Queen Victory stood right there. And after we got away I told 'Lias my mind about it, but he only laughed and says he:

"Sim's a good feller, but he's a little queer. But he's learned the ropes pretty well; you know he lived in Chicago once, and he knows more about the Fair grounds than I'll ever learn. As for Cerilda, let her stew, she'll fuss about so much anyhow. Don't mind her, Marier, F-feet anarchies don't grow on every bush."

Dear, dear! the sputter Cerilda was in about that journey! She tied a bag of fetty gum on her chest to keep away diseases, she hitched a bottle o' smellin' salts on one o' her dress buttons and she put a pot of iodoform liniment in her shopping bag in case of accident, she said. Then she loaded Sim's pockets up with bottles, camphor in case of faint, carbolic acid to disinfect the bunk—for we had to travel in a sleeping car, and the land knows what.

"If Cerilda goes on this way," says Sim, "I'll have to invent a bicycle drug store to tag on after her with, every time she goes into the street." For once I really pitied Sim, seeing him loaded down with bottles, all for that woman's freaks, for Cerilda's sound as a dollar, and I know it.

I'm not going to describe that journey. I couldn't. We could get but one bunk and Cerilda and I had to sleep together, and the smell of the iodoform and fetty and camphor was worse than a hospittle. I was real glad that I had never worried 'Lias that way, and that I had the money in the bank to pay the expenses of our trip. I felt zif I was a real helpmeet to 'Lias.

When we got to the Fair grounds, Sim talked with a man that went in ahead of us, and then he said we'd go to the German village to see the Infanta. It was hot and Sim seemed dizzy at times. Once I turned around and saw him take Cerilda's camphor bottle out of his pocket and smell of it.

"There," says Sim, "there she is now at that table."

I gave a big sithe of satisfaction when I seen her, the linear descendant of Columbus sitting there by a little table with some gentlemen all tricked out with colored clothes and ornaments hung onto their coats; and when Sim motioned us to sit at a table next to hers, I sat down so flustered that I did not notice anything was wrong till I heard a crash, and there was Sim sitting flat on the table weaving dizzily from side to side.

"See here, old woman," he roared, "it's your treat;" and with that he snatched Cerilda's fetty bag off her neck and threw it in the Infanta's face. Then he pulled out one bottle after another—an empty whisky bottle that he pretended was Cerilda's, and then a bottle of indelible ink that she put in by mistake got broke and flew all over Cerilda's new blue silk trimmed with impure lace, and all over 'Lias's face, till he looked like a Modoc chief ready for the war path. The Infanta screamed, a policeman came up and took hold of 'Lias, when I heard a laff behind me, and turning round, if there wasn't Sister Bush, with one hand on the Infanta's chair to steady herself, laffin' till I thought she'd hurt herself. Then she stooped and kissed the Infanta and gurgled out, "Why, Mary Bush! I hardly knew you." And behold you, it wasn't the Infanta at all, only Mr. Bush's niece from Kansas with some of her friends that was actin' in a military play.

Let me draw a vale over what followed—a vale of tears, speakin' in figgers. Brother Bush interfered in the case, and I don't rightly know how it was to this day, but I know it cost me fifty dollars to get clear, and we all sneaked off home that night. It took weeks for the stain to wear off 'Lias's face, and his new clothes was ruined. The only comfort anybody got was Cerilda, for the heat and the smells and the excitement really made her sick for a day or two. But it's learned 'Lias one lesson; he'll never dare to ask them Simpkinses to go with us again, an' I feel easy'n I've done for one spell, which is somethin' for a W. C. T. U.

Moline, Ill.

God does not intend that sanctified ignorance and stupidity shall tear down unsanctified knowledge and intelligence.—Dr. Lorimer.

SUICIDE OF A UNITED STATES SOLDIER, DRUNK ON GOVERNMENT SALOON BEER.

BY A SOLDIER.

Until about twelve months ago there was no government saloon, or post exchange, at Fort Apache, Arizona. This post is a very isolated one, being ninety miles from the nearest railroad depot. There is an Indian trader's store, at which "beer and light wine" were sold, under restriction, to the soldiers stationed at it. No one could be supplied except on a written order, signed by an officer, and this being the case, the supply of liquor was, beyond question, thoroughly under control.

But this state of affairs was unendurable to the men; they could not get as much beer as they desired, and so, after much clamoring, an exchange was opened, with great eclat, in the month of July, 1892. The usual details were made, according to the army regulations—a commissioned officer being placed in charge, a sergeant and two privates attending to the bar under his supervision. The regulations state that these details are to be looked on as a part of military duty.

For the first several days the average consumption of beer was ten barrels a day. Each barrel contained six dozen bottles, so that the daily seven hundred and twenty bottles were consumed, and I may state that this number has been on occasions since then exceeded.

The Indian trader, who, as stated, formerly had the sales, remarked to me that "his eyes had been opened," as to the beer-drinking capacity of the average soldier.

Since the establishment of this exchange the drunkenness at the post has considerably increased, although—and note this fact—the trials by summary court for drunken crimes will not bear out this statement for the simple reason that a large proportion of the drunkards are never interfered with, while numbers of others are temporarily confined in the guard-house, and then released without trial, this latter phase of the case being quite common.

Each pay-day that has come round since the opening of this canteen (or "exchange" as the authorities wish to have it designated) has made the men more eager for their drunken orgies, and this has at last brought about a terrible tragedy.

On the 10th day of June last a man by the name of Sullivan, belonging to "D" Troop, 1st Cavalry, together with two others, one being a citizen, repaired to a saloon, and according to the best information that can be obtained, drank between them no less than twenty-seven dollars' worth of beer. It may be stated that this man Sullivan had been on a prolonged drunk, extending over several weeks.

After dark, during a dispute between these three drunken men, Sullivan shot the citizen, completely shattering his jaw; he then turned on his soldier companion and fired twice at him, only grazing his forehead, however; and, finally, thoroughly crazed with drink, put a bullet through his own skull.

And now mark what followed. This would-be murderer and suicide got drunk on beer sold at the "government" institution, which is managed by United States officers and men placed there by "government" rules and regulations as a part of their "military" duties. The man could scarcely be blamed for patronizing his own saloon, specially run on the coöperative plan for his benefit, and so the authorities had to look upon his tragic death as though it had occurred in the direct line of duty, and he was buried with full military honors. Thus does the U. S. government, through its army authorities, honor one of its drunkard soldiers. This may appear startling to an observer outside of military life, but to one who has spent a few years in it, there is nothing strange about it. The tendency of army life, as it now is—favoring drinking men, and unmistakeably showing its utter contempt for non-drinking soldiers, or temperance in any shape or form—is toward "unlimited drinking and no punishment to result therefrom," and this clause should be made one of the features of the elaborate posters shown at the various enlisting places.

Not many months since the chaplain at this post preached a temperance sermon, and was careful to allude to general facts only as regards the drink habit. It is true that his sermon was a thoroughly earnest one, but there was nothing which could be construed as personal in its phraseology. The attendance at divine service of the officers and their families was never very creditable, but after this sermon they "cut" the services altogether, and their absence was marked enough to cause considerable comment throughout the garrison.

It has been, and is claimed for the post-exchange, that the opening of such an institution is a direct benefit to the soldier, as he can be kept under proper control, that no beer is sold to a soldier who is at all under the influence of liquor, and generally that a soldier is much better off where there is such an institution than where there is none.

Can any one—even an army officer—pretend that the sale of over twenty dollars' worth of beer to three men on one day is a benefit; can any one think for a moment that there was any pretence here of controlling the appetites of these men; can it be argued that these men showed no signs of intoxication long before the last dollar's worth was served to them? No fair-minded person can answer these questions in the affirmative, and I assert that these controlling influences that are so much bragged about are a sham. The canteen sergeant is there for the purpose of making profits, such profits being divided up every now and then among the various organizations at the post, and used to better the supply of food at the men's mess-tables, and the men in charge of the bar care little or nothing whether a man is drunk or not, so long as he is not uproariously so. At about the commencement of the prolonged drunk which ended in this man, Sullivan, taking his own life, I heard it openly stated as a fact that he spent fourteen dollars for beer in one day. The system that will allow such an expenditure from one individual cares nothing at all about the man—all it wants is his money.

It was well known, not only in the troop to which this unfortunate man belonged, but to every one in the garrison, that this man's craving for drink was a mania. He would drink anything that would act as a stimulant, and the sergeant in charge of the canteen belonged to the same troop. There could, therefore, be no possible excuse. The man was deliberately "done to death" by the government institution that was established for his benefit.

And what will be done about it? Nothing. Will any steps be taken to prevent any other poor drunkard from obtaining just as much beer as he wants, whether he is able to control his actions or not? The answer must be in the negative, unless the people of the United States will come to the front in the matter. They are the masters, and it is imperative, for the welfare of their little army, that they should unmistakably show that they are the masters. The government will do nothing, the army authorities will not interfere; they are too much infatuated with their pet drunkard-producing scheme. The Christian people of this country must come to the rescue.

One method that can be put into operation everywhere, at once, is to give this matter prominence in conversation, especially in districts from which the authorities look for a large number of their recruits. Let them at least have the knowledge of what is before them before they enter the service. The army to-day is no fit place for any self-respecting young man. The vices predominate, virtues are the minus quantity.

THREE PHASES OF THE LABOR MOVEMENT.

I.

BY ANNIE B. E. JACKSON.

I remember when a young girl reading Charles Kingsley's Alton Locke, Tailor and Poet, and although to-day unable to recall the story, I am equally unable to rid myself of the impression made upon me by it.

Quite sure am I that I failed to understand just what Kingsley meant to teach, but I grasped this truth, that the relation of the working man in the community is not just what it ought to be, and with youthful enthusiasm I felt myself drawn toward the laboring classes.

Statistics are said to be dry reading, but there must be a class of readers somewhere who readily give time and thought to the figures brought forward by those who argue on all sides of this many-sided question, if we can judge by a glance through current numbers of both English and American periodicals.

Carroll D. Wright states that one million people are out of employment in this country, certainly a large force, in which discontent, distrust and crime may breed. In Massachusetts, with its manufactories, its pleasant homes and prudent people, the average income is three hundred and fifty dollars a year, and with the wealth of its cities eliminated, how pitiably small become the incomes of the masses of its people.

In one American city eighty-two thousand people, mostly wage earners, live on three hundred and fifty acres of land, two thousand of these citizens below the level of the street, in some instances two families occupying the same room with a chalk mark for a partition. Does not the perusal of such a book as "How the Other Half Lives" make us sharers in Prof. Huxley's feeling that he would prefer to be born in the Fiji Islands rather than in a London slum? Yet New York City outstrips even London in the horrors of overcrowding.

The chief complaint of the working classes is to be stated in these words, "We do not receive our full share of the increase of wealth"; and it is hardly fair to answer this with the statement, "You have more comforts than the same class of people one hundred years ago," for with advancing civilization luxuries are transformed into necessities. The ancestors of England's Queen lived in houses without window-glass and chimneys, but we do not look at the matter of relative poverty or wealth from their standpoint.

If, as good authorities tell us, twenty-five thousand people in the United States own one-half the wealth of the country, both real and personal, and if out of fifteen million families only one million receive an income of more than four hundred dollars, that of the remaining fourteen millions falling below that figure, does it not look as though earnest thought had some mighty problems with which to grapple?

Three phases of this question press themselves home: Child labor; The Relation of Intemperance to the Labor Question; Woman's Place in the Labor Agitation.

CHILD-LABOR.

An impression rests on the minds of many that any interest in such facts as have been stated presupposes a feeling of antagonism toward capitalists, which is far from true; so in speaking of child labor, particularly in our factories, I wish to state at once that those familiar with the subject say children are often employed less to please the employer than the parents, who sometimes misrepresent the ages of their children in order to have them obtain positions. When one considers that this unremitting labor from tender years means an early physical decay with its long train of attendant evils, one naturally exclaims: "Where is parental feeling?" But dire necessity is the master. Machines that can often be run by childish hands have in many instances reduced the man's income. We sometimes hear of the high wages made in factories but we must remember these are exceptional, due to special skill in some complicated part of the work, also that factory labor is intermittent, mills and shops often closing for weeks at a time.

Mr. James Connoly, inspector for New York, says: "Year after year we have seen the demand for smaller children increase until it has become a veritable robbery of the cradle to supply it." The cloak-makers' strike brought to light the fact that mere babies, four years old, sew on buttons and pull out basting threads. The census of 1880 shows us that while the ratio of increase in the population of children between ten and fifteen was twenty per cent, the increase of children employed was fifty per cent.

We marvel at the English government Report of Factory and Mining Abuses and think it impossible pages so blood-stained could be duplicated in our country; but it is only our pitiable ignorance that blinds us to the horrors of what has rightfully been called "White Child Slavery" in the United States.

We read Mrs. Browning's pathetic words with trembling lips and moistened eyes:

"Do ye hear the children weeping, oh, my brothers,
Ere the sorrow comes with years?
They are leaning their young heads against their mothers,
And that cannot stop their tears.
The young lambs are bleating in the meadows,
The young birds are chirping in their nest,
The young fawns are playing in the shadows;
The young flowers are blowing toward the west—
But the young, young children, oh, my brothers,
They are weeping bitterly,
They are weeping in the play-time of the others,
In the country of the free.

"They look up with their pale and sunken faces,
And their look is dread to see,
For they mind you of their angels in high places,
With eyes turned on Deity,—
'How long,' they say, 'how long, oh, cruel nation,'
Will you stand to move the world on a child's heart,
Stifle down with a nailed heel its palpitation,
And tread onward to your throne amid the mart?
Our blood splashes upward, oh, gold-heaper—
And your purple shows your path—
But a child's sob in the silence curses deeper
Than a strong man in his wrath."

A RAILWAY train crowded with emigrants stopped at a station. "Water, water, cold water, free, fresh and sparkling every drop," called a porter, extending a dripping cup to the parched travelers. An old man almost crazed with thirst rushed from the car, but the burning pavement blistered his bare feet and he drew back crying desperately, "Water, water!" The porter slipped off his own slippers and threw them to the old man who moved over the hot stones to drink new life. Other porters stood round with their water cans, but they said in gruff tones: "Here's water; come and have it if you want it and come quick, too, or you won't get any, for it's hot enough standing here." A preacher looking on said: "There, I've learned to preach the gospel. I'll never threaten or scold my people, but I'll cry out to them joyfully the blessing and beauty and glory of the water of life."—Dr. Lorimer, of Tremont Temple.

"OUTSIDE" ORGANIZATIONS.

BY A. E. CAXTON.

Rev. Casper Wister-Hiatt, in an original and noteworthy address before a Congregational association at Owosso, Mich., paid the following fine tribute to the W. C. T. U.:

"But what of the W. C. T. U.? Has the union departed from its present ambition and work all in the line of securing a ballot for woman and of foisting one of several political parties into power? The union favors the political prohibition of the saloon, and also favors the extension of the ballot to women. But the securing of political franchise and the legal prohibition of the alcoholic traffic are not the whole of the work of the union. Indeed, it appears that there are some thirty-nine other departments of work in which the union is actively engaged, which the opponents of the above mentioned two departments seem wholly to have overlooked. By the testimony of one of the noblest women in America it is shown that, 'In totality, work has steadily increased on gospel lines, as understood by the broadly, rather than narrowly, orthodox people of the churches.' One of the practical accomplishments of the union in Michigan was the abolition of liquors from all fair grounds, a result obtained only after four years of watching and working and prayer. This union no longer kneels a feeble group of women on the sloppy floor of an Ohio grogshop. It has become a host. Its membership is twelve thousand in Michigan alone; with a majestic tramp, tramp, it has swept onward from the point of the Crusade, until it has tied a ribbon of white around the globe. And whatever our differences may be, we must say that if ever a work was Christian, measured by its sublime philanthropy and faith, its courage under heavens that were black, its patience under persecution, its magnificent conquests in the name of our King and its serene and hopeful contemplation of worlds yet to be won for righteousness, that work is carried on by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of America and the world. 'Fair as the moon, clear as the sun and terrible as an army with banners.'"

Mr. Hiatt claims that both the Y. M. C. A. and W. C. T. U. are doing work which the churches cannot do; that the institutional church is out of place wherever the Y. M. C. A's are flourishing and doing their natural work; that these agencies are really doing institutional work alongside the churches; churches fail to reach out beyond their own constituencies; that the brand of "church" upon an enterprise arouses the prejudices of many young men against the ordinary religious methods; that one who would rebel against being called "brother" enjoys the name "yoke-fellow"—human nature being usually a young man's largest stock in trade.

The W. C. T. U. claims that it is essentially an inside organization, almost every member of it being a member of the orthodox church, a supporter of all its objects, and usually the white-ribboners are "burning the candle at both ends" in the energy and effectiveness of their church work. It is a mistake to permit themselves to be called "outside"; rather should they claim to be part and parcel of the church. The fundamental doctrine of the W. C. T. U. is from the Bible; as its leader has said, "Total abstinence lives by implication in every letter of the Golden Rule; it stands by explication in the Pauline doctrine: 'It is good neither to eat meat nor to drink wine whereby thy brother is offended or made weak.'" The W. C. T. U's proper attitude is, from within, to demand the church's recognition and enforcement of its principles, as those exacted by commandment and gospel, "until the church becomes the one great temperance society and makes all other temperance societies needless."

Mr. Hiatt further says: "The church is made up of all sorts of material. In it are clear-eyed saints who look with keen discernment upon the good and evil, making their testimonies accordingly. In it also there are people who are new-born in the kingdom, literally the babes in Christ, with only feeble sense of sight and hearing. It is evident, therefore, that churches are not primarily the places for compelling assent to reformatory truths. It has crippled churches in the past, that they have been reformatories instead of nurseries. . . . It is true that the desire to hit something was inbred in the church life, so much so that even now when I find a man in the wrong, I am tempted to knock him out, rather than pull him out. . . Church homes like other homes should have a place for babes. This is not to say that only milk should be administered for twenty years. But even that would be wisdom, compared with introducing a diet of salt pork and cabbage to a child of a single day. If all Christians were equally advanced, or even reasonably advanced, we might make the church a worship; but as it is, we find ourselves fully employed, attempting to make it worship! Try writing the forty-one departments of the W. C. T. U. on the tablets of a church. If you get to anti-narcotics without a sensation and without a dissolution you will do well.

"In general, the ministry are heartily sympathetic with the Y. M. C. A., especially the younger ministers, many of whom received their earliest inspirations in association halls. From one of the W. C. T. U. headquartersa circular letter was sent out to ministers asking coöperation with the work, which happened in this case to have in it nothing objectionable in the way of politics. The replies came of two entirely different strains. In part the letters were kind and helpful, in part they were full of bitterness. The good women filed them respectively in cubby-holes named for convenience "Ebal" and "Gerizim"! It is reported that so far was one of the pastors from giving a reasonable support to this work, that he wrote an article criticising the union, which was afterwards circulated by the saloon-keepers as a campaign document. Thirty-eight per cent of the unions in one state report the ministry as supporters of their work. Sixty-eight per cent indicate that the ministers are not at all in sympathy.

There are two things which the church cannot altogether overlook and live. One is the welfare of young men and women, the other the practical purification of society and state. One is the work of the Y. M. C. A. and the other of the W. C. T. U. If we are not doing and cannot do this work in our churches we must do it in some other way. If we have neglected action until the Lord has raised up agencies that are grandly operating, it is not for us to play Achilles and sulk within our tents. If these agencies are going wrong it is our fault. We may enter them and with our wishes set them right. We have the privilege of a voice in all their deliberations and a vote in all their elections. We have the privilege of coöperating with these splendid regiments of the Lord of Hosts, and thus achieving everlasting victories.

What, then, should be the relation of the churches to these agencies?

I know of no other answer than this, that the churches should give them proper recognition as their natural and potent auxiliaries in the work of bringing this world to the feet of our Redeemer.

HILLSBORO CRUSADE SKETCHES.

XIV.

BY ELIZA J. THOMPSON.

At the close of the summer of 1874 Auxiliary Temperance leagues had been formed in almost every township of Highland county. The license clause of the new state constitution had been defeated, and, although all had not been accomplished in our own community that was desired or sought after, yet there was a state of reformation and safety existing that furnished at least great hopes for the future.

A call came about this time from a duly authorized group of Christian ladies—women who had "drawn near to God in saloon prayer-meetings"—and "as they recounted the wonders of the great uprising" at the restful retreat, Chautauqua, their hearts "burning within them" for still greater work, so this call was made upon every league of temperance women in the Crusade states. They were requested to call conventions for the purpose of electing a woman from each congressional district as delegate to an organizing convention, to be held in the city of Cleveland, O., November 18-20, 1874.

The history of that memorable convention at Cleveland and its origin was so well delineated by the graceful pen of our Crusade sister, Mrs. W. A. Ingham, of Cleveland, for the Louisville convention of the National W. C. T. U. that I wish every white-ribbon sister had a copy of it in her own scrap-book. We poor mortals fail, ofttimes, to take in the meaning of events as they pass, but afterward the handwriting of divinity becomes legible. Surely it was so with some of us in the case of that first National Temperance Convention of women.

It was my high privilege to have received the majority vote from our district as the delegate to that convention; and but for the fact that our beloved state president, Mrs. Prof. McCabe, of Delaware, Ohio, would be there, and with her gentle, sweet, cultured womanhood afford an apology for such a venture, I should hardly have felt that I could accept; for conventions had always been associated in my mind with men of business, of church or state, and especially with political nominations. True, I had been led by the Spirit and the convulsion of events to pray in saloons and on the street, but what would we gain by bearing the persecutions resulting from holding conventions? After the lapse of twenty years, let the organized power of woman in the temperance reform of the world answer this question!

The minutes of our association, so accurately and beautifully kept by our secretary, Miss Wever, during these days and weeks of uneventful toil, show much of interest, but of such a purely local nature that we must not overburden the generous columns of THE UNION SIGNAL. The morning prayer-meetings, evening mass-meetings, three times each week in the different churches, the children's gatherings once a week, and the young people's three times each month, with much interest in connection with many other avenues of usefulness, continued until January 1, 1874, when the ministers expressed a desire to hold religious services each in their own churches, hoping thereby to conserve the spiritual developments of the Crusade in a more personal and pronounced way than could be done in the general temperance meetings. They cannot be accused of a sectarian spirit in this, for in the language of one of their number, our faithful Crusade Brother Cowden, of the M. E. Church, they all agreed. He said at an evening meeting just before the program was changed, "I shall not be here many weeks longer, but no matter where I shall go in the providence of God, or how long I shall live, we can never forget the pleasant hours spent in Hillsboro, and particularly the pleasantness of the temperance work—where Christians forgot their denominational lines and escaped from their sectarian prejudices, to labor as one church, as one family in Christ, for the great cause of temperance! I confess the closer I am brought into relationship with other churches, and the more I know about them, the more I love them."

When the time came around for the observance of our Crusade anniversary, December 23, 1874, there was but one feeling. Our grand army of pledged children being, as the Crusaders felt, their brigl test trophies of the year's work, it was determined to make it a children's passover; and most happy was the thought, for at two o'clock p. m. on the twenty-third, parents and children, Crusaders and ministers, all combined to raise a grateful Ebenezer in the old church where, one year before, a few women had timidly sung, "Give to the winds thy fears!"

In consequence of the long protracted religious services in the churches, and especially in the M. E. Church, the temperance meetings were discontinued. Children's meetings alone kept up once each week, and the young people's three times each month.

A meeting of the temperance women was called for March 8, 1875, at the M. E. Church. A letter was read from Mrs. Wm. I. Fee, of Cincinnati, urging the ladies of Hillsboro to give their aid in getting up the State Temperance Fair, to be held in Cincinnati the second week of April. The Crusaders, old and young, entered into the scheme with zeal. A committee of arrangements was formed of the following ladies, who were to meet for further consultation at Mrs. Thompson's on the next day: Mesdames Rev. Weatherby, James Patterson, D. K. Fenner, Miss Virginia H. Wever, Miss Ella Dill. Very soon, a beautiful contribution of fancy and useful articles was ready, and, at the time appointed, the ladies elected to sustain the Hillsboro table at the fair were off for the scene of action. A beautiful canopy of drab material, ornamented with golden letters shaded with black and red, handsomely formed, gave forth from the old Hillsboro table this sentiment:

"DEATH TO THE TRAFFIC
BUT LIFE TO THE SLAVE."

Much kindly feeling was the result of this united effort, and some money in the temperance treasury of the state for future work.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Personnels of the Great Demonstration.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—There is so much that is serious-minded and heart-breaking in the temperance cause and reform work—"kinder solemn," as the colored brother says the Presbyterian church is "for a darkey"—that it occurs to me the personal touches which slipped off my pencil point as I watched the pageant of the opening of the Imperial Institute in London, may enliven for somebody the long days of the high noon of an American summer, so I send along scraps of the procession as I saw it. Perhaps I cannot do better than transcribe the low-spoken words of friends beside me as they arrived:

"There come the beef-eaters, as they are called; these men live in the Tower of London, and are its custodians. They are attired in the costume of Henry VIII's time, with an immense crown emblazoned on the back of each man's coat and a wreath of roses round his low, bell-crowned hat, the general effect of the costume being a subdued red. It is their business—these men—to stand along the corridors and stairs where the 'royalties' are to pass."

"Here comes a detachment of soldiers in ancient costume; the last relic of the old-fashioned method of warfare being illustrated by the spear that each man carries on the toe of his boot." They are all cavalrymen, and as the gonfalons attached to these spears wave in the morning breeze while they advance at a slow gallop, the effect striking, to say the least of it.

Next comes the naval brigade from the men of war, strong, fine-looking young men with their open throats, flat hats and blue uniforms. No other detachment arouses so much enthusiasm; women rise, rap on the floor with their parasols and wave their handkerchiefs, the band strikes up "Rule Britannia," and the welkin resounds with cheers. The fact that these men have no vote, no settled home, but endless hardship and danger, ought to endear them to their country more than any other of her defenders, and the instinctive justice of humanity is echoed in this resounding welcome.

Next, a band marches past "in the costume of Edward VI," whispers my hostess. This brilliant spot on the pavement is followed by another band and a procession where the herald marches backward with an agility that might arouse the envy of an acrobat. "Now come the Coldstream Guards in their brilliant uniform, followed by the Life Guards, of which the Prince of Wales is colonel. There is an earl's carriage, a gorgeous piece of upholstery, the footman wearing red breeches, and the horses with champing bits and high-tossed manes, the bridle decorated with blue ribbons."

"How did you know it was an earl's carriage?" asked a simple-hearted American.

"I saw the coronet; you can tell instantly the rank of the occupants of any carriage by fastening your opera glass upon the carriage door."

"I suppose you once rode in one like that before you turned reformer?"

"Yes, in the olden time, and our colors were white."

A band of Scotch Highlanders with bagpipes now swings past, with tartan plaid arranged in negligé fashion falling from the shoulder, and then the sailor lads double on their own track, while a band preceding them plays,

"A life on the ocean wave, a home on the rolling deep," and one of the Americans whispers, "We used to sing that on the farm; how little I ever thought to hear it in the midst of such splendor as this!"

"That agile figure opposite, just at the entrance door is Lady Londonderry, her husband was Viceroy of Ireland."

"Not lighter does the swallow skim Along the smooth lake's level brim" than this graceful woman descends from her carriage, passes the obsequious footman who stands ready to aid her, and disappears within the wide doorway with its red stair carpet and gold-colored rods, its handsome awning reaching to the street, and its four great sculptured lions, emblems of England's power and prowess.

Now rolls into view the huge decorated carriage of the Lord Mayor, the coachman seated on a wide cushion of pure white, his nether garments of the same material, the horses gaily bedecked and the Lord Mayor quite extinguished inside the jealously narrow carriage windows. Many of these dignitaries of whom we catch glimpses have horse-hair wigs and some of them powdered hair, the place where the queue used to be worn being indicated by a heavy silk bow sewed on to the back of their coat collars. The Mace, which is the insignia of office belonging to the Lord Mayor, projects from his carriage, and this is followed by the most stately looking procession of aldermen on which Chicago eyes have ever rested.

Next come several carriages with potentates from India, their immense turbans, some white and some orange, but all of the most airy material, remind us of what Dr. Bushnell says about the terrific heat of India. She declares that no words will characterize it except to say "the poisoned sunshine." Beside one of the princes sits his wife, an innovation that spans centuries of prejudice and custom; he is a dark and dangerous looking man glancing round with his great pits of eyes. She is an utterly suppressed specimen of womankind, prematurely old and piteously uninteresting. As these carriages pass by filled with distinguished orientals, my hostess tells me of the utterance of an educated Hindoo who recently remarked to a leader in the English government: "You have done no good to our country by changing our marriage customs and our treatment of widows; you do not seem to understand that if we men had not made widowhood utterly abject and disgusting, we should be likely to be poisoned by our wives." What a beautiful commentary on the treatment the wives must receive and on the diabolical ingenuity of husbands in the land of the gentle Buddha and his brethren!

One feature of this splendid exhibition that pleased me well was the absence of veils from the faces of the women; even the Eastern princess was barefaced, but Mrs. Gladstone and her daughter, especially the former, were well wrapped up. Faint cheers greeted the carriage of the premier who himself did not appear during the entire spectacle; but that there should be any cheering was remarkable, as we heard an Englishman saying with the drawl of his class and the up-and-down-the-gamut inflection which makes English people regard the tones of Americans as monotonous by way of contrast, "People are saying how very dull it is; so quiet; no cheering. This crowd is altogether too respectable for that, they have paid for their seats."

Yes, they had paid for their seats, and as the poet has it, "Their souls resided in their eyes" for the time being.

Now came a handsome equipage along the avenue and was thus explained to us: "That is Mr. Joseph Chamberlain and his handsome American wife." A slight cheer greeted the appearance of Gladstone's most redoubtable enemy, but it had not so much volume as the one that marked the progress of the premier's wife and daughter.

Men in what is technically called "court dress," passed by quite frequently. It seems that any one of a certain degree, I believe as "high" as a successful doctor, is authorized to wear this costume on an occasion of such note. It is black, with knee-breeches of fine material, low shoes, handsome stockings, a coat like the "Continentals" of our country and a cocked hat. It is very much the same as the costume worn by Washington. That it is an ideal dress for men is the universal verdict of all the women within ear-shot, and the contrast it affords to the utterly tasteless and mercenary garb of the moderns is a subject of such eloquent comment, that we may hope that the opinion of enlightened womankind will yet deliver men from their present bondage to "pantaloons," vests, claw-hammer coats and stove-pipe hats. That women love finery is the standard complaint made against them by men, but all up and down the brilliant street on which we are now gazing, far as the eye can reach, there is a feast of color, but not a woman visible, the few whose social altitude entitles them to accompany their husbands, being altogether hidden away in the gilded coaches that, next to the nodding plumes, burnished corselets and helmeted heads of the warriors, attract the attention and regards of this silent, good-natured, expectant throng.

The coming of Lord Salisbury and his stately wife calls forth a few hand-clappings from the Conservatives. The Duke of Devonshire passes by amid a flash of silence. The Duke of Cambridge, head of the army and cousin of the Queen, brings every gun to the angle of salute, but "flag and drum and pennon fair which well have done their part," brilliant cavalcades of horsemen, constantly succeeding carriages filled with the flower of chivalry and pride of statesmanship, are but a mere side-show on this occasion.

Here comes a detachment of Indian troops in the gay costume of their country, followed by another from Australia which wakes up the echoes on either side of the double line of gaping humanity, as they prance lightly down the avenue with face and uniform of a similar tan-colored tone, deftly carrying spears poised on their stirrups and topped out with red and white pennants supposed to be the national colors of the Antarctic colonies. Canadian soldiers followed, sturdy and steady-eyed, with the "swing of conquest" that betokens the new world.

It is now twelve o'clock and a long procession of galloping soldiery—the life guards of the Prince of Wales—comes into view. Every neck is craned, and every eye alert. If opera glasses were field guns and glances were bullets the fine soldiers would melt away like frost before the sun. A coach less gaudy than most of those that we have seen, with coachman of the generous size that seems essential to "the aristocracy," rolls leisurely along. The Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh alight at the grand stairs, there is some slight applause as they gracefully ascend the handsome flight and disappear in the great building. A brief interval, and then the Duke and Duchess of Connaught with their children arrive, alight and disappear. Now more cavalry men with glancing helmets, breastplates and swords.

And now I see in an elegant coach a man of fifty years, stout, fair, unintellectual, in scarlet uniform, with broad blue ribbon across his breast, and a lady of remarkably liberal avoirdupois seated opposite him. These are the Prince of Wales and the Duchess of Teck, cousin of the Queen, and soon to be—if all goes well—mother-in-law of the Duke of York, a young fellow much like his father, only a quarter of a century his junior. Opposite the Prince of Wales is a young lady of slight, erect and graceful figure, a regulation face, coiffeur and bonnet, much like a fashion plate, the general color of her costume being a handsome mauve.

All along the way from Hyde Park corner to the Albert Memorial, ranged line after line in pleasant, shady retreat under the trees, stood hundreds of empty carriages; the horses had been removed, and one solitary footman had been left in charge of each. I hear that at a later hour it was amusing to see the destined occupants of these carriages being piloted through the throng by their attendants.

The splendor of the pageant all along the line brought into vivid contrast our soberer American way of enjoying ourselves, and made me wish to materialize the color and brightness for those I love at home.

Your friend and comrade,

Frances E. Willard.

LOYAL TEMPERANCE LEGION NOTES.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—"The way to do a thing is to do it." One determined effort is worth infinitely more than all the dreaming and wishing that was ever done. While we hesitate, and question, and object in regard to advanced methods in our Loyal Temperance Legion work the older boys and girls drift away from us beyond recall.

Those who now hold county L. T. L. conventions and organize county or state Legions are not treading untried paths. All these methods have been followed, and with grand success. It is objected in some quarters that these advanced plans bring additional burdens to the workers. This is true, but work is the price of everything that is worth attempting. It is the glory of the W. C. T. U. that it does not seek the easiest things, but the best things. Our plan for thorough training will bring to our help workers who despise superficiality, while our present force of helpers, as well as the children, are developing grandly under the new régime.

It has been my privilege to attend recently the second state convention of the Pennsylvania Loyal Temperance Legion. Miss Belle Braham, state superintendent, tells me that she had to go forward entirely upon faith when she called the first convention a year ago. The result has proved that her faith was no uncertain foundation. As in Wisconsin, so in Pennsylvania, the establishment of a state Legion has greatly stimulated the senior grade and diploma study.

At this second Pennsylvania convention the executive committee, consisting of superintendents and juvenile officers, held several sessions. The constitution was so amended that no graduate under thirteen years shall be eligible to membership in the state Legion. The juvenile state president presided at the regular sessions of the convention in a dignified and parliamentary fashion. The business of the convention—appointment and reports of committees, acceptance of records of regular and executive sessions, etc.—was carried on as in other organized bodies. The miscellaneous exercises included songs, recitations and papers. A parliamentary drill astonished many in the knowledge of parliamentary law, shown by some of our young people. Noontide prayer was observed each day, its significance having been explained; especially did we remember at this hallowed hour our beloved Miss Willard, whose interest in every branch of L. T. L. work we so earnestly appreciate. A delegate was elected to the Youth's Congress in Chicago.

The first evening of the convention was devoted to the welcomes, and an address by the National superintendent. The second evening's program consisted of the graduating exercises, viz., the address of the juvenile president, the salutatory, valedictory and other papers and the presentation by the National superintendent of fifty-eight diplomas and twenty-nine special seals. These special seals were conferred upon graduates, each of whom had already secured four regular seals upon his diploma, and entitled each to membership in the League of True Legioners. With every special seal was given the World's Fair souvenir promised by the W. T. P. A. A banner was presented to the county having the largest number of graduates.

Pennsylvania now has two hundred and forty graduates, one hundred and thirteen of whom have completed the course during the past year and seventy-five of whom were present at the convention.

For one hour during the first afternoon the convention was suspended for an exercise not on the program—the wedding of one of the Y's, which was beautiful in its simplicity and appropriateness. How we rejoiced in the tasteful, unobtrusive attire of the bride, so fitting for a Y girl, who realizes that life has nobler ends than dress and display. The bride and groom, both fine vocalists, were preceded up the aisle by thirteen young ladies (several of them Y's) simply dressed in white, and singing delightfully. Having reached the altar, they took their position in a semi-circle facing the audience and the bridal pair. At the close of the marriage ceremony these young ladies, again singing, followed the bride and groom down the aisle.

. . . . . .

During the last few weeks many towns in various states have been enlivened by the gathering of the Loyal Temperance Legion clans in their county conventions. Even the most skeptical person has but to see one of these gatherings to be convinced of their desirability. We find no difficulty in securing invitations for these conventions. The president of a local union which was entertaining such a gathering said to the children: "We had no idea what an L. T. L. convention was. We want to entertain you again next year." Another W. C. T. U. lady expressed the opinion that no temperance effort had ever done so much for her town as the L. T. L. convention.

The county Legions systematically organized, and equipped with juvenile county officers, are working finely, giving dignity and solidity to our work, and a good basis for representation in state and National W. C. T. U. conventions.

Massachusetts and Connecticut lead the way in all-day county conferences of L. T. L. workers. These cannot fail to increase greatly the efficiency of our workers, and it is hoped they will become universal.

BY SARA G. JOHNSON.

Jesus answered and said unto them, Verily I say unto you, If ye have faith, and doubt not, ye shall not only do this which is done to the fig tree, but also if ye shall say unto this mountain, Be thou removed, and be thou cast into the sea, it shall be done. And all things, whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive.—Matt. 21:21, 22.

Mrs. A. C. Miley, of Norfolk, Va., after being appointed state superintendent of Temple work, took it up in a way that rejoiced our hearts. She wrote a most interesting letter to each local president, urging coöperation. The letter is too long to publish in full, but I will quote briefly from it: "I want to beg of you to appoint a good, active woman, who is interested in the work, as your local superintendent, and send me her address at once, that I may correspond with her. I want to get each union to send sixty cents to Mrs. Carse, and get thirty mite-boxes to be placed in homes where they will have a penny a day dropped into them. I think this is the best means for raising the hundred dollars. With a little self-denial and effort, each member of Virginia's W. C. T. U. could at least fill a mite-box by putting in a penny a day. Dear sisters, let us be up and doing along this line. By and by when the interest is coming back to the states on the amounts given we will feel sorry that we have none that we can demand to help on a campaign for prohibition." Just keep in mind the last sentence—it means just what it says—that if you do your share now, you will reap a perpetual benefit hereafter. Mrs. J. A. I. Curtis, state treasurer of Texas W. C. T. U., sends a check for $76.75; $48 of this amount is for the Beauchamp tablet, $23.05 for the Key tablet and $5.80 for the Stoddard tablet. Mrs. Curtis writes that the state has started two other tablets. Fayette street union, Baltimore, Md., sends $10 on a pledge of $100, for tablet in honor of its first president, Miss Mattie Carlisle.

Mrs. C. J. Matur, Nashville, Kan., sends $3.65, writing: "If good wishes would increase my contribution my mite would be a million." Mrs. D. P. Smith, Dicksonburg, Pa., sends $3.65, contents of mite-box. She says: "Notwithstanding late publications, I have not lost faith in the Temple enterprise, and still wish to help." Mrs. Anna C. S. Fenner, New London, Conn., sends $3.65. She writes: "My mite-box will go on duty again right away."

The noon-day prayer-meeting at Willard Hall is attended by temperance people from all parts of the country. The meetings are always of great interest as the leaders usually are women and men of national celebrity who happen to be sojourning in the city. We wish our white-ribboners from abroad would time their visit to the Temple about the noon-tide hour, as Willard Hall is open and free to all visitors daily from 11:45 a. m. to 1:15 p. m. Before and after these hours the Chicago Central W. C. T. U., which has rented the hall, is forced to charge visitors a nominal fee of ten cents in order to defray the expense of lighting and for the service of attendants to clean and keep it open. All who pay for entrance receive a small lithograph of the Temple. There has been some slight complaint on account of this small charge, which we deeply regret, but at present it is unavoidable. There is no other way to meet the expense of keeping the hall open. The trustees would gladly pay the bill but they do not feel warranted to do so until the building is paid for and owned by the W. C. T. U. Under the circumstances it would seem as though no one could object when there is an opportunity for an hour and a half in the middle of each day to see it without charge. We wish our friends would remember that the entrance to Willard Hall is on Monroe Street.

The following amounts have been credited to the various unions completing one hundred dollar pledges: Mendon, Ill., $5; Racine, Wis., $60; Danville, Ill., with some help from the Y's and the new West Side union, $30.93; Greenville, O., $8.98; Sharon, Wis., $20. The following have been received on pledges already made: Bonne Terre, Mo., $50; Alabama, $4; Nantucket, Mass., $10; (this makes $64 received from Nantucket W. C. T. U.); Brookings, S. Dakota, $40; Ashland, Wis., $12; Central City, Neb., $43.73; East Nashville, Tenn., $18.95; Milton, Wis., $50; and $4 from Morrison, Ill., W. C. T. U., with a note saying the $21 previously sent was on a pledge of $100. Mrs. E. L. Nixen, president of Dobbs Ferry, N. Y., W. C. T. U., writes inclosing a check for $28.39, "We hope to send more in due time and aim at the $100 mark." Mrs. L. A. Franklin, of Rutland, Vt., sends $2 raised by "Temple circles where we take our sewing and spend a social hour and take a collection for the grand work. We hope to send enough to make up $100 with what has been sent since the enterprise started." Ishpeming, Mich., W. C. T. U. sends $21 and will try and raise $100. The following amounts have also been received as first payments on hundred dollar pledges: Berthoud, Col., W. C. T. U., $10; Rochester, N. Y., Twelfth Ward W. C. T. U., $10; Lockland, O., W. C. T. U., $22.90; Scotdale, Pa., W. C. T. U., $65; Waynesburg, Pa., W. C. T. U. and Y. W. C. T. U., $65. Mrs. H. S. Gillis sends $1 for the M. E. J. Decker tablet.

A two-cent stamp sent to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago, will secure a mite-box. Remember, any one placing in the box $2.50 from May 1, 1893, to May 1, 1894, will receive the lovely Columbian souvenir made of aluminum with a cut of the Temple on one side and on the reverse the face of Miss Willard and the founder of the Temple, with suitable inscriptions. All money orders should be made out in the name of the treasurer, William D. Preston, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

HIMSELF.

"Himself hath done it."

Once it was the blessing,
Now it is the Lord.
Once it was the feeling,
Now it is His Word.
Once His gifts I wanted,
Now Himself alone.
Once I sought for healing,
Now the Healer own.

Once 'twas painful trying,
Now 'tis perfect trust.
Once a half salvation,
Now the uttermost.
Once 'twas ceaseless holding,
Now He holds me fast.
Once 'twas constant drifting,
Now my anchor's cast.

Once 'twas busy planning,
Now 'tis trustful prayer.
Once 'twas anxious caring,
Now He has the care.
Once 'twas what I wanted,
Now what Jesus says.
Once 'twas constant asking
Now 'tis ceaseless praise.

Once it was my working,
His it hence shall be.
Once I tried to use Him,
Now He uses me.
Once the power I wanted,
Now the Mighty One.
Once I worked for glory,
Now His will alone.

Once I hoped in Jesus,
Now I know He's mine.
Once my lamps were dying,
Now they brightly shine.
Once for death I waited,
Now His coming hail.
And my hopes are anchored
Safe within the vail.

THE PERSONAL TOUCH.

BY PHŒBE PARMELEE.

A half-dozen, half-discouraged members of our temperance union were entering upon the third year of work in a cause we could not give up, even if we could see few good results from our labor. The principal reason why we clung to a seemingly lost cause was because we really were a Christian union. I do not say this boastingly, but only to name the force that kept us trying in the face of unpopularity, lack of means, and probably, lack of talent.

Our president, an earnest woman, kept repeating: "Well, let us hold together; it may be the Lord will have something for us to really accomplish after awhile. We may be like soldiers in camp, drilling and waiting. At any rate we can keep up the forces numerically."

A sad-eyed old lady with white hair and gentle voice once remarked very earnestly and feelingly: "We can always let our principles be known at home and abroad." We wondered why her voice choked, but attributed her agitation to the fact that she spoke but seldom and was somewhat timid.

With one exception each member learned to pray in public. I know we all prayed at home about our work, even the lady who usually stayed away from our mothers' meetings. She was our show member, did the running around, nearly all of the attendance at conventions, advertising, distributing literature in public places; she had more money than the most of us. While we were thankful to have some one represent us in the outside world, we still wished she would come to mingle her voice with ours in praise and mutual encouragement. However, it was not her story I began to tell.

A young lawyer came to our little town; he was our first attorney, and while we hoped there might be no unseemly disturbance of the peace in our community, whereby he might profit, we still hoped he could find enough to do to keep him among us. He was strictly temperate, enterprising and added something by way of dignity to our hitherto unprofessional town. His wife was an accomplished lady, quiet and pleasant, and the mother of two lovely baby boys. They both expressed themselves as in full sympathy with the law and order part of the population, and our union began to ask hopefully; "Do you suppose the time has come when we can do something with our drug-store?" or, "Don't you suppose a lawyer on the right side could see some practical points for enforcement of law?" Our president almost gleefully remarked: "Of course Mrs. Drew will come in and be one of us, and her joining may draw others."

One of the other members, a woman who expressed her mind on all occasions, in season and out of season, said bluntly: "I am not so sure that members who come in because some one else does, or because they think it will be popular, are the ones who will be of much use in the cause. We want those who can stand the 'tug of war;' but as I'm committee on membership, I'll go and see Mrs. Drew. It's very likely she has already been in some other union."

So we hopefully parted to meet in two weeks at the house of the gray-haired, sad-eyed old lady. When the day came, Mrs. Drew entered the meeting with our "committee." There were affable greetings, and after that an air as if a tonic had been generally administered so that every one felt an unwonted exuberance of spirits—a braced condition from the presence of a stronger force in addition to the Almighty arm which we had felt was "all our stay." It is true while we still believed that our greatest strength was that very Arm, we remembered that we had prayed for members to come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty. We went through the half hour of devotional service, and through the business of our program, and came to the taking in of new members.

"The secretary will present the pledge for signature—if there are any here who are willing to become members of our union," spoke the president, confidently, almost deeming her latter clause an unnecessarily polite addition to the business in hand.

"The pledge?" questioned the lady, to whom it was handed. "Oh, yes! I believe I am strictly temperate, but there are times when alcohol is indispensable—medicines, you know. I never have signed a pledge—of course I am willing to do all in my power, but, well, you know I have never joined any society of this kind, it hasn't been possible in fact. I have felt that my first duty was to my husband and family, and, well, to be plain, our business interests demand that we should be neutral, so to speak."

Mrs. Drew was complacently unconscious of the looks of surprise exchanged. The woman who usually expressed her mind appeared to be gathering her thoughts to make a speech fitting the occasion; the rest of us were speechless, especially over the paradox in her words: "Couldn't sign the pledge and work for temperance and purity because my first duty is to my family!"

We looked at each other in dismay, and from some unknown cause, all our eyes were directed to our patient, constant, oldest member. Her face was twitching, a purpose was forming in her eyes; we all saw it with a sort of wonder that she should be the one to answer Mrs. Drew; but none of us interposed to save any unpleasantness which might follow an unwise speech—if the sad-eyed woman could say anything unwise: she had talked so little we did not know how she would express herself.

"Let me tell you something; I feel as if my time to speak and work had come. When I was young like you, with two little boys like yours, my husband moved to town to do carpenter's work. He had learned the trade when a boy, but had not worked at it; but when we came we found there were more carpenters than work. He didn't feel like going back to his father's farm where he had lived, and he was a man who had a good deal of force and wanted to succeed in anything he undertook."

Mrs. Drew elevated her eyebrows a little scornfully. I am not sure but that some of the rest of us wished a little impatiently that the old lady would be quiet; but she seemed to have lost her timidity, and did not allow any of our side-glances to unnerve her, but continued:

"There were temperance societies in those days—some of the good church people asked us to join one, but James thought and I thought we mustn't do anything which might take away his work, and our living—you see there were so many workmen ready to pick up any job of work, and there were so many saloons, and so many drinking men who needed work done. It was my nature to let people do as they pleased if they didn't interfere with me. I didn't think it my duty to try and do anything for others' boys, but just to take care of my own and bring them up right."

We began to see the trend of her story and became interested; Mrs. Drew evidently no longer considered the talk so irrelevant.

"I didn't make a stand, and James didn't make a stand, except the one that we wouldn't join a temperance society. We didn't talk temperance in the family, much, either—and the boys grew up before we knew it, and they didn't know we had very firm temperance principles. I heard them laughing about other boys signing the pledge; and then I was scared and wanted to tell them it was right to take a pledge, but I couldn't; I didn't know how, when I had never done it myself. Oh, how I wished I had, then! How often I have wished so since. I would sign ten thousand pledges if I had them back where your little boys are now."

She clasped her hands over her aching heart and sighed with remorse and anguish that wrung our own hearts. Then she unclasped them and threw them out with a gesture of despair.

"But they are gone! Gone from me! They are not dead—I see them sometimes; but I feel, I know, that the influence I might have had over them is wasted, gone, lost! Mrs. Drew, sisters, don't be afraid to cast all your influence on the right side in everything. Even if you think your own are so safe you needn't worry about them; just the same put yourself on the right side and stay there—for the sake of other mothers' children. I tell you, you and yours will gain a blessing. One of my boys reproached me, not long ago, for not having taught them what evil was, for not having held them with all my might! I can't tell you, mothers, how I felt then; it will always hurt here; I shall never lose the pain in this world."

She ceased speaking, her eyes cast down and her hands again clasped over her heart. How we remembered the familiar attitude.

None of us stirred or spoke until we heard the rustle of a paper. Mrs. Drew still held the pledge in her hands and was placing it over the hard back of a book. She found a pencil in her bag, but she could not see to write her name until her eyes had been cleared from a mist of tears; then she wrote it down with a hand which trembled, but not from any uncertainty of purpose.

There was an exultation—no, an exaltation of feeling very different from that which possessed us when Mrs. Drew had come into the room an hour before, and our president expressed it when she began quiveringly to sing: "There is a wideness in God's mercy." The rest of us were too choked to join her, but when the last soft, sweet tones had ceased our member who always has something to say, started, "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow;" and silently and seriously every one of us went home, realizing that she had something more to do than just to help keep the union together.

PROFESSOR MARIA MITCHELL AND BEER.

The great astronomer had wits in many directions, and microscopic as well as telescopic judgment. Miss Mitchell had been in poor health, and her physician ordered lager beer. One day she appeared at her sister's house and triumphantly waved a small packet, exclaiming in the "plain" language which the Mitchell family always used among themselves:

"What does thee think I have here?"

"I'm sure I can't imagine. What?"

"Lager beer."

"Where did thee get it, Maria?" inquired her sister.

"At that groggery on the corner," replied the shining astronomical light.

"My dear Maria," cried the more conventional member of the family, "doesn't thee know that ladies never go to such a place?"

"I told the man," replied the consistent purchaser, "that I thoroughly disapproved of his traffic!"

"But, Maria," protested her sister, "if thee is to try lager beer as a tonic why couldn't thee let a friend order thee a dozen bottles?"

"Oh, one is enough at a time," was the temperate reply.

Desiring to try her new medicine at once the cork was drawn and the foaming beer poured into a tumbler.

"There! there!" cried the invalid, before the tumbler was a quarter filled, "I shall never drink such a quantity."

"How much do you propose to take?" she was asked in surprise.

"Oh, about a teaspoonful at a time," was the absolutely serious reply.

Miss Mitchell evidently regarded the beverage as a deadly and powerful drug, in which view of it she is sustained by science and temperance advocates. She waited for the foam to subside, took a single sip, and set the glass down decisively.

"It goes to my head. I shall never touch it again. You may have the rest," said she.

And she never did, although her brother hearing of her prescription, sent her a case of two dozen bottles of the best Milwaukee lager, which to this day stands covered with cobwebs in her sister's cellar.—Selected.

When the heart feels an injustice the tongue cries out against it. I always think total abstainers are the best defenders of the temperance reform; I think that Irish patriots best burn into the slothful minds of England their sacred cause, and I think Welsh orators will give to Scotland the truest ideas on Disestablishment. It is not enough to be convinced, we must glow; it is not enough to hold certain principles, we must fight for them daily. —Lady Carlisle.

A MISSION.

BY ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.

Small as I am, I've a mission below—
A mission that widens, and grows as I grow.
'Tis to let alone cider, and brandy, and gin;
'Tis to keep well away from these potions of sin.

'Tis to make myself noble, and manly, and true;
'Tis to touch no tobacco, not smoke, and not chew
That unhealthy weed that true women detest,
And all people know is a filthy old pest.

'Tis to say unto all what I say unto you,
Let these things alone, if you would be true;
They are foes to all virtue, and lead down to shame.
Shun drink and tobacco, and keep your good name.

Cold water that comes from the well is my drink,
The healthiest, purest, and sweetest, I think;
It never makes drunkards, it never brings woe—
I'll praise it and drink it wherever I go.

THE DANDELION RELATIONS.

"Well, May, I've promised grandmother to try it a week."

"Try what, Madge?"

"Why, to talk about flowers instead of girls."

"I'm glad of it. I love flowers better than anything."

"Grandmother was right, no doubt," said Madge; "but it's dreadful hard not to tell what one girl says about another. Why, we can't even trade compliments; and, as to talking about those tame flowers instead of spicy girls; it will take all the fun out of life. Just look at that dandelion! What could one say about that? Poor, bright-eyed, little thing! it wouldn't be any the worse if I ate it up."

"As you did several of its budding brothers and sisters at dinner about two hours ago."

Madge laughed as she answered her mother, who sat sewing just inside the window.

"Well, mother, they will not be missed from such a numerous family. They should be embroidered on the flag of our country; for they grow from Maine to Texas, do they not?"

"Yes; and no wonder with their locomotive advantages."

"How is that?"

"Their feathery balls of seed float far and wide. A breath of air wafts them along; and, when they fall, the bearded, pointed ends of the seed are pushed into the ground by the light pappus, which keeps waving to and fro."

"Aunt Mary," said May, "where did the little plant get its name? I don't think it is much of a dandy or a lion, either."

"The name came from the leaf. Bring me one, Madge."

Madge rushed after the leaf, and came in, saying, "Oh, what ugly, teeth-like edges!"

"These ugly teeth, as you call them, reminded some old botanist of a lion's tooth, hence the name in Latin, dens leonis, which we have gradually changed to dandelion. Its botanical name, taraxicum, is used only in medicine."

"I did not know that medicine could be made of it." And Madge's nose went up with evident determination to snub the flower henceforward.

"The root is the medicinal part," said her mother; "but you must not give up the little flower because of that. Many of its relations have healing properties."

"What relations has it?"

"At least nine thousand. Your common little dandelion belongs to the largest plant family in the world. One-tenth of all the flowering plants on the globe claim kin with it. They are all 'Composites'; that is the family name."

"Please tell me some of dandy's kinfolk."

"The little English daisy is first cousin. So are all the asters, marigolds, coreopsis, dahlias, the great sun-flowers, bright golden-rods, and ageratums. Some of the cousins belong to the royal family, and some are beggars."

"How is that, mother?"

"What is the royal flower of Scotland?" asked her mother.

"The thistle, the thistle," said both girls in chorus.

"And what is the royal flower of Germany?"

"Is it the corn-flower?" asked Madge.

"Yes, that was the old Emperor William's favorite of all flowers. And what is the royal flower of Japan?"

"Oh, we know that, don't we, May? The chrysanthemums have been all the rage here."

"Well," said her mother, "they are all Composites—asterworts, they are sometimes called; and all are cousins to the modest little dandelion. Crowned heads as they are, they grow just as willingly beside little dandelion as in any other place."

"But what beggar cousins has little lion-tooth?" asked Madge.

"The beggar-ticks, or bur-marigolds; you know how they cling to your dress."

"The hateful things! I can't enjoy running through the fields or gathering the golden-rod from the branch for those beggar-ticks. I wouldn't claim kin if I were dandy."

"The ragweed is another poor relation."

"What? that miserable weed which the cows eat and spoil the milk?"

"Yes, the very same; and there is the hogweed, and bitterweed, and the cocklebur and Spanish needle."

"Well, dandy, you are in poor company. I hope there are some good enough to make up for these."

"You will find some useful ones in the garden—the salsify, lettuce and artichoke. Some others yield valuable medicine—arnica, camomile, elecampane, tansy, and boneset for teas, and colt's-foot for coughs. One innocent little cousin is used to flavor absinthe, a French liqueur, and so loses its pretty name, artemisia, being now better known as wormwood. The Persian insect powder is made of the dried flowers of the Chrysanthemum roseum."

"What a difference in the members of one family! I don't see how the dear little English daisy can be kin to the coarse sunflower, or the Scotch thistle related to the blue corn-flower and chrysanthemums. It seems to me they are no more alike than the nations they represent."

"Yet, my daughter, they are all alike in some important points, the flowers and seed being constructed on the same plan. First, all have compound flowers—that is, many little flowers form one head; second, the flower head is surrounded by a set of bracts, or green leaflets; third, there are as many stamens as divisions in the corolla, almost always five; fourth, the stamens are united into one by their anthers, or heads."

"Now, mother, I will make the family coat-of-arms, and little dandy shall represent the compound flowers. It will be quite an honor to represent nine thousand plants."

"Yes, indeed; and there are six hundred species in the United States, nearly all herbs. In Chili they are bushes; in St. Helena they are trees. Of late years the chrysanthemums and immortelles are most cultivated, blooming when all the composite cousins are taking their winter rest. Loveliest and last of all comes the chrysanthemum."

"I begin to have more respect for little dandelion, mother, when I find it has such lovely relations. As to the 'country cousins,' they may be useful in their place. In a family of nine thousand, no wonder there are some 'black sheep.'"—The Examiner.

USES AND ABUSES OF TOBACCO.

BY RALPH MILLS.

All plants have their uses, although we do not always know what these uses are. Yet God did not make them in vain. There are plants that are very poisonous to a person in health, but cure some diseases. For instance, the deadly nightshade, which, as a medicine, is called belladonna. We do not find many good uses for tobacco, although there are a few. Tobacco is used to make a kind of tea, which is sprinkled over cabbage leaves to kill the insects. Some people use the dried leaves to put around the edge of carpets to keep away the moths. Sometimes the wet leaves are bound over the bites of poisonous insects and snakes, so I have heard. I have read, also, that the leaves may poison an ordinary sore. So we find a very few uses for tobacco, but its abuses are many. It is chewed, smoked and snuffed, and some people even swallow it. Men chew, smoke and eat it, but we catch the old women at using snuff. Papa saw some women in Southern Missouri smoking, but they were that kind that don't comb their hair more than once in a month. And there are some in Decatur that do the same. It has a pretty bad effect on the boy that takes his first chew. I have never experienced it yet, nor do I want to. Is that the way with you? I once saw a boy that had that experience, and he was very sick, but if we boys want to grow strong and have good minds, we had better let it alone in all its forms.—From Minutes of the Boys' Anti-tobacco and Whisky Club.

SING a song of sixpence,
And whisky made of rye,
Four-and-twenty drink-shops
All doomed to die;

The folks began to sing,
For the ballot-papers told
That Temperance was King.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—In the W. C. T. U. exhibit at the World's Fair the other day among the piles of papers and leaflets upon the tables, a little booklet caught my eye on whose bright red cover I read the words, "Minutes of the Boys' Anti-Tobacco and Whisky Club, Decatur, Ill."

"That sounds interesting," thought I, and reading the pages I found a full account of the beginning of the little club (in January, 1892,) and its meetings which are held every two weeks at the home of one of the members. These meetings must be interesting judging by the "minutes" and the programs given by the boys whose ages are from nine to fifteen. A number of the essays written by the boys are published in this little book and one of them is in another column on this page.

Ten dollars was realized at their first anniversary entertainment and this sum paid for the printing of these little books which are distributed to the young people at the World's Fair. I wish that some of our Cozy Cornerers would form social clubs like this the coming winter for pleasure and profit. In a later letter I will tell you how to do it.

Yours, for a good time;

Aunt Jane

NEPHEWS AND NIECES.

I am a little boy eleven years old. I am very much interested in the Cozy Corner. I would like to become one of your nephews. If prohibition has not come before I am old enough to vote I shall vote for prohibition.

Monett, Mo.

You are made of the right material, little nephew.

I would like very much to have my letter printed, as it is the first. I write for myself and sister both. I am almost twelve years old, and my sister Mary is ten. We are all for temperance at our house.

ADDIE O. CLARK.
MARY E. CLARK.

A warm greeting to the temperance sisters.

My auntie takes THE UNION SIGNAL and I always read the Cozy Corner. I live with my auntie and grandma now. My mamma died about six weeks ago. I belong to the L. T. L. MATTIE SMITH.

Kankakee, Ill.

Come right into our circle, Mattie. We are all sorry with you in your great loss, and we are all glad, too, that you have so good a white-ribbon auntie and grandma.

I would like to join the Cozy Corner. I am a temperance girl and am fighting intemperance as hard as I can. I am filling a mite-box for the Temple; have earned every penny in it. I wish more temperance people would work harder to stop that river of rum. I am ten years old.

MAE KNIGHT.

Byron, Nebraska.

What a satisfaction to feel that you have earned all the pennies for your Temple mite-box, Mae. If every member in our ranks would labor diligently, there would be an obstruction which "that river of rum "could never o'erflow.

ETHICS OF THE FINANCIAL SITUATION.

The commercial crisis through which we are now passing presents a situation unique in the annals of our country. Our financiers talk paradoxically of "over-production" and "hard times." While the products of farm, mine and factory are more abundant than ever before, business houses are failing, and all legitimate trade is hampered.

The farmer tells us that it no longer "pays" to grow wheat; the manufacturer says there is not enough demand for manufactured goods: and so the farmer's family is unable to obtain a sufficient supply of woolen and cotton cloth, and the unemployed factory hand cannot purchase the flour which his wife and children so sorely need. While there is enough and to spare of all the necessaries of life, millions of men, women and little children are homeless, hungry and almost naked—starving in a land of plenty! This abnormal condition of affairs indicates something organically wrong with our social and business system.

The prevailing financial distress is but one symptom among many of a disease which is preying upon the vital forces of the social structure—disease brought about by a false conception of the relation of man to man. The social organism is at present suffering from an acute attack of commercial paralysis. A change in the monetary policy may afford temporary relief, but will not reach the root of the malady.

Abnormal conditions are always traceable to violation of law, and financial disturbances are no exception to the rule. Before permanent financial stability can be secured, our social and political life must conform to higher laws; it must be reconstructed upon the basis of a true idea of human brotherhood. It is not charity, organized or unorganized, that is needed, but organized coöperation. Charity, like some patent medicines, while affording temporary relief in acute cases, renders it all the more difficult to effect a permanent cure.

The business world is divided into two great classes—the debtor and the creditor. The extremity of the money-borrower is the opportunity of the money-lender. Under the conditions imposed by the credit system the interests of capital and labor necessarily clash, and in the struggle for the survival of the strongest the principle which underlies all human welfare and happiness is lost sight of.

In order to possess immunity from monetary crises, in order to sustain harmonious commercial relations in our own and with neighboring nations, we must come back to "first principles." We must recognize the oneness of the human family; we must recognize and apply the fundamental truth that coöperation not competition is the law of nature.

The financial question, like all others which pertain to the interests of mankind, rests upon an ethical foundation. The Golden Rule not only contains the germ of all practical religion, but it forms the only true basis for all social science and political economy. The agitation of any question which leads thinking men and women to delve deep into the laws which govern human existence can but result in a clearer apprehension, and therefore a greater justification, of the ways of God to man.

In this age when money plays such a prominent part in the affairs of men, and especially in this nation where the few are absorbed in building up colossal fortunes at the expense of the many, no question arouses the people like this one of finance. The shortest way to a man's conscience in these days is through his pocket, and we see in this wide-spread dissatisfaction and loss of confidence in the money-god, the hand of the one true God. "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." Has this nation wavered in its allegiance to the King of Kings? In our eagerness to fall down and worship the golden image let us not forget what is prophesied of the nations that "forget God." Let us give a thought to the once mighty nations in whom this prophecy has been fulfilled. The misfortunes and calamities which befell God's own peculiar people, the Jews, were sent, said the Ruler of nations Himself, "that my people may know that I am the Lord."

Two things are necessay to the prosperity and advancement of this nation to-day; first, to "hold fast to the profession of its faith without wavering," and second, to recognize God in man and His law in the law of human kindness, or kin-ness, as is the root meaning of the word.

THE VOICE OF GOD.

Vox populi, vox Dei. Before admitting the truth of this very popular affirmation, one point must be clearly established, "who are the people?" According to Webster they are "the body of persons who compose a community, tribe, nation, or race; an aggregation of individuals forming together a whole."

In the light of this definition, then, the voice of the people is the voice of a majority of this "body of persons"; the voice of the greater part of the whole, and not of the greater part of a part.

We Americans, with our democratic instincts and training, emphatically deny the doctrine of the "divine right of kings"; but the English Tory leader, Mr. Balfour, would also deny the divine right of "majorities." He declares in substance (in his invectives at Dublin against the Home Rule measure and its supporters) that the tyranny of kings is as nothing compared with the "tyranny of majorities." Using the word "majority" as he uses it, and as politicians generally use it, this statement is undoubtedly true; but using it in its proper sense as meaning "more than half," it is unqualifiedly false. The only true majority is more than half of all the people; and the voice of such is the only real "voice of the people," the only voice which may be truly regarded as the voice of God and whose utterances may be depended upon as wise and righteous.

Undoubtedly, many of the movements which suffer defeat at the hands of pseudo-majorities to-day are in reality sustained by the true majority, and if the real voice of the people could be authoritatively recognized, these projected reforms would march on to easy victory.

On the other hand, notwithstanding woful prognostications on the part of the fearful, this nation has nothing to dread from premature action in the way of progressive measures. It is not possible for any incipient reform to be foisted upon the people even under such a liberal government as our own. All unwise attempts to bring about any radical change before the time is fully ripe for it must, in the nature of things, prove abortive. The masses are instinctively conservative, and the voice of the whole "body of persons" which compose this nation may be safely trusted. The moving forces of the human mind are obedient to evolutionary law, and are operated by a power which works "without haste and without rest," and which holds in check the restless, surging waves of human thought and endeavor.

An illustration of the truth of the maxim which is the text of this article may be found in the structure of individual man.

Modern scientists tell us that the human brain is composed of twelve groups of faculties. Seven of these, situated at the top and front of the head, are classed as higher faculties and point upward. The other five groups, forming the base and back of the brain are the lower faculties and point downward. So we see that even from a materialistic point of view the good predominates, and that the instinctive recognition of the supremacy of good, found in all religions, is perfectly natural to the human mind and has a truly scientific basis. Science, no less than religion and common observation, affirms the existence of a "power that makes for righteousness," and the pessimist—the man who declares that evil sits enthroned in the human heart and in the world—is, to say the least, a very superficial thinker and observer. Good reigns in man as in the universe, and the voice of the whole man, whether individual or collective, may be safely heeded at all times as the voice of the Highest.

If, however, man exercise only a minor part of his faculties (as is the case in the more primitive stages of individual and national development), the result cannot be said to be a true expression of the man or the nation.

A fully developed man will so exercise all the faculties as to establish perfect equilibrium of mind and body, and thus render each and every one of them subservient to his own highest development.

What is true of the individual is also true of man in the aggregate. No nation has as yet reached a full and rounded development. Our own well-favored land is as yet very far from being an ideal republic. The annoying perplexities, the disturbing influences, the vague unrest of these eventful days—what are they but the nation's "growing pains"?

We must acknowledge that under our present system of government, it is too often the voice of the machine politician, and not the voice of the people, that is heard and heeded at the ballot-box and in legislative councils. In the popular acceptance of the term, we have good reason to associate "majorities," as does Mr. Gladstone's opponent, with "tyranny," and to maintain that a government of a part, by a part, and for a part of the people, is neither just nor expedient.

While (though we do not like to admit it) minorities still rule in these United States, it is only a question of time when inherent evolutionary forces shall establish harmonious relations between all the diverse factors which go to make up social and political life. Indeed, the signs of the times indicate that our nation is now passing through one of the great transition periods which necessarily occur in all life, individual or national, and is destined soon to enter into higher conditions.

THE CITY'S HOPE.

The growing tendency among young people of both sexes to forsake the farm and country town for the large city emphasizes the importance of inculcating principles of total abstinence and legal prohibition among the farmers' boys and girls. We are more and more impressed with the belief that the salvation of our cities depends upon the country. The rural population it is which must furnish the reformatory agencies which shall purify these centers of moral pestilence and corruption.

But we must remember that while the cities portray life in its lowest phases they also stand for all that is highest and best in our civilization. As business and social centers they have wonderful attractive power for that gregarious animal, man. We have a great deal of sympathy for the young man or woman who is possessed with a "moving-on" spirit. It is a spirit inseparable from the age in which we live, and should be directed, not quenched.

As it is, the boy or girl who starts out to "see the world," and to earn, perhaps, an "easier" livelihood, too often sees the worst side, and discovers that the independence so fondly hoped for never comes.

"God made the country, and man made the town," and country life is far more favorable to the development of character, mental, moral and physical, than city life with its many enervating influences. But we might write page after page concerning the advantages of rural life, and of warning against the dangers and disappointments of city surroundings, and still our young people would continue to come and "see for themselves." It avails nothing to say, "Don't leave the farm, boys;" boys, and boys' sisters, will leave the farm, and, in spite of all advice to the contrary, flock to the city.

Fathers and mothers of our country lads and lassies, what are you going to do about it? You realize as they do not the perils that meet them on every hand as soon as they leave the home nest. You cannot always keep them with you, nor would it be wise to do so if you could.

Clearly the thing to do under these circumstances is to make the dangers as few as possible. Temptations there will be as long as the world lasts, but let us see to it that there are no legalized temptations. The open saloon has been truly called the "mouth of hell." The voters of the country outnumber those of the city four to one, hence, they could, if they chose, soon close these open gateways through which so many start on the downward road, bringing misery and woe into thousands of peaceful country homes.

And while the law does not permit the mothers of our land to vote the saloon out of existence, it is permitted unto them to speak and even teach in this matter. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union is a great teaching organization. Its whole effort is along the line of educating men and women to see the necessity of protecting their homes from the ravages of the rum power. If we would win in the fight of home against the saloon we must have the sympathy and coöperation of the farmers and the farmers' wives. We must have moral suasion in the country home backed by legal suasion at the ballot box.

We appeal to the country to save the city, and doubt not that sooner or later (for the sake of the boys and girls, God grant it may be sooner!) the cheering answer will echo from hill and prairie—"By His grace we will."

CONVENTION OF THE WORLD'S W. C. T. U.

We have received the following communication from Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, secretary World's W. C. T. U., which will be read with interest by all who contemplate attending the Convention. We hope to welcome to Chicago on this occasion not only a greater number of delegates than have attended any previous gathering of white-ribboners, but a greater number of visiting members and friends from all parts of the world:

"Arrangements for the coming convention are progressing admirably. Many people of our own and foreign lands are contemplating attendance. Miss Ackermann is already in this country, at the home of John G. Woolley, gathering health and strength to bring to us at that time the wonders that God hath wrought through her four years' labor.

"Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell, still other round-the-world missionaries, expect to reach their native land during the present month, and will tell us of God's answer to prayer in the possession of the 'uttermost parts of the earth' for His kingdom, as they have proclaimed His truth.

"But as it hath been ordained for our good, that light and darkness, joy and sorrow, shall have part in the working out of our lives, we are obliged to announce that Mrs. Leavitt, our first round-the-world missionary, who traveled up and down the earth for eight years in the interest of the cause in which we labor, will not be able to attend the Convention. She writes that since her severe illness in China she has not been able to breathe the air of the north so late in the year as October, that her effort to do so during the Boston Convention proved almost fatal, and she cannot conscientiously repeat it. We know this will be regretted by many of her friends who have looked forward to meeting her on this occasion.

"Sho Nemoto, who has been to us so faithful a friend in Japan, and Tsuda Sen, who sent to us the bell now in the W. C. T. U. exhibit at the World's Fair, are also in this country and expect to be present, and from our membership from many lands we are daily receiving announcement of their coming.

"Let the white ribbon hosts of our own nation rally to receive them with sisterly greeting and hospitality."

THE LABORING MAN'S HEAVEN.

Not long ago the following letter appeared in an English paper, called forth by the expression in a sermon by Canon Farrar that "the road to heaven lies through heaven, and all the way to heaven." The reflecting working man might give some helpful pointers for the betterment of his condition if he will send us a few lines on "the situation" from his "point of view." On the other hand, those men and women who are studying gravely and bravely facing the serious problem, How to get capital and labor together for the benefit of both? might be an uplift to the labor-bowed brother and to the work in hand if they would send us a few lines from their outlook. These answers we would like to collate in a symposium for THE UNION SIGNAL, and God grant that light and hope will come with them, for there is nothing so stultifying to common sense, so stupefying to natural faculty and so atrophying to honest ambition and worthy effort as ceaseless work for unceasing hunger. Read this letter, and send five hundred words:

"VENERABLE SIR:—In my Westminster Gazette this evening I have just read a sketch of your sermon on the text 'for ever.' I am a hard-working laborer, and I want to know where is this 'heaven upon earth' you tell us of? I rise by five in the morning, and turn out in the winter's bleak and bitter cold to earn the few miserable shillings that are doled out to me as wages. Many a curled darling in the West-end spends more on his weekly cigars than I receive for my week's toil. Do I strive for success? Yes! all my life I have striven for a measure of prosperity and happiness, but neither the one nor the other falls to my lot. What keeps me in a miserable solitude? It is the dread of married poverty. Reverend sir, I can suffer poverty myself, but I refuse to inflict this curse upon others. Have I any social life? None whatever; nor the ghost of an atom of human sympathy, love, friendship or any sort of social intercourse. Yet I am an honorable, honest-living and God-fearing man, with no vices or gross sin of which my conscience can accuse me. Do I ever pray to God? Yes, very often and earnestly. I pray to God to send me a little earthly happiness and prosperity, but what I get is plenty of hard, drudging toil. That is my heaven upon earth, and as I am so are thousands of other men and women in the land. Like Hamlet, I like advancement. On every side I see the unworthy prosper. Am I selfish? I am not. To those of my people who are in want I give away far more than I can really afford, and if I had a fortune to-morrow, my greatest happiness would consist in helping many who have no claim of friendship upon me. No! dear sir. Take it how you will, there is evidently not much heaven upon earth for

"YOUR WEARY AND HARD-WORKED INDUSTRIAL SLAVE."

THE eyes of the nation—nay, more, the eyes of the entire commercial world—are turned upon the fifty-third Congress, called together in extra session for the avowed purpose of considering the monetary situation and relieving the abnormal strain under which the business world is bending and groaning. To quote from the President's message, "This matter rises above the plane of party politics and vitally concerns every business and calling and enters every household in the land." Before any satisfactory and permanent adjustment can be made it will be necessary to discover the true cause of the present depression. So far a great diversity of opinion exists. Free silver men are by no means a unit as regards the cause of existing conditions, hence they differ widely as to remedial methods. Neither do the advocates of a single standard present an unbroken front on their side. Therefore we need not look for a very speedy settlement of the financial problem. But while the more remote causes are uncertain and complicated, the immediate cause is clear and simple. Both silverites and "gold bugs" agree that fear is a prominent factor in the monetary situation. The atmosphere of distrust which prevails throughout the commercial world paralyzes financial enterprise. Any legislation, therefore, which allays fear and restores confidence in business circles will be hailed with joy by all classes. The Sherman act may or may not be one of the main causes which have led to the panicky condition of the money market, but if the public believe that it is, the repeal of its objectionable features is imperative. All it is in the power of Congress to do speedily is to loosen the tension by suspending the purchase of silver, after which it will doubtless enter upon a further consideration of our monetary policy and adopt measures which shall avert all such crises in the future.

AFTER the adjournment of the silver convention an informal conference of leading Prohibitionists, Populists and National Reformers who were in Chicago as delegates was held at the Palmer House to discuss the practicability of a union of the reform forces. It was the general consensus of those present that while an organic union of these elements might not be at present practicable, yet the logic of events was fast bringing them together, and that before 1896 the lines would be so clearly drawn between the friends and foes of good government that there would be but one reform party in the field, and that one strong enough to promise the ushering in of a new order of things with the presidential election of that year. To this end hearty pledges were exchanged between the various political leaders that every effort should be made to cultivate friendly relations and interchange of ideas.

PROFESSOR KOCH, of Berlin, the great and only discoverer of the so-called consumption cure, has been for some time enamored of a young, comic actress in one of the suburbs of the city, and though married to a very fine woman, this has not hindered his traveling about during the past year in company with this young creature. Within a few months he has secured a divorce from his wife, and within a few weeks he has married the actress, telling his friends that if they want his society in future it must always include that of the present "Frau doctor." Berlin makes no outspoken objection, being quite accustomed to this method of procedure, but in the little Harz mountain village of Clausthal, where Professor Koch was born and where he has been regarded as the man who sheds the greatest glory on the place, his conduct has raised considerable commotion. Within a few weeks five hundred women of that village, women of the mass, as they are called, many of them miners' wives—went to the place in a body, where a tablet had for some years marked the birth spot of this illustrious citizen, and with their own hands tore it down and put it away saying, "they would have no man honored in Clausthal who had so dishonored his own wife." We would that more women would go and do likewise.

Liquor selling is not only a sin per se, but in these days of light it is a sin perceived.

Among the geographical facts which the most careless, unobservant visitor to the World's Fair will learn is the existence of New South Wales. In almost every building in all lines of exhibits, the blue banner of that enterprising little country greets you and its exhibits are invariably full of interest. The visitor who stops to examine its display, as every one should, will be filled with a desire to go to the country itself. One lady remarked to another as they came again and unexpectedly upon the blue flag with New South Wales in gilt letters upon it, "I don't know about Hawaii, but I think the wisest thing we can do is to annex New South Wales as quickly as possible," to which the other replied, "I am not sure but that New South Wales will be annexing us."

Four attitudes for the intelligent voter to keep in regard to the saloon: Either he is ignorant, or he is apathetic, or he is in complicity with the saloon, or he is in open protest against it.

Said Canon Wilberforce in his off-hand table talk: "We always do as we like, we always seek the line of least resistance. For instance, to a good man the line of least resistance is not to swear, to the bad man it is to swear. They both do what they like. The Lord Bishop of Manchester was fond of fox-hunting; he once went into a blacksmith's shop to have his horse's shoe fastened and mentioned that he was going hunting. 'Then I cannot go to hear you preach for I do not think it is right for you to be a fox-hunting clergyman.' 'Very well, then, I will never follow the hounds again,' said the bishop,—and he never did. But I maintain that he 'did as he liked.' "

Some of the positions held by American women are indeed curious; for instance, in Buffalo a woman runs a street-cleaning bureau; in Kansas City a woman is at the head of the fire department; a Louisville lady makes special shopping expeditions to Paris; another in New York makes flat furnishing a business; still another in New Hampshire is president of a street railway company; while Chicago has a woman embalmer.

It has been truthfully said that there must be increased total abstinence before prohibition can be an accomplished fact, that the real evil in our community is the drinking of intoxicating drinks.

Two or three generations ago the Wesleyans in a certain locality in England passed a resolution that no temperance meeting should be held in their church and no non-alcoholic wines should be used at the communion. In the church that is now built on that site the temperance pledge is offered and there is free scope for the temperance people to any desired extent.

How all things "work together" sometimes, when the mind has been turned into some particular channel. It is indeed "hard times" in our fair country, and old Giant Discouragement is trying hard to creep into the hearts of some of the workers. The other day at the regular missionary meeting of one of our churches, the president read the following words, saying they had helped her greatly: "I am but one, and I cannot do everything, but I can do something; and what I can do I ought to do, and what I ought to do, by the grace of God I will do." The next day a member of that missionary auxiliary attended the meeting of the W. C. T. U. to which she belonged, and repeated the words to those there. Directly after, another lady read the 37th Psalm, saying that the Bible had opened just right there, and behold, a whole array of weapons for use against all discouragement: "Fret not thyself," "Trust in the Lord," "Commit thy way unto the Lord," "Rest in the Lord." Why, every one of the forty verses of the Psalm was a weapon. Then they had a Bible reading. Not the regular one, for, somehow, that had not reached them; but there were at hand enough copies of "The Success and Failures of the March" to go round, and bless you, it just "worked together" beautifully. Then the president asked a lady to read from THE UNION SIGNAL that editorial on the "Individual Member of the Local Union," and when all was over, I'm sure Giant Discouragement, if he were lurking near any hearts in that meeting, must have felt pretty well discouraged himself!

ON DUTY.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

MINNESOTA.

DISTRICT CONVENTIONS.

The first district held its sixth annual convention in Rushford, June 27 and 28, Mrs. Rowell presiding, and having forty-two regular and ten visiting delegates. Among the latter was Mrs. Julia B. Nelson, who lent a helping word whenever needed, and gave on Wednesday evening a grand address on "Equal Rights." Several excellent papers were read, there being one on "Our Training, Past and Future," by Mrs. Ingalls, of Spring Valley; Mrs. Bartlett, of Winona, presented one on kindergarten work, which was followed by an animated discussion, and the request made that the paper be sent to the White Ribboner for publication. Miss Eva Jones, though unable to be present, sent an excellent paper on L. T. L. work, of which she is district superintendent. Mrs. Fletcher read a paper on the National Temperance Hospital work. Cash offerings from the various unions in the district were contributed to the charitable funds of the hospital, and in addition, Rushford union had made a quilt. Miss Wooley, of the St. Charles Y, read an excellent, comprehensive paper on "What the Y's can do for young men." A committee was appointed to prepare a district banner to be ready in time for the state convention. The officers of last year were reëlected. Among the resolutions was one averse to any movement to dispense with the district system in Minnesota.

The fourth district held its convention in connection with the convention of Blue Earth county union, Mrs. Plymat, district president, presiding, assisted by Mrs. Hotaling, county president. The first morning was occupied by routine business, the appointment of committees and reports of work in the county and in the district. Mrs. Dane gave an interesting account of the Scandinavian work. Our state offers such an attractive home for the thrifty Norsemen that they are coming in by hundreds, and while largely a temperate people, it behooves us to look to it that they are kept such, amid the temptations and trials incident to their new and untried conditions of living. During the afternoon a short testimony meeting was held, wherein many spoke of what the W. C. T. U. had done for them individually, in broadening their ideas, and increasing their love for humanity in all its guises and everywhere. Mrs. E. N. Law, of Michigan, was introduced to the convention and spoke briefly on the subject of regular meetings, giving many helpful hints and suggestions as to how to make the meetings attractive and interesting to those not already engaged in the work. In the evening, Mrs. Law addressed the convention and others, speaking earnestly and receiving good attention. The election of officers on the afternoon of the last day resulted as follows for Blue Earth county: President, Mrs. D. L. Clements; secretary, Miss E. M. Gable; treasurer, Miss Hannah Pierson, all of Mankato. The district officers are: President, Mrs. Plymat; secretary, Mrs. Shepherd; treasurer, Mrs. Claghorn.

The fifth district held its sixth annual convention in LuVerne, Mrs. Crawford presiding; Mrs. Law was present here also, holding a school of methods and giving two addresses, both of which are spoken of enthusiastically. During her stay in the district she visited Magnolia, Beaver Creek and Adrian, giving lectures and forming unions.

The sixth district held its fourth annual convention in Granite Falls. Reports were full of interest and encouragement. Miss Parrish, of Illinois, has been at work in this district, and as a result several enthusiastic Y unions have been organized. The first evening of the convention a gold medal contest was held, there being six young lady contestants. All did very nicely, the medal being awarded to Miss May Gilmore. Thursday evening Miss Parrish gave a delightful lecture.

The ninth district held its seventh annual convention at Excelsior, one of the towns on the shore of far-famed Lake Minnetonka, Mrs. Newcomb presiding. During the reports, Mrs. Neal gave an interesting account of the first call for a W. C. T. U. meeting in Minneapolis, and probably the first in the state. That was about seventeen years ago, and to-day Minneapolis alone has seventeen unions, one for every year; and last September at the annual state convention the state corresponding secretary reported two hundred and fifty-eight unions. The program of the convention was varied and full of interest; the first evening a sort of testimony meeting was held, and on the second a very fine address was given by New Hampshire's former president, Mrs. Jeanette Knox, who won all hearts. One thing not on the program was a ride on the lake in a steamboat, and was greatly enjoyed by the delegates.

All these conventions not only indorsed the White Ribboner, but pledged themselves to go to work for it. The paper has just completed its third year, and is a remarkably healthy infant, and precocious, too, its fond admirers think; yet with loving care and plenty of food in the way of subscriptions, it promises to develop into a grand maturity. Already it has become so helpful that it is necessary to every Minnesota W. C. T. U. woman, if she would keep in touch with the state work.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

SUMMER DOINGS.

Through the effort of ex-Governor Goodell three bills were introduced into the legislature of New Hampshire: To prohibit the manufacture of alcoholic liquors; to strengthen the nuisance act, and to make the fine for the sale of beer and cider as large as that for the sale of other liquors. It was referred to the judiciary committee, but in compliance with Mr. Goodell's request a public hearing was given in Representatives' Hall in Concord. The earnest effort of all the speakers failed to have the desired effect, and we must go on waiting and hoping.

At the carnival the ladies of Concord furnished dinner at a reasonable rate to the crowd, and realized one hundred and fifty dollars therefrom. Everybody showed their willingness to help. Citizens furnished food; the press advertised; and ministers gave notice in their pulpits. It was well known that the money received was to be used to send some drinking man to be cured. An eager applicant was given the means to secure the treatment which was very successful. He came before the ladies of the W. C. T. U. at their last meeting bearing the united thanks of himself and his happy wife.

Miss Clara E. Rowell, our state corresponding secretary, is also superintendent of a Sunday-school in Franklin. The members of the school planned a pleasant surprise for her. They met in the vestry, then sent a messenger to request her company. During the evening she was presented with a Webster's Unabridged Dictionary and holder.

The April number of the Granite State Outlook was a World's Fair number. Five hundred copies were sent to Chicago to be placed in the W. C. T. U. exhibit with other contributions to be designated, "From New Hampshire W. C. T. U."

The Nashua W. C. T. U. women are ever alive. They have one hundred and five active members with additions nearly every week. Not long ago they held an all-day prayer-meeting with different leaders for every hour. Many came to cheer them and add their word of encouragement, two ministers among the rest. Every Sunday the evangelistic committee holds a prayer-meeting, outsiders often coming in. Mrs. S. Cutter, the new leader of the L. T. L., is an active worker, and will try and push the work that has flagged during the illness of their past leader, and there is little doubt that soon their voices will be heard and their influence felt, as in the good times past.

In my last letter I made a misstatement which I wish to correct. Inmates at the Mercy Home, in Manchester, are taken for not less than two months, and in many cases where they come from the county farms the trustees make a contract with the county commissioners for "during minority." The girls often remain from one to two years. The various unions in the state are constantly proving their interest in these young girls by sending barrels and boxes of clothing for their use. This good work must not diminish, as new inmates are constantly needing garments.

At a recent meeting of the W. C. T. U. at Hildreth Hall, Mrs. Joseph R. Clark was elected president in place of the late Mrs. William Haskins. Miss Marie Morrill, corresponding secretary, takes the place of Mrs. Mary D. Anderson, who has been a faithful worker in this position for the past five years.

The Demorest contest which was given to the Mercy Home in memory of their late president, Mrs. Wm. Haskins, netted ten dollars. The union is to have the name inscribed upon a memorial tablet in the Temperance Temple at Chicago.

The Congregational church at North Weare was filled to its utmost at the second Demorest contest, Carrie F. Danforth winning the prize. The other contestants received a bound volume from the W. C. T. U. of that place. The winner spoke, "A Voice from the Poorhouse." A great deal of enthusiasm was felt in the town which goes to prove that these contests arouse an interest that nothing else seems to do. At the gold medal contest recently held at Warner, the prize was won by Miss Mary Sawyer, of Sutton. The W. C. T. U. in that country village are ably assisted by the young people; would that other unions could say the same.

A union temperance service was held in the Baptist church in Hopkinton the first Sunday evening in July. Some of the little folks spoke. There was singing by the choir and congregation. The meeting was led by the Rev. Mr. Tingley, the new Baptist pastor. Rev. T. C. H. Bonton made the first address urging the ladies to work without ceasing for the cause of temperance and pledging his aid. He was followed by our favorite speaker, Rev. Mr. Williams, of Contoocook, a firm friend who feels that the question, as he stands before his Maker, will not be, "Have you been successful in business?" but rather, "Have you done what you could to wipe out intemperance and impurity on earth?"

Concord W. C. T. U. has not only sent one patient to the cure but it has aided two more to take the treatment. Said one: "Thanks be to Him who has given to man the knowledge how to treat us, and cleanse us of our uncleanliness. My faith was weak, now it is strong and I have courage for the future."

The Penacook W. C. T. U. needed encouragement; their numbers were few and many were indifferent. The Merrimack county convention met there in June and were entertained in a most hospitable manner. The county president, Mrs. Pratt, was in the chair. There were papers read by several of the ladies. A lady from the new union of Louden read a very acceptable paper. Mrs. F. H. Bailey read one upon "Systematic Giving." Mr. Moody, of Canterbury, spoke strongly in favor of the "Clarions" and recommended every union to secure their service in song as soon as possible. He also touched upon his favorite subject, the habit of young people to treat, a habit which will surely grow upon them. Resolutions were passed denouncing the play by Hoyt, entitled "A Temperance Town." The subject of brandy-drops was discussed and how to check the sale and manufacture of them, for within these tiny drops lies the ruin of many a child.

At the Hillsborough county convention held at Manchester, the Demorest contest drew a full house and great interest was shown. The medal was won by Miss Parker, of East Manchester, in "Boys of America."

The state annual convention will be held in Jefferson in the fall. Saturday, July 22, found the women of the white ribbon band at The Weirs, beside the beautiful waters of Lake Winnepesaukee. The day was full of interest of which we hope to give full report in our next letter.

Mrs. Mary A. Livermore has lectured at Somersworth to a large audience upon the subject: "Twenty years upon the lecture platform." Soon after that Dr. Beardsley gave a course of lectures which were very instructive and helpful, touching upon the reforms. One afternoon was devoted to temperance with an audience of seven hundred people, every seat being taken and many standing. The collection taken was for the W. C. T. U. which is the only temperance organization in the city.

Mrs. M. E. A. Gleason gave a stirring lecture in Hinsdale, based upon Christ's power to save the tempted and fallen, and all her words breathed the spirit of gospel temperance. The following forenoon Mrs. Gleason solicited from individuals in town, money for the State Mercy Home. She secured forty-five dollars, for which the thanks of that institution are expressed. Her lectures, her private talks and her talk with the W. C. T. U. the following afternoon aroused an enthusiasm which we trust will be felt for a long time. Mrs. Mary J. Hoyt, of Laconia, gave an address of welcome, in poem, at the opening of a series of temperance meetings.

Belmont welcomed the Belknap county convention, the president, Miss P. A. Knowles, presiding. Mrs. A. C. Caleff urged the great need of a reading-room to keep the young men from the saloons. She also told some touching incidents, and pleaded for more social purity. In the afternoon there were some grand addresses by Mrs. E. R. Philips and Mrs. Mary Hoyt; and Mrs. Caleff, subject, "Early Influences and Later Results." Rev. A. J. Wheeler lectured in the evening in his usual spicy manner.

NEBRASKA.

LOSS OF A PROMINENT WORKER.

A three weeks' visit of your reporter to the World's Fair, and the subsequent recuperation has delayed this letter somewhat. But the busy Nebraska women have given me much to write about, almost too much, I fear.

Four Chautauqua assemblies are held in Nebraska each summer. At each of these schools of methods are conducted by the W. C. T. U. At Fremont, Mrs. Hitchcock, the state president, was in charge; at Crete, Mrs. C. H. Walker, of Surprise; while Mrs. C. M. Woodward, National superintendent of railroad work, conducted the schools at Beatrice and Long Pine. Most excellent work has been done in all these places, the various superintendents being generally present to present their departments, while an enthusiastic audience of white-ribboners showed their appreciation and interest.

The weather has been extremely warm, and in this dry, nervous climate, such heat is very debilitating. But the zeal of our women seems to know no rest. Conventions and meetings of all sorts are being held all over the state. We sometimes feel inclined to ask, "Is this wise?" Mrs. H. E. M. Allen, of Valparaiso, Neb., says, "One fears sometimes that our Chautauqua assemblies, schools of methods and other summer institutions of like character, delightful as they are, but occurring when both mind and body need relief from tension, may prove in the end a most costly form of extravagance."

These thoughts have been brought home to our hearts, lately, by a sad berevement. As a state union we have suffered great loss in the death of Miss Mary A. Ripley, state superintendent of scientific temperance instruction. Although sixty-two years of age, she was one of our most active workers, and did, indeed, "die in the harness." She was away from home on a lecture tour. She lectured in Bostwick, May 19, addressed the women there on the following day, afterward driving six miles north and lecturing in the evening for the Beulah union. It was on her return drive to Bostwick where she was to speak again the next evening, that she was taken ill. She expected a few days' rest would restore her, and did seem to improve, but was again prostrated, and after much suffering passed away June 3. Miss Ripley was especially fitted for her department of work, having taught in the public schools of Buffalo, N. Y., for forty years, twenty-seven of which she was in charge of the boys' room in the Central High School.

SANITARY BREAD-MAKING.

BY CYRUS EDSON, M. D.

Health Commissioner, New York City.

It is necessary, if one would understand the sanitary aspects of bread-making, to fully comprehend the present theory held by scientists of germs and the part played by them in disease. The theory of disease germs is merely the name given to the knowledge had of those germs by medical men—a knowledge which is the result of innumerable experiments. Being this, the old term of a "theory" has become a misnomer. A germ of a disease is a plant so small that I do not know how to express intelligibly to the general reader its lack of size. When this germ is introduced into the blood or tissues of the body, its action appears to be analogous to that which takes place when yeast is added to dough. It attacks certain elements of the blood or tissues and destroys them, at the same time producing new substances.

But the germs of the greater part of the germ diseases

"DISEASE GERMS FOUND THEIR WAY INTO THE YEAST BREAD."

—that is, of the infectious and contagious diseases—will develop or increase innumber without being in the body of a human being, provided always you give them the proper conditions. These conditions are to be found in dough which is being raised with yeast. They are warmth, moisture, and the organic matter of the flour on which the germs, after certain changes, feed.

It is necessary to remember at this point that yeast is germ growth, and when introduced into a mixture of glucose or starch in the presence of warmth and moisture sets up a fermentation. If the mixture be a starchy dough, the yeast first changes a portion of the starch into glucose, and then decomposes the glucose by changing it into two new substances, viz., carbonic-acid gas and alcohol.

Now the gluten, which is also a constituent of dough and moist starch, affords, with the latter, an excellent nidus for the development of germs of disease as well as for the yeast germs. The germs of cholera, as of typhoid fever, would, if introduced into dough, find very favorable conditions for their growth.

I do not wish to "pose" as an alarmist nor am I willing to say there is very much chance of the germs of typhus and of cholera reaching the stomachs of the people who eat bread which has been raised with yeast. But I have not the slightest cause to doubt that other diseases have been and will be carried about in the bread.

I have met journeymen bakers, suffering from cutaneous diseases, working the dough in the bread-trough with naked hands and arms. I have no reason to suppose bakers are less liable to cutaneous diseases than are other men, and I know, as every housewife knows, yeast-raised bread must be worked a long time. This is an exceedingly objectionable thing from the standpoint of a physician, for the reason that the germs of disease which are in the air and dust and on stairways and straps in street-cars are most often collected on the hands. Any person who has ever kneaded dough understands the way in which the dough cleans the hands. This means that any germs which may have found a lodging-place on the hands of the baker before he makes up his batch of bread to find all the conditions necessary for subdivision and growth. This is equivalent to saying that we must rely on heat to kill these germs, because it is almost certain that they will be there. Now, underdone or doughy bread is a form which every man and woman has seen.

It is a belief as old as the hills that underdone bread is unhealthful. This reputation has been earned for it by the experience of countless generations, and no careful mother will wish her children to eat bread that has not been thoroughly cooked. The reason given for this recognized unhealthfulness has been that the uncooked yeast dough is very difficult to digest. No one but a physician would be apt to think of disease germs which have not been killed during the process of baking as a cause of the sickness following the use of uncooked yeast bread. Yet this result from this cause is more than probable. I have not the slightest doubt that, could we trace back some of the cases of illness which we meet in our practice, we would find that germs collected by the baker have found their way into the yeast bread, that the heat has not been sufficient to destroy them, that the uncooked yeast bread has been eaten and with it the colonies of germs, that they have found their way into the blood, and that the call for our services which followed has rounded off this sequence of events. I have already pointed out that the germs of disease are to be found in the air and dust. The longer any substance to be eaten is exposed to the air the greater the chance that germs will be deposited on it. Bread raised with yeast is worked down or kneaded twice before being baked, and this process may take anywhere from four hours to ten. It has, then, the chance of collecting disease germs during this process of raising, and it has two periods of working down or kneading, during each of which it may gather the dirt containing the germs from the baker's hands. As no bread save that raised with yeast goes through this long process of raising and kneading, so no bread save that raised with yeast has so good a chance of gathering germs.

What is meant by "raising" bread is worth a few words. The introduction of the yeast into the moist dough and the addition of heat when the pan is placed near the fire produce an enormous growth of the yeast fungi—the yeast "germ," in other words. These fungi effect a destructive fermentation of a portion of the starchy matter of the flour—one of the most valuable nutrient elements in the flour. The fermentation produces carbonic-acid gas, and this, having its origin in every little particle of the starch which is itself everywhere in the flour, pushes aside the particles of the dough to give itself room. This is what is called raising the bread.

It needs but a glance to see that it is, in its effects on the dough, purely mechanical. The dough, which was before a close-grained mass, is now full of little holes, and when cooked in this condition is what we ordinarily call light. This porous quality of bread enables the stomach to rapidly and easily digest it, for the gastric juices quickly soak into and attack it from all sides. The fermentation of the dough, however, uses up a portion of the nutrient elements of the loaf. If it be possible, therefore, to produce a light, porous loaf without this destruction and without the "kneading" process which fills the dough with germs and filth, and without the long period during which the raising process goes on, the gain in food and the gain in the avoidance of the germs is exceedingly plain.

But while we can easily see the dangers which attend the use of yeast, it is certain that the vesiculating effect produced by it on the dough is to the last degree perfect. It is apparent that if we are to substitute any other system of bread-making we must have one which will give us, first, mechanical results equally as good—that is, that will produce minute bubbles of carbonic-acid gas throughout the mass of dough. Now, it is in no way difficult to produce carbonic-acid gas chemically, but when we are working at bread we must use such chemicals as are perfectly healthful. Fortunately these are not hard to find.

The evils which attend the yeast-made bread are obviated by the use of a properly made, pure and wholesome baking powder in lieu of yeast. Baking powders are composed of an acid and an alkali, which, if properly combined, should, when they unite, at once destroy themselves and produce carbonic-acid gas. A good baking powder does its work while the loaf is in the oven, and

But care is imperative in selecting the brand of baking powder to be certain that it is composed of non-injurious chemicals. Powders containing alum, or those which are compounded from impure ingredients, or those which are not combined in proper proportion or carefully mixed and which will leave either an acid or an alkali in the bread, must not be used.

It is well to sound a note of warning in this direction or the change from the objectionable yeast to an impure baking powder will be a case of jumping from the frying-pan into the fire.

The best baking powder made is, as shown by analyses, the "Royal." It contains absolutely nothing but cream of tartar and soda, refined to a chemical purity, which when combined under the influence of heat and moisture produce carbonic-acid gas, and having done this disappear. Its leavening strength has been found superior to other baking powders, and as far as I know it is the only powder which will raise large bread perfectly. Its use avoids the long period during which the yeast-made dough must stand in order that the starch may ferment, and there is also no kneading necessary.

The two materials used in the Royal—cream of tartar and soda—are perfectly harmless even when eaten. But they are combined in exact compensating weights, so that when chemical action begins between them they practically disappear, the substance of both having been taken up to form the carbonic acid gas. More than this, the proper method of using the powder insures the most thorough mixing with the flour. The proper quantity being taken, it is mixed with the flour and stirred around in it. The mixture is then sifted several times, and this insures that in every part of the flour there shall be a few particles of the powder. The salt and milk or water being added, the dough is made up as quickly as possible and moulded into the loaves.

These are placed in the oven and baked. But the very moment the warmth and moisture attack the mixture of cream of tartar and soda these two ingredients chemically combine and carbonic-acid or leavening gas is evolved. The consequence may be seen at a glance: the bread is raised during the time it is baking in the oven, and this is the most perfect of all conceivable methods of raising it.

Here, then, there is no chance for germs of disease to get into the dough and thence into the stomach; more than that, the bread is necessarily as sweet as possible, there having been no time during which it could sour. This involves the fact that the bread so made will keep longer, as it is less likely to be contaminated by the germs that effect the souring process.

It will be strange if the crowds of visitors to the World's Fair do not greatly increase the number of contagious disease which we will have to treat. Under these circumstances is it not folly of follies to open a single channel through which these germs may reach us? Is it not the part of wisdom to watch with the greatest care all that we eat and drink, and to see that none but the safest and best methods are employed in the preparation of our food? To me it seems as though there could be but one answer to questions like these.

I have shown the danger of using the yeast-raised bread and with this I have shown how that danger may be avoided. The ounce of prevention, which in this case is neither difficult nor expensive, is certainly worth many pounds of cure, and the best thing about it is that it may be relied on almost absolutely. Those who eat bread or biscuits or rolls made at home with Royal Baking Powder may be sure they have absolutely stopped one channel

Most worthily did she fill her position. Her aim was always the development of noble character. So highly was she appreciated by the school that at the twenty-fifth anniversary of her connection with it she was presented with an elegant gold watch, suitably engraved, which was held by her as one of the most cherished mementoes of a useful past.

Miss Ripley had been in Nebraska only about three years. During our amendment campaign, at Miss Willard's request (for she knew her sterling worth) Miss Ripley identified herself with our work, and in December of that year was appointed state lecturer for the department of scientific temperance instruction. At the next convention she was made superintendent of the department, and has worked indefatigably and most intelligently, bringing her department to a high plane of usefulness and activity. She commanded the respect of the educational officials of the state, for herself and her work, and had won the love of her associates in the work. She had a sweet, sunny disposition, a pleasant often humorous manner, and her influence was always for good.

Hundreds of young men, living useful lives to-day, will rise up and call her blessed. We might well wish, each of us, that upon our "going away" we may look back upon duties as well performed, opportunities as well improved as could she.

DISTRICT AND COUNTY CONVENTIONS.

Notwithstanding unpropitious weather, the first district held a very successful convention at Table Rock, with a large number of delegates and many visitors. Mrs. E. A. Fulton, the president, was in the chair. The first evening, Mrs. J. H. Battles, of Auburn, state superintendent of health and heredity, gave an illustrated lecture on the nature and effect of alcohol upon the human system. Mrs. C. M. Woodward, state vice-president, gave an address the second evening. The superintendent's reports were encouraging and excellent papers were read.

The fifth district held its annual convention at Hebron, Mrs. Putnam presiding. Mrs. Corey gave an address upon "Progress and Woman," and Mrs. C. E. Howe upon "Woman and Her Work." Reports from superintendents and county presidents were very full and satisfactory, and the fifth district makes a very good showing. There are 44 unions, a gain of 5; active members, 578; honorary, 78; associate, 33, — total, 661. Three hundred and seventy-eight copies of temperance periodicals are taken, mostly UNION SIGNALS and Union Workers. They report 111 churches in the district and 29 saloons; 10 L. T. L's, with a membership of 433; 19 regular departments of work; $712 raised and used during the year. The district sent as their part of the state W. C. T. U. exhibit, a silk flag, the district history printed in booklet form and illuminated with the district flower, the pansy, the pictures of their three presidents in one frame, photos of school-houses in prohibition towns, copy of Mrs. Celeste May's poems, hand-painted cover, and Mrs. Cassell's "White-Ribbon Vibrations."

The sixth district held its convention June 22–24, at Aurora. Addresses of welcome were made by Mrs. Anna Steele, president of Hamilton county, and Mrs. Dr. Williamson, of Aurora. In the response, great appreciation was expressed of the kindness of the ladies of Aurora in entertaining the convention for two consecutive years. The president's address was unusually good, and several pastors present spoke words of encouragement. Mrs. Kate B. Northup, state superintendent of Temple work, presented the subject of the Temperance Temple on the second evening, and Mrs. J. H. Battles, state superintendent of health and heredity, gave a fine illustrated lecture. A very pleasant hour was spent in a mothers' meeting, and Mrs. Jean Lamont Shuman, of Aurora, held a children's hour. Memorial services were conducted for five departed sisters. A pleasant feature of the convention was the fine music given by a quartette of gentlemen.

York county has been known for years as the county without a saloon. Last year one was started at McCool, but the union arrested the proprietor twice for selling to minors, and he was fined both times, so gave up the business. Benedict union drove their druggist out of town for selling liquor. Through a friend the necessary proof was obtained, and upon the first indictment he was fined one hundred dollars and costs. When he learned that the ladies had four more complaints against him he closed his store and flitted away.

This wide-awake county held its annual convention this spring at Waco, Mrs. Kate B. Northup, president. An address of welcome, by Mrs. Bellows, and response by Mrs. Wellman, a recitation by Miss Minnick and the president's address filled the first evening.

On Friday morning Mrs. Wellman gave a model mothers' meeting, and a paper was read by Mrs. Sheldon, subject, "Early Piety," which elicited considerable discussion. The ladies were treated to a fine address in the evening by Rev. Strickler, also a paper by the district president, Mrs. Ferguson. Miss Williams gave a recitation, and the Waco young people rendered excellent music both evenings.

Fillmore county convention was held in Grafton, June 5 and 6. Mrs. Putnam, the county president, who is past seventy years of age, was there, though she had to drive seven miles and ford a stream to reach the train. Her address was as strong and vigorous as usual. A large number of delegates were present. Exeter union reported that the saloon had gone from their town. Grafton had attempted to disband, but found it quite impossible, and have gone to work again. Other unions reported work being done. One new union has been formed.

A Y at Exeter, known as the Columbian Y, have seventeen members and four honoraries. They have sent money to the Temple and the hospital, helped the poor in their own town besides paying rent for headquarters. They have taken up eleven lines of work and meet regularly. They sent flowers to Lincoln for distribution on flower mission day in the state institutions. Altogether they are a very active young Y, and intend to become more "Y's." Mrs. May P. McKinnon is their president, an earnest worker.

A Bible-reading on social purity was an interesting feature of the convention. The question, "What has the W. C. T. U. done for you?" was discussed with much interest. All agreed it had done more for them than they could express. That they were better educated and better Christians for being members of the union. The discussion of the relation of the W. C. T. U. to the church was very good. As no one had the article from THE UNION SIGNAL with them it was decided to read it in the evening meeting, as it expressed the whole matter so well. Rev. Cressman, of Fairmont, gave a good address in the evening. Miss Ripley had been expected at the convention, and great sorrow was felt at the news of her death.

Flower mission day and the Jennie Casseday memorial day were suitably observed in the state. Mrs. Angie F. Newman, state superintendent, wrote a very impressive responsive service, which was published in the Union Worker, and would be very suitable for any memorial occasion.

The furnishings for the Nebraska room at the Temperance Hospital are coming in. The first installment of money has been sent, and we hope all may be completed very soon.

Miss Bernice Kerney is proving a very valuable worker. She gives chalk-talks, addresses mothers' meetings, parlor meetings, or public meetings. She organized seven unions and twenty L. T. L's in a recent trip, and is now away to the western part of the state.

NEW YORK NEWS.

Steuben county came to its "half yearly halt," and assembled in convention at Rathboneville in May. A lengthy report of this meeting has been sent me, from which I glean for my letter. The devotional exercises at the opening of each meeting, accompanied by Bible readings, were especially helpful, and fitted to dwell within the memory of all. Excellent papers by Mrs. Wetmore, of Cohocton, Mrs. Dr. Ingersoll, of Cornwall, and Miss M. Boyce, furnished food for thought.

An hour with the Y's was on the second day's program, and most interesting reports were heard from these auxiliaries. Two new Y's have reported since last winter—Addison and Jasper.

A paper on "Cigarette Smoking," by Mrs. Brown, of Troupsburg, was well received, and a parliamentary drill came in for its share of attention, conducted by Mrs. Carson, of Hornellsville. Memorial service for the promoted comrades was held, Miss West and Miss Casseday being remembered at this time. A gold medal contest was held in the evening of the first day, and was largely attended.

Onondaga county met in convention at Summit Station. This county is to entertain the state convention this fall, so an executive meeting was held the first morning, as this undertaking in addition to the state fair work needs much wise planning as well as labor and money to assure success. Convention opened at 1:30 p. m. with Mrs. Mary D. Ferguson, vice president, in the chair. Reports of officers were heard, the treasurer's report being the best ever made in the county, showing more money used in county work and $117 dues sent to state treasurer, the membership having more than doubled since 1891.

The president, Mrs. Wiseman, has moved to Ohio, but sent her address which was read by Mrs. Ferguson who also read an admirable paper of her own. The county banner was won by Clover Leaf union of Syracuse. Mrs. Ferguson was elected president. Nineteen superintendents reported good work and progress. Mrs. C. Blind who has charge of German work has been doing good service for four years, increasing the temperance interest among the Germans.

The Y's occupied one evening most acceptably, the address being given by Mrs. Jump of Albany. The children's hour, when three schools came together, was very inspiring. A resolution of regret was passed over the loss of Mrs. Wiseman, and many loving hearts and good wishes follow her to her new field of labor. Our state paper, Woman's Temperance Work, was earnestly recommended to all and the women urged to take it. This paper, let me add, should be in the hands of every worker in the state, and I trust that before another year rolls by, this may be an assured fact. A little effort on the part of each one and the thing is accomplished.

Franklin county held its convention at Moira and was well attended. The "White-Ribbon Hymnal" was used during the day for all exercises and added greatly to the success of the convention.

Three new unions were organized during the winter by the county president, Mrs. F. W. Winkley Three able essays were delivered on different phases of the work which were interesting and instructive.

Mrs. Mary T. Burt, our state president, was with them and presided over a workers' conference in the afternoon and delivered an address in the evening. She held the closest attention of her audience, her theme being the work of our state during the past winter. She was a help and inspiration to the women, and a hope is expressed that she shall visit them again. All agreed that this was the best day Franklin county union has ever spent.

Niagara county convention was held at Suspension Bridge in the Congregational church, and was a success in every way. Nearly one hundred officers and delegates were present and all were enthusiastic. The music was in charge of Prof. Caldwell, and right well did he fulfill his part, being always ready. The program was carried out almost to the letter, and was especially good. Several papers were read and were well received. A plea was made for our state paper and a goodly number subscribed for it. Some of our Indian brothers from the Tuscarora Reservation were with us, one of them making quite a speech. The pastors were warm in their greetings and made us feel perfectly at home, while the hospitality of the ladies was unbounded. Dr. Sarah H. Morris, of Buffalo, delivered the evening address, her subject being "Woman's Influence in Molding Public Opinion." Many little "extras" came in which did not appear on the program, one of the sweetest being the presentation of a magnificent bouquet of carnations and roses to our president, Mrs. Ruth A. Frost, from the ladies of Niagara Falls and Suspension Bridge unions. Mrs. Frost made a happy little speech in accepting the fragrant gift.

A new item on the program was a "temperance camp fire," which was in charge of the recording secretary, Miss Newbury. This proved to be both pleasant and profitable. Our Y's were out in force, and a "model Y meeting" was conducted by Miss Rose Parks, president of the Dickersonville Y. Speaking from personal knowledge, having been present both days, I can say that this meeting was one of the best ever held in this county. A brief talk on physical culture by Mrs. Williamson, secretary of Silver Lake Assembly W. C. T. U., was one of the most pleasing features, while the address of welcome by Rev. Mr. Bartholomew was one of the best things of the kind ever given us. Much of the credit for the successful carrying out of convention arrangements is due to Mrs. John Prime, chairman of entertainment committee.

It was my good fortune to attend the Erie county convention, which closely followed ours of "old Niagara," and before the time came for me to leave I felt that I had known these women for years, so closely does the little knot of ribbon unite all hearts. Miss Kate Manning, of Attica, president of Wyoming county, and Mrs. Fairchild, of Silver Creek, Chautauqua county, were also present as visitors. Miss Manning read a most excellent paper, entitled "Measuring Day"; Mrs. Fairchild also gave the ladies a treat in a paper touching on the franchise question, while your correspondent, by request, read a paper which had been given at Niagara county meeting on "The Trend of W. C. T. U. Work." Erie county believes in setting their "company" to work. A ten-minute paper on "Influence," by Mrs. Carter, of Eden, was followed by a mothers' conference, led by Mrs. Tracy, county superintendent of mothers' meetings. This conference was of general interest, the fathers as well as the mothers

Why can the CHOCOLAT MENIER be said to be the best of all the preparations, and also sold at the lowest price, quality considered?

I. MENIER raises the berry on his own Plantations in Nicaragua.

II. MENIER has his own Sugar Refineries.

III. MENIER owns the Steamers transporting the raw product to his factories in France and England.

IV. MENIER owns over 2000 Employees' Houses, the entire town of Noisiel, near Paris.

V. MENIER does his own printing; in fact, everything pertaining to the manufacture of Chocolat Menier except wood for cases, nails and foil, is produced on his own property.

Instead of depending upon a dozen different manufacturers (each looking for profit rather than purity) as most cocoa and chocolate makers have to, MENIER can and does, with one end in view—viz: the sale of Chocolat Menier by its real merit—supply the world with the finest product and in far greater quantities than any other house. taking part. Training of children, their clothing, food, etc., all came in for a share of attention. Indeed, the food discussion began to be quite serious, as some would discard tea and coffee, others all kinds of meats, another thought we should eat little or no sweets, and as dinner time was drawing near we wondered a little if anything would be left for us to eat. Our fears were groundless, however, for on repairing to the dining-room we found that while theory said one thing, fact said another, and an abundance of good things were provided. The convention was held in Eden, the home of the county president, Mrs. A. A. Shaw, which may account for such an abundance, but I'm inclined to think it is customary in this county.

The evening meeting was held in the hall, as the church would not accommodate the crowd. The local presidents made two-minute speeches, which were interspersed with music and recitations, closing with a "Gesture Drill" by Eden young ladies. Mrs. Elizabeth Marney Connor, of the Buffalo School of Oratory, was present and added greatly to the interest and pleasure by her recitations. A ten-minute talk on "Twig Bending" by Mrs. Odell, of Buffalo, given to the members of the L. T. L. at the close of their exercises, was a charming lesson on character building, which they must always remember. An address to the Y's by Mrs. Beech, the recording secretary, occupied about forty-five minutes, and was listened to with closest attention, not only by Y's, but by all present. Miss Yurann, "the faithful," was on hand, always ready with her word of counsel or warning, while Mrs. Shaw was most apt, in her own happy manner keeping the machinery well oiled and everything running smoothly. Nothing escaped her notice, and there was time for all. Several delegates were present from the Indian union, and they added their fund to the general good time, both in speech and music on cornet and violin. In fact, I cannot recount the many things which went toward making up this meeting, and can only say that never before have I attended a convention which was so "crammed full."

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

A DEMOREST silver medal contest was held in Masonville, N. Y., August 1, the medal being won by Mr. George Rutenber.

MRS. LOU COFFMAN, of Hannibal, Mo., has been appointed president of the ninth district W. C. T. U., in place of Mrs. C. P. Dobyns, resigned.

AT a Demorest silver medal contest, August 2, in Sidney, N. Y., Miss Mabel Barker was the winner. A large audience was in attendance.

MUKWONAGO, Wis., W. C. T. U. is an active worker for woman's cause. It has had a woman on the school board for nearly six years, one woman preacher for regular supply and now it has a woman for postmistress.

ON a recent Sunday, Miss Lotta G. Cheney, of Jamestown, N. Y., preached an inspiring sermon in the Baptist church at Apalachin. She has been on a successful lecture trip through the southern part of New York, speaking on temperance and woman suffrage.

THE W. C. T. U. of California, South, coöperates with the Children's Home Society of the state, in securing homes for homeless children. Mrs. Elizabeth Townsend, of Pasadena, matron of the Montclair Memorial Home for Children, has been made state superintendent.

THE Missionary News of June 9, published in Samokov, Bulgaria, contains an account of the union meetings of the Bulgarian Evangelical Society, the W. C. T. U. and the conference of churches this spring. The need of temperance work in Bulgaria was earnestly discussed at the meetings.

MISS MAY YATES, commissioner from the Vegetarian Federal Union, England, recently delivered a lecture at the Woman's Building, World's Fair, subject, "What Shall We Eat?" She has also been giving dramatic recitations at the Children's Building on "The joyous message of vegetarianism."

Two timely don'ts are sent by a friendly correspondent: Don't, in airing feather pillows or beds, allow the sun to shine on them. The heat of the sun makes rancid the oil in the feathers, fixing in them this odor so exceedingly offensive to persons with moderately sensitive olfactories. Many a restless, wretched night has been thus caused. Don't cook rhubarb stems for canning. Peel and cut as for pies or sauce, pack into glass jars, fill to the brim with pure, cold water, expelling all air, and seal tight. Keep in the cellar or some cool place a year if you wish.

DR. GOSWIN HOFFMAN, the husband of Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman, passed away at their home in Kansas City, Mo., August 4. The friends of Missouri's president, and they are legion, within and without the white-ribbon ranks, are extending warm sympathies in her great bereavement.

SINCE returning from California and New Mexico, Mrs. L. E. Bailey has been constantly engaged in North Dakota, doing good service for the W. C. T. U., L. T. L., and Prohibition party. During the warm weather her lectures have usually been given of week-day evenings in the open air, as no church or hall would hold the audiences that nightly gather.

THE women of the Little Rock, Ark., W. C. T. U. opened the Arsenal Park, July 4, by giving the Columbian Celebration. The speaking was good, and many ears unused to such things listened to temperance speeches. It is estimated that fully three thousand people visited the park that day. Eighty dollars represented the financial clearage, and the moral side cannot be measured.

IN the announcement of the ten days' camp-meeting to be held at Lithia Springs, Ill., under the care of Rev. Mr. Douthit, of Shelbyville, from August 19 to 28, are to be found the names of such valuable speakers and workers as ex-Gov. John P. St. John, Mrs. Daisy Carlock and others. The advantages of this spot, its cheapness and attractiveness, should draw a large attendance.

MR. EVART G. ROUTZAHN, secretary of the boys' work of the Y. M. C. A., Dayton, O., is active also as a Christian Endeavor worker, doing special service in the free distribution of good literature. He has issued a valuable leaflet on the subject which he will send free to all applicants, and will gladly supply addresses of worthy individuals to which good literature of all sorts may be mailed.

THE West Washington W. C. T. U. has appointed as superintendent of the department for securing homes for homeless children, Miss Jennie Steele, of Tacoma. Within the year Miss Steele has visited every part of her state in the interest of the White Shield Home with which she is officially connected and which is under the control of the state union. In this position she will be able to inaugurate the department under most favorable auspices.

THE memorial to Mrs. Emma Willard by the women of America, has taken the form of scholarships in our best schools, in imitation of Mrs. Willard's life work, she having been first to give education to girls as advanced as that of their brothers, in Middlebury, Vt., 1807. During her life of almost ninety years (1787 to 1870) she gave $75,000 in scholarships to worthy pupils. Many repaid from their earnings as teachers making her example and its benefits perpetual. The schools of to-day have begun to make offers of free tuition, or scholarships easily secured by young people of energy and ability. The list includes such well-known schools as Wheaton College, Wheaton, Ill., Soper's School of Oratory, Chicago, National Musical College, Atheneum, Lincoln Avenue Musical Conservatory, Hess Business College, St. Paul, Minn., Stryker Seminary, St. Anthony Park, St. Paul, and the Haymes Eclectic, the Shorthand College, the Central Music Hall and the Chicago Musical College, of Chicago.

MRS. A. J. WINSHIP, of Providence, R. I., who was appointed local superintendent of firemen's meetings, a year ago, has held sixty meetings and eight musical and literary entertainments, which twenty-five stations have enjoyed and appreciated. She invites the church nearest the station in which the meeting is to be held to send helpers and moral and spiritual aid is thus given these men who frequently remain at their posts twenty-one out of the twenty-four hours. Mrs. Winship has also presided over two series of thirty parlor meetings, with our prominent church ladies, commencing with eight and closing with fifty-five persons. After devotional exercises, a twenty-minute paper, pertaining to one of the W. C. T. U. lines of work, was presented; thus acquainting the ladies present who did not belong to the W. C. T. U. with the several departments. Instrumental and musical solos with readings were also introduced, thereby catering to the tastes of all present, in hope of eventually gaining sympathizers and helpers.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

CALL TO COLORADO STATE CONVENTION.

DEPARTMENT OF LITERATURE.

To Superintendents:

DEAR SISTERS:—The year is rapidly drawing to a close and reports will soon be in order. It is desirable that the fullest possible returns be made and made in ample time to enable all to forward the same to those who look for them as a basis for their own annual returns. The state reports the aggregate of local work; the national, the sum total of what has been done in the states. A limited number of blanks for reports are now in stock and can be had on call, but state superintendents are requested to ask for what they need early, giving ten days at least for filling the order, so that if the supply should fail there will be opportunity to reprint and mail them.

TAKE NOTICE.—The National superintendent asks that all state reports shall be sent to her not later than October 1st, 1893, as the National Convention meets on the sixteenth of October.

Will superintendents everywhere actively circulate the Literature Fund Card? The National superintendent needs about TWO HUNDRED DOLLARS to complete payment for free literature at the Exposition. This can easily be raised by the use of the fund card in the hands of our workers. Will you not do what you can and report returns without delay? If state superintendents will forward the percentage due the National department as soon as possible, it would be appreciated.

Dear sisters, praying for success on our efforts, let us gather up the fragments that nothing be lost, and from the heaping baskets take courage for new endeavor.

Yours for the cause,
FANNY H. RASTALL, Nat. Supt.
Chicago, Ill.

WORK AMONG MINERS.

DEAR STATE SUPERINTENDENTS:—I have sent out to every state superintendent blanks for reports. I desire that they be returned to me properly filled out by the 10th of September. It is very important that we make a full and creditable showing of our department at the National Convention, since all the world through its representatives will be there to hear it. This is a time of distress and without doubt of suffering to a large number of miners in the United States. The shutting down of the mines in the West has thrown them out of employment, and without the money obtained by their labor, they have no resource, but starvation and want stare them in the face. Dear superintendents, what can you do in this hour of need? Each superintendent will of necessity have to be left to her own plan in aiding temporarily and spiritually, according to the conditions about you. May God aid us to plan wisely and make us helpful to these men and their families in this time of trial, which may be God's opportunity.

Do not let your interest in the World's Fair or in needed recreation deter you from gathering up the material for your reports which I urge you to forward to me promptly. In accordance with a resolution passed by our board of National superintendents at our meeting in Denver, I sent to each state superintendent in the month of January a plan of work for the year with a copy of blank reports, so that you might know what would be expected of you at the end of the year. Now let us have your full report. Yours for Christ's work,

MRS. WINNIE ENGLISH,
Nat. Supt.

TO NATIONAL SUPERINTENDENTS.

At the Post-Convention meeting of the Board of Superintendents, in Denver, the following resolution was passed unanimously:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this meeting that in future the time allotted to superintendents in the annual National meeting be devoted to an outline of plans, aims, etc., of the departments, instead of a stereotyped report.

It is expected that each superintendent will have her report, a number of copies, in printed form for circulation in the Convention.

Our Library Table.

ARCHIE OF ATHABASCA, published by D. Lothrop Company, Boston, is truly a royal book for boys, and many a sister will be found who will enjoy Archie's experience as keenly as her companions of the sterner persuasion. The theme of the story is chosen from the strifes that for years raged between the rival fur companies of Canada —the Hudson Bay Company and the Northwest Fur Company. Both these great corporations for years waged bitter and relentless war that broke into frequent feud and often led to battle and bloodshed. In the above named book Mr. J. Macdonald Oxley has used this feud of the fur companies as a background for a most interesting and absorbing story which, without being sensational, is thrilling, dramatic and stimulating. Archie is the son of the big Scotch "factor" of the Northwest Fur Company at Fort Chepewyan, near to Lake Athabasca in the heart of that cold country between Hudson Bay and the Pacific. Mr. Oxley knows the land of which he writes, and is full of the spirit of effort and adventure with which his story is filled, and his young readers will pronounce this boy Archie, of ninety years ago, as every inch a hero and a good fellow besides.

WHITTIER WITH THE CHILDREN. By Margaret Sidney. Illustrated with full-page photogravure of "Whittier with the Children," and sixteen exquisite cuts from photographs and drawings made at the poet's homes of his pets and favorite retreats. Boston: D. Lothrop Company.

This is the first time that Whittier has been studied in this way; at least where the result of this study was printed. The child-side of his nature—that elusive quality that best came out in touch with children —was the very depth that loving admirers of the good New England poet failed to sound. We do not remember a single note struck in poem or prose since Whittier died, that thus rings out this beautiful friendship with children, in which he, by virtue of his childlike quality, was learner as well as teacher, and yet the royal ruler of their hearts. Margaret Sidney has sounded this note, and her exquisite study is one of the finest things in all the "Whittiana" of the day. It is purest English; with the true simplicity of a child in its directness; personal, with that delicate aroma that yields the living atmosphere, meanwhile keeping the writer in the background—a most difficult task to do, but admirably accomplished in Margaret Sidney's "Whittier with the Children," which was all written from intimate, personal friendship, and from choice family reminiscences.

THE LITTLE HEROINE OF POVERTY FLAT, by Elizabeth Maxwell Comfort, is perhaps one of the most touching stories that has reached our Library Table, and is worthy of heartiest recommendation, save for one thing. The author, whose pen is surely a gifted one, introduces into her story without deprecatory comment and quite as a matter of course, a saloon and the free use of whisky by the miners. It is the story of a snowslide on the Rocky Mountains, whereby men at work in a mine are buried with no way of escape. Little Nora, the daughter of one of the miners, is carrying her father's dinner to him, discovers the awful calamity that has happened, and through storm and cold, on her trusty Norwegian snowshoes, makes a trip of fifteen miles to carry word to the nearest camp and get help for those in need. It is a fact that in cases of exhaustion, brandy and whisky are the only remedies recognized by a large class of people, and it is also a fact that all over this fair earth the saloon is stationed and its presence in a mining camp is no matter of surprise; but it is to be regretted that one writing a story of heroism like the above—a story which will be read by children and young people—should by silence on the subject give consent to these evils against which earnest Christians are arrayed in uncompromising war. "Every man shoulder a shovel or pick and bring his whisky along. It'll be needed, every drop of it." Doubtless just such a remark would be made, but right there was the author's opportunity to arrest the thought of her readers and plant a live seed for a God-led reform. Many a child may say aloud or in thought, "I was reading a lovely story the other day and it didn't say it was wrong to use brandy," and who can tell what may grow from such sowing? Among the many prayers that are offered for the cause of temperance it will be well not to forget those who make the literature for the people, that they keep the trail of the serpent away from the printed messages they scatter.

A PHILANTHROPY FUND.

Now and then there come to us burning words of appreciation, which we reproduce that the fire may be enkindled in other hearts. The following is from the pen of a motherless girl, but fifteen years of age: "I am only a poor girl, fifteen years old. I have no mother, and I have to keep house for my papa and take care of the children. There are five children of us, the youngest seven years old, but, thank God, this is a temperance family and a Christian home, though we are very poor. I just cannot get along without my UNION SIGNAL, for I cannot attend meetings much, and it is such a blessing to me; so, if you possibly can, please continue the paper until I can get the money, and I will send it to you. The love to work for temperance so burns in my soul sometimes I can hardly stay at home. Your true temperance sister."

It is needless to say THE UNION SIGNAL will still make its weekly visits to this humble home.

We wish our more fortunate temperance workers would supply us with a "philanthropy fund" to meet just such demands as these. Who will take the initiative?

Co. G, Orphan Asylum, Milwaukee, Wis.

"The tears welled up from my heart as I read the touching letter of the young girl who is mothering her little brothers and sisters, and 'cannot get along without THE UNION SIGNAL.' Bless the dear girl! I know who would delight 'to take the initiative' in starting a 'Philanthropy Fund'—my bright little Co. G in the orphan asylum of this city (Milwaukee). The children count it a great joy to give from their limited treasury, and I think other L. T. L's in Wisconsin will gladly follow. Co. G will give $1 now; more by-and-by."

Would you grow in Wisdom's stature,
Would you learn the good and true,

NEXT TO MY BIBLE.

"I rank my UNION SIGNAL next to my Bible," writes a devoted white-ribboner from Worcester, Mass. "I want to keep them for the good things in them and for reference, but I could not be so selfish and so let them go where they may be read by others."

Do all the members of your Y union take the Oak and Ivy Leaf? Have they been asked to do so? Will you not ask them?

ATTENTION, TOTAL ABSTAINERS!

The American Temperance Life Insurance Association...

187 BROADWAY, NEW YORK CITY.

Is a Straight-Out Temperance Company, Insuring Only TOTAL ABSTAINERS.

RATES ARE LOW AND POLICIES CONTINUOUS.

Total Abstainers now in good standing in other like companies will be re-insured in the American Temperance Life Insurance Association without a re-examination, and without payment of the usual entrance or membership fee.

ABSOLUTELY NO COST FOR THE FIRST 30 DAYS.

This Association is incorporated under the stringent laws of New York, which require claims to be paid promptly and in full.

No claims, caused by use of liquors, to pay. Life policies issued.

No 10-year term policies issued by this Association, as such policies often expire just before a member dies, and the protection offered by a life policy is most needed.

You can obtain a life policy in this Association cheaper than a term policy in other companies.

A term policy is very profitable to the company issuing it, but very unprofitable to the member paying for it. This is the only regular Life Insurance Company in the country insuring only total abstainers. It is now absorbing the membership of temperance orders, and proposes to continue until it is the strongest temperance organization in the world.

This Association insures members whose ages are forty-five and upwards at a fair increase over the cost of younger members, instead of excessive rates charged by old-line companies.

John Grey brought to his home a wife
To cheer his heart and bless his life.

He built for her a cottage neat,
And furnished it throughout complete;

At least he thought so, till one day,
When half in earnest, half in play,

He asked, to aid her happiness,
If she had wish yet to express.

She answered, "Dear, with love and you,
I ought to be content, 'tis true,

Yet there is one thing else 'twill take
A perfect model home to make.

WORLD'S AND NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTIONS.

The World's W. C. T. U. will hold its second biennial meeting in the Memorial Art Palace, Lake Front Park, Chicago, Ill., beginning October 16, 1893, in connection with the World's Columbian Exposition Congresses, and the National W. C. T. U. will hold its twentieth annual convention in the same place on succeeding days. All National societies of the W. C. T. U. are entitled to send delegates to the World's Convention in the proportion of one for every one thousand members, and state societies will be represented in the National W. C. T. U. Convention by one for every five hundred members, besides the general officers.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Welcome rains have fallen in the central states.

The Northern Pacific railway is in receivers' hands.

Troops are guarding the Mohammedan mosques in Bombay.

The result of the Behring Sea arbitration tribunal was given to the public August 15.

Emperor Franz Josef I. of Austria and Hungary was sixty-three years old August 18.

Science and philosophy are the topics under discussion at the World's Fair Congresses this week.

The French elections which occurred August 20 were peacefully conducted and favorable to the Republicans.

Attorney-General Olney has decided that there can be no extension of time on revenue taxes due from whisky dealers.

Unemployed working men are holding mass-meetings in New York, during which anarchists and excited socialists have been doing their best to excite riots.

The total attendance at the Centennial Exposition was equalled August 17 when a record of over eight million people had been attained at the World's Fair gates.

A mass-meeting of unemployed workmen met on the Lake Front Park, Chicago, last week, whose resolutions and utterances were decried by respectable organized labor.

A dispute regarding wages caused a serious riot between French and Italians at Aigues-Mortes salt works in France, Friday. At least fifty people were killed and one hundred and fifty wounded.

The finance committee of the United States Senate presented a bill to that body, August 19, repealing the present Sherman purchase law, and pledging the government to the principles of bi-metallism. At the same time a minority report recommended a substitute bill providing for absolute free coinage at a ratio of twenty to one.

A report from the auditor of the World's Fair, showing the exact financial condition of the Exposition at the close of its first three months has just been published. The total expenditures have been $23,867,752.80; receipts from souvenir coins, admissions, interest and concessions, $7,641,676.48. A debt of about four millions will remain after September 1 to be liquidated before stockholders will receive any returns on their investment.

ARBITRATION has won a signal victory in the harmonious decision of the Behring Sea difficulty. "Every international arbitration renders war less probable and in the future it will be the rule, not the exception, to settle international difficulties in this way," declared the president of the tribunal, Baron De Courcel, who expressed great satisfaction at the good feeling of the arbitrators' deliberations. It seems to be the general opinion that while England has gained the technical points, the United States is practically victorious, as the decision preserves the life of the seals. But whatever the result, we rejoice to know it has been secured without war.

AN ordinance has been brought before the Chicago city council to permit music in saloons. It seems that at present this is forbidden. We confess that it is a pleasant surprise to us to know that the city council had ever taken even so much of a stand against saloons. We wish to give full credit for everything that the authorities do as against the saloon and for the home, and we earnestly hope that the council may not be moved.

DISTANCE is no object to the confidence man who makes the World's Fair his basis of operations. An Australian "fake" has been distributing circulars of a bogus employment agency among the young women of New South Wales offering them lucrative positions as waitresses in beer saloons at the Columbian Exposition, with free passage to and from Chicago. The attention of the American consul having been called to the matter, this little scheme, we are glad to state, was nipped in the bud.

THE National W. C. T. U. has issued a very handsome Columbian souvenir as a means of replenishing its treasury these hard times. It is a certificate of membership in the "Columbian Legion of Honor of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union." It has the four corners adorned with a picture of Miss Willard, the world encircled with white ribbon, the polling place of a score of years hence, and the closed saloon "for sale." It will be a truly interesting memento of this memorable year and the numbers sold will help the National which is sharing with "everybody" in the present financial distress. Apply to Miss Esther Pugh, the Temple, enclosing one dollar for each one wanted. Let every white-ribboner "set her stakes" to sell at least one, which means relief to present needs and no one to feel the pressure.

A VERY important communication appears on page 13 of this issue, namely, the call to prayer for the World's and National Conventions. Miss Greenwood has so carefully outlined the program that every local union can observe this important day intelligently and profitably. Never was prayer more essential in preparation for our Convention. The six months of steady "Congresses" and conventions have well-nigh sapped the intellectual vitality of those whose attendance and services have been constant, and the whirlpool of gayety and gain has rendered Chicago distracting to mental and spiritual endeavor. Every white-ribboner should come to the World's Fair city in October from her own trysting place of prayer and bring with her the spirit of devotion to offset the commercial turmoil which abounds.

IN reference to the universal peace appeal to the nations of the earth, it was stated at the Peace Congress in Chicago that three hundred thousand signers were secured in Denmark, and the petition presented to the king, who said he was heartily in favor of peace, but his nation was too small to take the initiative—an untenable position, as has been since proven by the leadership of Switzerland, where the appeal met with universal favor from people and government. Sweden has two hundred and thirty thousand signers. When the appeal was presented in England the House of Commons, under Mr. Gladstone's leadership and advocacy, voted unanimously for the propositions of the appeal for an international committee of arbitration. Mr. Lincoln, in America, not only favored such an international committee, but advised securing an appropriation from the government to forward the measure. General Grant also urged the prosecution of the matter. Conrad F. Holbmeyer, 3 Crosby Square, London, is the commissioner who visits court after court in Europe to secure the coöperation of crowned heads. The greatest obstacle in monarchical countries is the opposition of the aristocracy, the great supporters of war, and who, in turn, are supported by it. Crowned heads and the masses are favorable.

A CONTEMPORARY speaks of Gladstone's "abnormal activity." That the mental and physical vitality of England's "grand old man" is unusual in a man eighty-three years of age, we admit; that it is abnormal, we deny. Vigor of mind and body at four-score years ought to be (and would be if we understood and obeyed the laws of being) the rule and not the exception. We are so accustomed to associate old age with decrepitude and second childhood that we have fallen into the error of regarding these as normal conditions. Through ignorance man succumbs to forces over which, by right of his divine origin (and in a truly normal state), he might have dominion. In rare cases, like that of England's Premier, where life seems more than usually abundant and lasting, we may be certain the possessors of it have, consciously or unconsciously, been more than usually obedient to the laws of life.

THE "hard times" with their consequent suffering penetrate even into the quiet of Willard Hall, and the daily noon prayer-meetings are the haven to which many go in their trouble. The workers there realize with increasing force that beneath embarrassment and trouble is ever a tap-root of sin, and the gospel once enthroned in a human heart sorrow and suffering flee away. Very pertinent just now are the words of the psalmist: "I have been young and now am old; yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread." The actual need of His children God does supply—not all their wants and wishes. Leaning upon His strength, what the world calls sorrow is turned to blessing, and many a testimony in Willard Hall during the past weeks have corroborated the word, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness and all these things—temporal needs—shall be added unto you."

"PROHIBITION is no test of republicanism." So declares the "temperance plank" of the Iowa Republicans, who met in state convention August 16. If this utterance is that of the machine politician—of the power which holds the party lash—it merely goes to show the defects of a system of government which makes it thus possible for the few to govern the many. If, on the other hand, it truly voices the sentiment of the party as a party it is, to an unprejudiced on-looker, but further demonstration of the fall of the mighty. The once "grand old party" is indeed proving itself a frail support for those who still cling to it in grateful remembrance of past glories, of former fidelity to vital issues. Foes of the liquor traffic especially are finding out that the party of Abraham Lincoln, the party to which the Union owes its preservation, has become as a mere reed shaken by the wind. Its motto seems to be in these latter days, "Anything to win." But notwithstanding the declaration of the committee on resolutions that it "had spent four hours in deciding how best to voice the sentiment of the people of Iowa" on the prohibition question, we do not believe that the people of that state desire thus to repudiate prohibition and to put themselves on record as favoring local option. We do not believe that this action of their state convention truly represents the Republican voters; we are very sure it grossly *mis*represents the Republican mothers of Iowa. We do not regard this step of the Republican party in the Hawkeye state as a "set-back" to the cause of prohibition. Revealing as it does the true aim of party leaders, it must result in drawing the line clearer between the friends and foes of the liquor evil. Republican Prohibitionists of Iowa have now to choose this day whom they will serve, principle or party, and we believe the number is large who will unhesitatingly refuse to bow the knee to Baal, but who will follow principle even though that should mean the severing of party ties. More than ever do we realize the folly of placing dependence upon any political party which, while giving a state constitutional prohibition, is nationally under foot of the rum power.

LOVE.

BY MABEL D. SMITH.

Faith, Hope and Love—these three;
The greatest of these is Love,
For Faith and Hope will pass away
When we reach the land above.

When time becomes eternity
For Faith we'll have no need;
What now we see by Faith alone,
We then shall see indeed.

When Hope becomes reality
Then Hope will fade away,
But Love's an attribute divine
And Love must always stay.

God has no need of Faith and Hope
But even God must love.
Yes, Life is Love, and Heaven is Love
And Love is God above.

Hampden, Mass.

THE SILENT WIRES.*

I.

BY JESSIE F. O'DONNELL.

In an upper room, where hundreds of operators employed by the Consolidated Telegraph Company were steadily clicking out messages, noon had come—the hottest and weariest hour of the day. All the morning the July sun had shone fiercely through the windows and glared back into tired eyes from the shining signal keys. Only the ceaseless click of the instruments broke the silence of that great room. A sudden shrill whistle rang through the busy stillness. A young man had pushed back his chair and sprung upon a table to give that long-expected signal. The effect was startling. While one might draw a breath, his companions gazed at the slight, youthful figure drawn to a resolute height, marked the triumphant gleam of the blue, brilliant eyes and the proud uplifting of the head, and the next instant nearly two hundred men and women leaped to their feet and gave three deafening cheers, which were heard blocks away through all the noise of Broadway. There was a scramble for coats and hats, and in orderly groups the operators marched down stairs, congratulating each other as they went.

"We've got 'em this time!"

"The 19th of July, 1883, will be a cold day for the Great Consolidated!"

"All we've got to do, boys, is to stick to it."

As they poured out of the building the passers said to one another: "Ah! the battle has begun. The telegraphers are striking at last."

There were young women in the crowd, less vociferous, but quite as enthusiastic as the men, whose cheeks flushed and whose eyes sparkled as brother operators respectfully lifted hats and held out friendly hands to them, and exchanging congratulations they passed on with erect figures and springing steps. It was a glorious hour. But there were two or three young women who were of weaker fibre than the other operators of their sex. All along they had dreaded this decisive moment, had suggested deprivation, hunger and even failure, and had been quite unable to grasp the situation's grandeur. In that clear whistle, a clarion call to those whose souls were keyed up to the conflict, they heard only the peal of doom.

Among these was a girl of nineteen, a pretty, dependent creature, whose pink cheeks paled to snowdrop whiteness when she heard Karl Heiser's triumphant whistle. A slight cloud darkened the young man's face as he caught her frightened eyes, but he flashed back an inspiring glance. She tried to obey that imperious look, and rose unsteadily to her feet, but the trembling limbs failed her, and she sank half-fainting in her chair.

"Come, Hattie!" cried a young woman of twenty-five. "We need every one's courage, now, so don't let us think you are hesitating or afraid."

There was an impatient ring in her voice, but she placed the girl's hat on the fluffy brown head, helped her to her feet, and drawing the trembling arm through her own steady one, started for the door. The room was almost deserted now; chairs were pushed from their places, stools upset, and desks littered with half-sent messages, for each operator had closed his key the instant he heard the signal to "quit." About a score of men remained at work, but by far the greater number of the operators were among the strikers. Karl Heiser joined the girls at the door. He had a handful of messages caught up from the desks.

"Souvenirs of the strike!" he laughed, ignoring Hattie Starkey's paleness. "Messages that won't 'get there'! 'Sell those shares at once.' That advice is wasted; and here's a melancholy appeal: 'Tom and I were married last night. Please forgive your affectionate daughter.' Here's another: 'Will all right. Uncle leaves you $10,000'—and the Great Consolidated will leave you in suspense for awhile. What a delightful mess the company has got into!"

"But is it right, Karl," asked Hattie timidly, "to make innocent people suffer?"

"Right? Of course it isn't right; but who's to blame? Not the operators. The Great Consolidated. Who is bound to see that the public suffers no inconvenience? Why! the Great Consolidated, that all-sufficient and glorious corporation which has refused all our attempts at arbitration, but in less than a fortnight will be begging us back on our own terms.'"

They had reached the street now and were met with hearty greetings from other strikers who pressed forward to grasp Karl's hand and that of Winifred Hilton, the older of his companions.

"We knew you'd join us, Miss Hilton," said one and another, "though you are one of the best paid of the women operators."

"Yes," she answered smiling, "if the company would offer me one hundred and fifty dollars a month I'd still quit with the boys."

"I wish you had some of Miss Hilton's 'grit,' Hattie," said Karl, mentally contrasting her drooping form and downcast eyes with the strong face of Winifred Hilton, her fine, firm mouth and steady eyes.

"I can't help it Karl," sighed Hattie. "I am so afraid of our all being out of work, and I'm sick and tired enough of being poor without that."

"Hattie is nervous now," said Winifred, checking the petulant expression which rose to the man's lips. "She will be brave when she thinks it over."

"I know she will," he replied cheerily. "I'll call at seven to take you girls to the meeting. Expect to be called upon for a speech, Miss Hilton; and don't worry, Hattie, dear. I must see some of our men," and he left the girls on the outskirts of the crowd, already swollen by strikers from branch offices.

"It's all very well for you and Karl to talk," fretted Hattie. "Karl's getting seventy-five dollars a month and only himself to care for, an' you're getting sixty, and don't care much for pretty clothes; an' your sisters have steady work. But here am I with only eight dollars a week, an' a sick mother, and if father quits work, too, for they say the linemen will be ordered out, I'll have to give the little money I've saved for clothes toward our expenses."

"Well, Hattie, child," said her friend, soothingly, "it is just for a few days, and you won't lose more than five or six dollars. I know every cent counts; and a week's wages, if it comes to that, none of us can afford to lose, but we will make it up from our increased salaries, and we must all sacrifice something for the future good. Karl is paying those debts of his rascally father out of his salary, while yours, though smaller, is mostly your own; but you know he would far rather suffer himself than have you do so. But there is little danger of suffering, thank God! It isn't as if we struck in the winter, when money has to go for fires and warm clothing. Most of us have some little money ahead, and the Brotherhood stands ready to aid all who need help. Then we are reasonably sure of triumph soon. The company cannot do without us, and will be obliged to grant shorter hours and larger pay."

"I ain't half so sure of that as you are," responded the girl, fretfully, "and to strike now when I'd got most enough money for that India silk does seem too hateful!"

When Karl Heiser called that evening at the dingy little flat where his betrothed lived, he was greeted with a storm of reproaches from Mrs. Starkey, a discontented invalid, whose querulous complaints and ailments, real and fancied, kept husband and daughter in a state of continual ferment.

"I do think, Karl," she said, "you might have shown some consideration for me. You know my nerves cannot stand excitement and worriment of mind. I shall be flat on my back till this strike is over."

"You speak as if I were personally responsible for the whole trouble, Mrs. Starkey," Karl answered, laughing. "I am not the Master Workman—wish I were!—I didn't order the strike, though I approve of it; but whether I do or not, the strike would have happened just the same."

"Now, Karl, you needn't shift all the blame to some one else's shoulders. You know you are stirrin' up the men all the while with your speeches and your insinuations that we ain't fairly treated, an' your queer notions about communism, an', property, an' labor, an' capital."

"No more we ain't fairly treated," exclaimed her husband, a surly-looking man with heavy under jaw and coarse, strong lips. "Who said them air monop'lists sh'd be a-rollin' in money, an' me a-wallowin' in poverty? Strikin's too good for 'em, I say. An' the time's a-comin' when we men of the people wil' lay hold of their banks, an' their stores, an' their op'ra halls an' use 'em for the people's benefit. If I had my way now, an' they didn't come down with shorter hours an' bigger pay, we'd tear down their old wires an' burn their offices over their tight fists an' money-gettin' heads!"

"That sort of talk won't do any good, Starkey," interrupted Karl, impatiently. "We must work by moral forces alone. We must appeal to the sense of justice and humanity. I do not anticipate trouble. The company will not hold out more than a week against us. How can it? The Master Workman ordered a strike at the same hour in every office in the United States and in Canada. It has already spread over the country. The Great Consolidated cannot fill our places, and the public will not allow the inconvenience to long continue, even though the company should brave it out."

"I hope you're right," sighed Mrs. Starkey. "But I'm sure Jim an' Hattie haven't got any too much money, and I'd like to know how they're goin' to keep me in the books and medicines that I can't live without?"

Karl looked about the untidy room with its flickering oil lamp and the odor of mutton lingering from the dinner, noting the paper-covered novels and the medicine bottles on the tables and shelves and window-sills with a wild desire to pitch them all into the street below. Hattie's entrance from the bedroom turned his attention to the young girl. He rose to meet her with a thrill of pleasure at the rosy face and pretty roundness of her figure set off by a pale blue dress of some cotton fabric, a white shawl and jaunty white sailor hat. Her dress had innumerable frills and loopings and a number of cheap bangles jingled on her wrist.

"Here comes Hattie," said her father, fondly, "a sight prettier an' more stylish than lots of them monop'lists' girls, an' she a-workin' away for thirty dollars a month, It's enough to make a telegraph wire itself strike! Don't she look like a lady now?"

"She does look pretty," admitted Karl, "but I wish you'd worn something less conspicuous, Hattie. Seems to me a dark dress like those Miss Hilton wears would be in better taste for the street and such a meeting. Every man there will be looking at you," with a shadow of annoyance upon his handsome face.

"'Spose they do?" retorted Hattie with a smile of pleased vanity. "You never want any one to look at me but you, Karl. An' I guess I'll wait a while before I put on those prim, old-maid dresses Winnie Hilton wears. She's most twice as old as I am, and she dresses old enough for her grandmother!"

"Karl's jealous," said her mother. "It's the way with them all. Hattie is the picture of what I was at her age, an' her father'd have put me in a box an' kept me there if he could, not but what he's done pretty near that," with a contemptuous glance about the mean room.

"Pity I hev to be in the same box!" retorted the man but Hattie interrupted this interchange of conjugal compliments with a fretful, "Well, Karl had better let me wear my good clothes while I can. If this strike hangs on, I won't get any more."

Karl glanced from the pretty, youthful face with the discontented droop of the mouth and the frown on the arched brows to the sallow face of the mother, habitually darkened by disease and discontent, and wondered if it were really like Hattie's at nineteen, and if at forty, Hattie's would be like that of her mother. To hide his disturbance at the thought, he picked up one of Mrs. Starkey's ubiquitous novels, and, turning the pages, this quotation flashed back to him like an answer to the unspoken question: "A young man married is a young man marred."

There was a knock at the door, and he turned to greet Winifred Hilton, the book dropping from his fingers. Hattie gave a final, satisfied look at herself in the small mirror over her mother's table, pulled a curl over her forehead, tipped the white sailor a hair's-breadth to the left, and the three descended in silence to the street.

"STATISTICS show that there are fifty-one Protestant foreign missionary societies in the United States, besides more than ten individual undertakings and thirty women's boards of foreign missions, which altogether support 3,000 male and female missionaries in foreign countries besides 11,000 native workers. The total amount expended annually being $5,000,000. Similar organizations in Europe send out 6,000 workers and employ 40,000 native missionaries, devoting $7,500,000 to the cause each year. Of this 300 are in Africa, 600 in India, 600 in China, more than 100 each in Mexico, South America, Japan and other countries. In this showing America holds its own admirably, being in proportion to its age and number of inhabitants at the very fore-front of the missionary battle."

PROPORTIONAL REPRESENTATION.*

BY J. R. COMMONS.

The legislature is the weak point in democratic government. The American people have succeeded fairly well in the organization of the executive, judicial and administrative departments, but their law-making bodies are a sickening failure. This applies to all grades of legislatures, municipal, state and federal. The name alderman is now a synonym for boodler and embezzler. To become a member of a legislature in many states is well understood to be an invitation for corruption and bribes. The business interests of the country are reported to be in a gasp of agony as long as Congress is in session.

As might be expected, this distrust has shown itself in many and far-reaching constitutional changes. The powers of state and city legislatures have been clipped and trimmed and shorn until they offer no inducements to upright ambition. The powers of governors, mayors and administrative boards have been correspondingly increased. The growing popularity of the executive veto is one of the startling facts of the times. Cities have been known to turn out in mass-meetings and to illuminate the heavens with bon-fires in honor of a mayor's veto which has rescued them from outrages perpetrated by their own lawfully elected "city fathers."

The statement is often made that representative government is a failure, especially in cities. But true representative government does not exist. We have a sham representation. It gives a show of fairness. But it is crude and essentially unfair. It does not represent the people. It represents the politician. We are a law-abiding people. Yet our laws are made by a minority of the people, and by an irresponsible oligarchy more dangerous than that our fathers revolted against. The Congress which passed the McKinley bill did not represent the people. There was a Republican majority of three but according to the popular vote there should have been a Democratic majority of seven. In the succeeding Congress there was supposed to be the most momentous upheaval in the history of American politics. The Democrats had a majority of one hundred and nineteen over all. But had the people been represented this majority would have been only thirty-nine. In the present Congress the Democrats have a majority of seventy-nine, whereas they should be in a minority of twenty-eight; the People's party should have thirty-one votes instead of eight, and the Republicans one hundred and fifty instead of one hundred and twenty-nine. To call our Congress a representative body is the essence of sarcasm. The same is true of every other law-making body in the land. To mention only one state, Indiana elects thirteen congressmen. According to the popular vote they should stand seven Democrats and six Republicans. According to the gerrymander they are eleven Democrats and only two Republicans.

There is similar injustice in state and city legislatures. It is even more glaring than in the National Legislature, because in the latter there is a kind of counterpoise since a gerrymander in a Democratic state is likely to be offset by another in a Republican state. But in a state legislature it goes all one way.

I have mentioned the gerrymander. This animal is now attracting considerable attention. And he deserves it. Yet he is but a natural growth and a mere incident of the system of electing representatives in all parliamentary countries. This system, requiring a single representative elected by a majority or plurality vote, should stand for a limited territorial district. The district has no natural boundaries. It must, therefore, be artificially outlined by the legislature. The party in power does this in such a way that its own votes shall have small majorities in a large number of districts and the opposite party large majorities in a small number of districts. The gerrymander is only an incident of the district system, andone of its minor faults at that. The system itself has become obsolete.

Proportional representation is pictured as a remedy not only for the gerrymander, but also for the general collapse of legislatures. According to this reform, legislative districts are to be abolished entirely. Representatives are to be elected on a general ticket for the city, county or state, as the case may be. Finally, successful candidates are to be assigned to the several political parties in proportion to the popular vote of the parties. As a result of such reform, the gerrymander becomes inconceivable. Mathematical justice between parties is assured. But more important than all, legislative bodies would be transformed from inefficient and corrupt bands of spoilsmen into capable, upright and representative assemblies of law makers. The power of the machine, the boss and the lobby would be broken. Bribery would be rendered fruitless, and representative government would become what it has been only in name—free.

Public questions, which in the thirteenth century were only local and class, are now national questions. Mercantile law, import and export duties were determined by representatives of the cities; the tenure of land by the military tenants, ecclesiastical law by the ecclesiastical assemblies. But to-day the organic nature of every great nation has made these into national questions of vital interest to every class and section. In the United States we have lately seen citizenship and the rights of property come under federal protection, and federal control has reached out for the two most influential business interests —banking and railways. Federal interference will be much further extended when national trusts and syndicates become further consolidated.

In the earlier times there were several reasons why the district system fairly represented the electors and returned able representatives. There were no national political parties since there were no national political questions. The earliest parties were divided on territorial lines. In England the Whigs were the city party and the Tories the country party. Each representative therefore stood for a unanimous constituency. In the United States the power of political parties is the growth of the last fifty years, and especially since the civil war has it made its great advances. The peculiar feature of this development has been the supremacy of that new force in political parties, the "machine." Party organization is an essential element of party government, but the extent, perfection and detail of this organization in the United States is bewildering. It controls alike candidates and voters with an iron-like grip, and they glory in their subjection.
